SEVENTY-SECOND CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE

SATURDAY, MARCH 12, 1932

(Legislative day of Friday, March 11, 1932)

The Senate met in executive session, on the expiration of the recess, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the President of the United States.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT-APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that on March 11, 1932, the President approved and signed the following acts:

S. 2985. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Connecticut River State Bridge Commission, a statutory commission of the State of Connecticut created and existing under the provisions of Special Act. No. 496 of the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut, 1931 session, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Connecticut River; and

S. 3132. An act to extend the times for the commencement and completion of the bridge of the county of Norman and the town and village of Halstad, in said county, in the State of Minnesota, and the county of Traill and the town of Herberg, in said county, in the State of North Dakota, across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States.

As in legislative session,

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 375. An act amending the public building act approved March 4, 1931, authorizing acquisition of building sites and construction of public buildings at Hibbing, Minn., and other places;

H.R. 3703. An act granting compensation to Harriet M. MacDonald:

H.R. 6739. An act to amend the authorization contained in the act of Congress approved March 4, 1929, for the acquisition of site and construction of building in Jackson, Miss.: and

H. R. 7899. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate and to enter into an agreement regarding the south boundary of the post-office site at Plattsburg, N. Y.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst Broussard Hebert Bulkley Austin Davis Howell Bailey Bankhead Bulow Dickinson Johnson Byrnes Jones Barbour Capper Fletcher Kean Barkley Caraway Frazier Kendrick Bingham Black Carey Connally George Glass Keyes King La Follette Lewis Blaine Coolidge Hale Copeland Costigan Harrison Hatfield Borah Bratton Logan McGill Brookhart Hayden

Mr. McNARY. I announce the necessary absence of the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. Watson] on account of illness, and of the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] on official business.

Mr. McKELLAR. The junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Hull] is detained on account of illness. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. GEORGE. My colleague the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. Harris] is still detained from the Senate because of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. GLASS. I wish to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson] is absent in attendance upon the disarmament conference at Geneva.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long] is necessarily out of the city.

Mr. COOLIDGE. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] is necessarily detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. FESS. I wish to announce the necessary absence of the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. Goldsborough], the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings], the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. Townsend], and the junior Senator from California [Mr. Shortridge].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

FOREIGN LOANS

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, in pursuance of a timehonored custom, I desire to announce that on Tuesday next, March 15, if it be convenient, and if it does not interfere with any pending business, I shall endeavor to address the Senate upon the subject of our foreign loans.

REGULATIONS FOR LIGHTER SERVICE

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. I invite the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary]. Under the unanimous-consent order that was entered would it be permissible to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate on yesterday passed the bill (S. 2883) prescribing regulations for carrying on the business of lighter service for many of the ports of the United States to stationary ships or barges located offshore, and for the purpose of promoting the safety of navigation?

I was detained from the Chamber a part of the time yesterday, and unless a motion is entered now I am afraid that the time to enter it will have expired when we meet on Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would hold that the Senator will have until Monday to enter the motion.

Mr. KING. The only point is that the bill may have gone to the House in the meantime, but I would not want to violate the understanding.

Mr. McNARY. May I say to the able Senator from Utah that we are not working under a unanimous-consent agreement. Only a day or so ago I suggested that to-day would probably be a good day on which to hold an executive session to consider the nominations to the Farm Board. Last evening, before the conclusion of the session, I stated that I thought this whole day would be devoted to the consideration of the three nominations, and that there would probably be no other business transacted. It is wholly a voluntary proposition, based entirely upon the statement I made a few days ago, which happily the Senate seemed to agree was fair.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I say to my friend that I am in entire sympathy with his view and if any Senator should feel that it would be a violation of the understanding, direct or implied, I will not enter the motion. I am not doing it in my own behalf, but in behalf of another Senator who was detained from the Senate yesterday, as I was detained. I told him that I would be here and would object to the consideration of the bill to which he desired to object, and relying upon that statement, he was not here.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I do not think anyone would object to the Senator entering the motion, but this is what the Senator from Oregon said last night:

There will be considered no other nominations that are in any wise controversial, and no legislation.

It might be that some Senator might take exception, but I do not think in a case of this kind that would happen.

Mr. McNARY. I may say to the able Senator from Ohio that that was simply a flat of the Senator from Oregon; it merely expressed the voice of one individual Senator. I was expressing a hope, without having any authority upon which to base it, and I did so because I thought, in fairness to Senators, they should know what probably would be the status of business to-day.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator from Oregon acted in a very honorable way, and I will not make the motion for fear, as suggested by the Senator from Ohio, that some Senator might take exception in view of the circumstances.

Mr. FESS. I should hope the statement of the Senator from Oregon would not open up the proceedings to-day to legislative matters, because it was understood that that would not be done.

Mr. KING. I want to express my regret, however, that I was not here yesterday, because I had promised the Senator to whom I have referred, at his request, that I would object to the consideration of the bill; but if I may enter the motion on Monday, I will do so, if by that time I will not have lost the opportunity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will hold that the Senator will have until Monday to file the motion to reconsider.

Mr. KING. Very well; then I will confer with the Senator who desired objection made and ascertain what his wishes are with respect to the motion on Monday.

By unanimous consent, as in legislative session, the following business was transacted:

REPORT OF WAR FINANCE CORPORATION (IN LIQUIDATION) (H. DOC. NO. 269)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting a report on the War Finance Corporation (in liquidation) covering the period from January 1 to December 31, 1931, together with a statement of the condition of the corporation as of December 31, 1931, a statement of receipts and disbursements from January 1 to December 31, 1931, inclusive, and a statement showing the total advances made by the corporation with the amounts carried on the corporation's books as of December 31, 1931, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. SHIPSTEAD presented resolutions adopted by the City Council of Red Wing, Minn., indorsing the work of the Engineer Corps of the Army in the improvement of rivers and harbors and opposing any proposal to make that organization subordinate to any other department of the Government, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. AUSTIN presented resolutions adopted by the Baptist churches of North Danville, Montpelier, Burlington, Panton, Manchester Center, Jamaica, and Grafton, all in the State of Vermont, favoring the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols under the so-called Root formula, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BRATTON presented resolutions adopted by the south-wide meeting of the State Cotton Cooperatives, held at New Orleans, La., March 3, 4, and 5, 1932, protesting against the activities of persons seeking to hamper the effectiveness of the Federal Farm Board and the operation of the agricultural marketing act, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the Ladies' Auxiliary to Browne-Bishop Post, No. 704, Veterans of Foreign Wars, of Parsons, Kans., favoring the passage of legislation for the immediate payment of adjusted-service certificates of World War veterans (bonus), which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Walnut, Kans., praying for the maintenance of the prohibition law and its enforcement, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the congregation of the First Congregational Church of Ford; the congregation of the Christian Church of Hoxie; the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Selden; the congregation of the Mount Pleasant Baptist Church of Studley; the local chapter of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Walnut; and the Fortnightly Study Club, of White City, all in the State of Kansas, protesting against the proposed resubmission of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution to the States, and favoring the making of adequate appropriations for law enforcement and education in law observance, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. NEELY presented 55 telegrams in the nature of memorials from sundry citizens and business organizations in the State of West Virginia, remonstrating against the imposition of a Federal import tax on gasoline and oil, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

PROPOSED SALES TAX

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record and referred to the Committee on Finance an editorial which recently appeared in the West Union (W. Va.) Record, the title of which is "Fight the New Tax Bill."

There being no objection, the editorial was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FIGHT THE NEW TAX BILL

The manufacturers' sales tax will have to be paid by the consumers of the country. The manufacturers, of course, will add the tax to the price or cost of the article and the consumer will have the tax to the price.

have the tax to the price or cost of the article and the consumer will have the tax to pay.

Such a tax in addition to the income tax in time of peace is an outrage. The downtrodden taxpayers from one end of the country to the other should let Congress know at once what they think about this new tax bill.

When people everywhere are grouning beneath beaut for him.

When people everywhere are groaning beneath heavy tax burdens, it is certainly no time for Congress to put upon them this additional tax.

additional tax.

Instead of increasing taxes Congress should cut down expenses, but, of course, it is so much easier to increase taxes than to cut down expenses. It is so much easier to pass an appropriation bill than to abolish an office.

If Congress would abolish all the useless offices and commissions and bureaus and cut down Army and Navy appropriations and make a substantial reduction in the salaries of all Government officials from President down, there would be no need to increase taxes.

THE LURE OF GOLD

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I have introduced a bill for the reestablishment of the Government assay office at Deadwood, S. Dak., and in this connection present for the information of the Senate and members of the committee an editorial from the Sioux Falls Argus-Leader entitled

"The Lure of Gold," which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Mines and

There being no objection, the matter was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Sioux Falls (S. Dak.) Argus-Leader]

THE LURE OF GOLD

An editorial in the New York Sun states: "Government surveys are proceeded on the theory that rich [gold] veins of which there are now no traces may be uncovered in the Alaska fields and the Black Hills area of South Dakota."

This sounds reasonable, and South Dakota, already possessing the "most productive gold mine in the world," will not object to

Since millions of years were used in the geological processes of depositing gold ore in the Black Hills of South Dakota, it would not be surprising if man in less than 60 years of mining activity had failed to reveal some sources of the hidden treasure. The story of gold has been a fascinating tale.

Ten thousand years ago Neolithic man began gleaning flecks of the precious metal from streams of the Eastern Hemisphere, and since that time the history of gold has been a cumulative affair, reaching a climax in the recent world-wide hysteria.

All along the centuries it appears, man has had an insatiable

All along the centuries, it appears, man has had an insatiable desire for gold. Ancient Egyptian Pharaohs dispatched expeditions into the Nubian Desert and the Land of Punt to bring back cargoes of the shiny stuff.

So much did the Incas of South America love its metallic beauty that when the Spaniards first came into their land, they found the exterior of their temples decorated with it and there was even one garden in which all the flowers, trees, birds, shells, and little animals were made of gold and silver.

No doubt, man has sought gold because it is scarce. It is a generally recognized trait of human nature to want the unattainable. Just now there is only $11,500,000,000 worth of gold tainable. Just now in the entire world.

Of that amount approximately $250,000,000 has been produced by the Homestake gold mine, the world's most productive gold mine, at Lead, S. Dak., since it began operations in 1876. South Dakota gold mines in 1931 produceed $8,933,596.

Government agencies hold that the gold fields of the United gold in the next 18 years.

The New York Sun says: "By the use of a new electrolytic process developed by a Melbourne engineer it is hoped to obtain new gold from dumps scattered over abandoned gold fields in Victoria, Australia. Even Bulgaria, a country not associated with gold, is having its rush. American engineers digging in a valley near the little town of Borisovgrad with the aid of 50 laborers made discoveries that have stimulated hope. They have ordered machinery to make more extensive excavations possible."

REPORTS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COMMITTEE

Mr. BLAINE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 2775) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1869, as amended, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 421) thereon.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 361) to provide for the extension of improvements on the west side of Georgia Avenue, north of Princeton Place, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 422) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMITH:

A bill (S. 4048) for the relief of the Bank of Piedmont, Piedmont, S. C.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BLACK:

A bill (S. 4049) for the relief of John H. Day; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 4055) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to bargain, sell, quitclaim, and release to the county of Escambia, Fla., all right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to certain property situate, lying, and being in Escambia County, State of Florida, subject to an easement granted the State of Florida; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HOWELL:

A bill (S. 4056) to refund to Harold R. Keller income tax erroneously and illegally collected; to the Committee on

A bill (S. 4057) granting an increase of pension to Mary Kinne; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SCHALL:

A bill (S. 4058) to amend section 13 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, to furnish elastic currency, to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes," approved December 23, 1913; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. WAGNER:

A bill (S. 4059) to authorize the Secretary of War to prosecute work of improvement of the New York State Barge Canal, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) suspending payment of claims for tax refunds arising during the period from April 6, 1917, to July 2, 1921, and prohibiting their consideration;

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 118) providing for a 10 per cent reduction in appropriation items and totals, with certain exceptions; to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENT TO TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. ODDIE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 9699, the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 35, line 5, after the colon, insert the following: "Provided further, That in connection with the acquisition of the site for the new post office building at Reno, Nev., authorized by the act of May 29, 1928 (45 Stat. 883), the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to acquire and accept title to land comprising a part of such site, subject to easements for the maintenance, repair, and replacement of a sewer and irrigation ditch or culvert now in place and extending across the northerly side of the entire proposed post-office site adjacent to the river wall on the south side of the Truckee River."

AMENDMENT TO THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to House bill 8397, the Interior Department appropriation bill, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

WAR POLICIES COMMISSION (H. DOC. NO. 271)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs: To the Congress:

I am transmitting herewith a communication from the Secretary of War, chairman of the War Policies Commission, submitting additional documents in connection with the study made by the commission, as required by the provisions of the public resolution creating the commission.

HERBERT HOOVER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 12, 1932.

[Note.—Papers accompanied similar message to the House of Representatives.]

GOV. WILLIAM H. MURRAY, OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a most interesting editorial in the Bismarck (N. Dak.) Tribune of March 7, 1932, giving an interpretation of Gov. William H. Murray, of Oklahoma.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GOV. BILL MURRAY

Politics has surrounded "Alfalfa Bill" with a glamour of radicalism that he does not radiate. He is not spectacular. He does not rant, stride, nor fulminate. He is not blatant or jingoistic. He is rather more of a dreamer and political philosopher than a resounding crusader. Like a modern John the Baptist or twentieth century Savonarola, he is calling sinners to repentance, urging them to make straight the path and to leave the devious byways of unholy alliances.

The impression he made in Bismarck was decidedly contrary to what was generally anticipated. Those who came for a political show, to see a superdemagogue in action, setting class against class and bordering on communism or socialism, were agreeably

They saw a long, lanky southerner with a Texas drawl rise from his seat to give what proved to be anything but a radical address. His erudition and evidences of deep study of law, history, and philosophy left his hearers rather speechless. They came, many of them, out of curiosity to see another political acrobat do his stuff. They did not expect anyone dubbed "Alfalfa" to discuss the Punic wars and point to the glory that was Greece or expatiate on the grandeur that was Rome.

He extolled the Constitution with an eloquence that would have He extolled the Constitution with an eloquence that would have done credit to Chief Justice Hughes or any great constitutional lawyer. In fact, "Uncle" Joe Cannon once referred to Murray as one of America's great constitutional lawyers. Other references he made revealed Murray as a man of wide reading, and his political doctrine, while not at all times convincing, was far from radical or red. He denounced Bolshevism with the same ardor that he did Wall Street and the malefactors of great wealth.

To a good many persons he came closer to expressing their desires and ideas of government than does the average campaigner. His was a homespun philosophy, but one which was easy to understand.

It may be that we are used to more political fireworks out here than they are in Oklahoma, but the fact remains that many who expected to hear bitterness and abuse heaped upon the Republican expected to hear bitterness and abuse heaped upon the Republican President and upon his rivals for the Democratic nomination were disappointed. The references to Hoover were few and—for a campaign speech—charitable.

First there was biting irony in his reference to what one could expect from a farm boy who was born in Iowa, educated in California, and who had then spent 25 years abroad, dependent on a pay check from home. Later there was the reference to "poor old Hoover." That was about all.

It is more than possible that, as a result of Murray addresses in this State, we may see a larger vote in the Democratic primaries this year—and don't bet too much money that Murray will not win this State's delegates to the Democratic National Convention.

FORECLOSURE OF FARM MORTGAGES

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Where Family Life Is Secure," appearing in the Crosby (N. Dak.) Farmers' Press.

There being no objection, the article was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Farmers' Press, Crosby, N. Dak., February 12, 1932]

WHERE FAMILY LIFE IS SECURE By Olaf Braatelien

By Olaf Braatelien

"Where Family Life Is Secure." This heading is not our own. It is the caption of an advertisement of the 12 Federal land banks, including the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul, appearing in a late issue of the Country Gentleman.

The advertisement gives a picture of an elaborately built up farm, with an inset of the late James J. Hill, and quotes Mr. Hill as having said that "The farm is the anchor that will hold through the storms that sweep all else away." Commenting on this quotation the advertisement goes on to say: "The great 'empire builder' was right. Farm families are protected from the storms of adversity that may leave others homeless and destitute. This is especially true when the farm is soundly financed. During 14 years the 12 Federal land banks have promoted the security of farm homes. With their aid more than half a million farmers have replaced troublesome short-term mortgages with long-term 'disappearing' mortgages that eventually bring complete freedom from debt." Then follows a list of the 12 Federal land banks, including the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul.

"Where Family Life is Secure." If it were only true! Just how "secure" is the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul helping to make family life in Divide County?

family life in Divide County?

family life in Divide County?

A day or two before the meeting held last week by Divide County stockholders and borrowers of the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul, we made a check up of mortgage foreclosures had by the bank in Divide County since May 1, 1930. We went back to May 1, 1930, because we had to make a cut-off somewhere and the period since May 1, 1930, takes in the worst of the prevailing financial depression and an interim when most of our farmers were helpless to do much, if anything, toward making payments on farm-loan delinquencies. quencies.

Since May 1, 1930, 40 farmers have had their farms foreclosed in Divide County, and sold through mortgage-foreclosure sales, by the Federal land bank. This does not include current foreclosures wherein all the papers had not been recorded at the time of this check up. There are a number of new Federal land bank foreclosures now under way. These 40 farms were located in various parts of the county and ranged in size from 640 to 145 acres. They included some of the best land and improved farms in Divide County. They were sold at mortgage-foreclosure sales by the Federal land bank and bid in by the bank at an average price of $12.73 an acre. The average assessed valuation of land in Divide County is $13.52 an acre.

"Disappearing" mortgages? But disappearing by being merged in sheriff's deeds running to the bank. We read in some paper the other day that the farm-mortgage debt of North Dakota had decreased of late. The writer of that article was a "booster." This is about on par with most of the "boosting" that is being done. What he forgot to tell us was that the mortgagees had foreclosed and taken over the farms. By the same logic, if all the done. What he forgot to tell us was that the mortgagees had fore-closed and taken over the farms. By the same logic, if all the farm mortgages on North Dakota lands could be foreclosed during the next 30 days, the farm-mortgage debt of our State would be entirely wiped out. But at what price? Who wants that kind of "prosperity"? Do you want most of the people of our State to be rendered hemeless?

And just how did these Federal land bank mortgages "disappear"? To give concrete facts we shall have to mention the names of some of our friends, but please do not feel offended, friends, because we mention your names. We are writing this article, not to hurt, but to help you. We want to get the truth to the people. Anyway, your names have already been in the papers in this connection; they were published for six consecutive weeks when the bank foreclosed.

The George T. Delong farm, 480 acres, 3 miles east of Alkabo, one of the best-improved farms in Divide County, with buildings upon it built at a cost of over $10,000, was foreclosed on by the model land bank and bid in at $4,509.26, or $9.39 an acre. The upon it built at a cost of over $10,000, was foreclosed on by the Federal land bank and bid in at $4,509.26, or $9.39 an acre. The Knute J. Stokke farm, 320 acres, about 10 miles northeast of Crosby, with fair improvements, was taken by the bank through foreclosure at $4,449.99, or $13.90 an acre. Long Creek runs through a part of this farm, making it an ideal place for diversified farming, and the soil is all good. The George N. Jorgenson farm, 160 acres, about 4 miles south of Crosby, in Hawkeye Township, was sold to the bank, through foreclosure, at $2,553.33, or $15.95 an acre. The George S. Svensrud farm, 145 acres, on State Highway No. 5 between Crosby and Noonan, also foreclosed on, was bid in by the bank for $1.861.97 or $12.83 an acre.

Highway No. 5 between Crosby and Noonan, also foreclosed on, was bid in by the bank for $1,861.97, or $12.83 an acre.

The farm of John Prybyeszski, 480 acres, 2 miles east of Kermit, was foreclosed on and bid in by the bank at $861.76, or $1.79 an acre. It would seem that when the bank only had this small investment left in the land it could have carried the risk until times righted themselves, even if the man's name is hard to spell. The Thomas I. Raymo farm, in the Wildrose country, sold at $2.63 an acre; W. L. Peterson farm, in Border Township, at $9.80 an acre; Charles J. Olson farm, in the Stady country, at $9.12 an acre; Lawrence J. Regnier farm, in the Grenora country, at $9.20 an acre; Ole Bjorgen farm, in the Westby country, at $11.47 an acre; and the Lars Thompson farm, in the Colgan country, at an even $5 an acre. Farms occupied by mortgagors as their homes sold for the least, showing that the mortgagors paid as much as they could and tried their utmost to save their homes, but in vain. vain.

We grant that the Federal land bank has been getting its money for loans to the farmers through the sale of bonds in regular bond-market channels and that the bank had to make some colbond-market channels and that the bank had to make some collections and keep up its installment payments in order to keep its credit good, so the bond companies will buy its bonds in the future, but this could have been done the next couple of years without the bank pursuing the harsh collection policy it has shown toward borrowers in this drought-stricken section. These fore-closures did not bring the bank any money to pay bondholders, and if the officers of the bank had really wanted to make the bank an institution of service to the people in this drought-stricken area, people most needy and worthy of its help, they would have found a way to do so. Except in one or two cases where the parties, for one reason or another, had quit their farms, these foreclosures referred to were wholly unwarranted for reasons hereinafter given:

First. These Federal land bank loans were conservative loans when made and were made years ago, many installments had been paid on them, so that the principal sums had been greatly reduced. Note the small amounts the lands had to be sold for.

Second. Much of the money borrowed was used in building new houses, barns, etc., and to otherwise improve the lands upon which the loans were made, so that the bank's security had been bettered since the making of the loans.

Third. Under the terms of its mortgages any outlays made by the bank for taxes, insurance premiums, or otherwise, became a part of the principal sums of the mortgages and were therefore likewise secured by first-mortgage real-estate security, the best fermer-horrowers can give farmer-borrowers can give.

Fourth. Interest and taxes had been kept paid up by the bor rowers themselves until the last year or two, and even if the bank now had to pay some back taxes, insurance premiums, etc., and carry these loans over for two or three years without doing another thing toward making collections on them, but had simply added accruing delinquencies for current installments, taxes, in-surance premiums, etc., to the principal sums of these mortgages, the bank would nevertheless have been amply secured.

Fifth. Every business should be conducted with due humane consideration for those with whom the business is done. There Fifth. Every business should be conducted with due humane consideration for those with whom the business is done. There was no crop in this section last year, owing to drought, and not even enough rain to produce feed for livestock. Borrowers here had no available means to meet farm-loan delinquencies. Under the circumstances their defaults were wholly excusable. As it is, while other organizations are helping to feed and clothe our needy the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul is busy taking their homes away from them.

Sixth. The Federal Land Bank of St. Paul was created under an act of Congress known as the "Federal farm loan act," and was established and intended to serve the best interests of the four States in which it does business, and the best interests of North suing a policy of leniency toward borrowers in this droughtstricken section of our State.

The State of North Dakota does not only mean broad acres, "cattle upon a thousand hills," lignite coal mines, long lines of railroads, or any buildings in the cities of Fargo, Grand Forks, Minot, or Bismarck. North Dakota is not the Missouri River, the Bad Lands, nor Turtle Mountains. North Dakota is not something to be measured only in terms of dollars and cents. No! North Dakota is a gathering of human souls, trying out their voices against the sounding board of destiny, and we want a North Dakota where the joys and struggles of men count for more than any bureaucratic collection policy of the Federal Land Bank of any bureaucratic collection policy of the Federal Land Bank of

"Where family life is secure." Come with us, dear reader, to the farmstead on yonder hillside. That old-timer living over there is one of the pioneers of Divide County. He is one of God's noblemen. We have known him in other days. We have known him to brave the cold and blinding blizzards to help others. He was never wanting where duty and danger called.

The Federal Land Bank of St. Paul cares nothing about that, but we do. The man has always been decent, friendly, and helpful. He is the type of settler we want in our county. He and his wife came here as newlyweds. Their children were born on that farm. He has a fine family. They work together and are all willing and ready to go on with the load of the cursed mortgage of the Federal land bank if given a chance. He himself is getting old, but the boys and girls would help him. They have always worked together in cooperation and love, and have built up a splendid farm home. That home and farm has many cherished associations to them. Every nook and corner of that house has its precious memories to him and his. its precious memories to him and his.

But what is going on at the old homestead? Can't you see they are moving out? Don't you know they have been made homeless are moving out? Don't you know they have been made homeless through the ruthless business policy of a quasi-public corporation known as the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul? Visualize the gloomy picture for yourself. The farmer is packing his family into the old flivver (if that, too, has not been taken from him) and they are going down the road to nowhere. There is shedding of tears and untold agony as they break away from the old home. And where are they going? We recall the lines from Wordsworth:

"And homeless near a thousand homes, I stood, And near a thousand tables pined and wanted food.

We have information that some years ago, after the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul had first acquired a large number of farms, Land Bank of St. Paul had hist acquired a large number of farms, some of the officers of the bank organized a private land company that bought the farms from the bank at its own figures. Thus this land company was able to sell these farms again at nice profit. The losses that the farmer-borrowers took were virtually turned into profits for shysters connected with the bank. They profiteered on the misfortunes of others. Is this racket still being worked? A pussyfooter was over our county some time ago taking photographs of the best built up farm homes foreclosed on by the photographs of the best built up farm homes foreclosed on by the bank. No doubt they are going to get out some advertising matter and try to sell these farms to eastern buyers, wholly disregarding the feelings and rights of local people.

You ask, What can I do about it? Everything, friend, everything. Please do not underestimate yourself. The rank and file of the people in Divide County are just as intelligent and able as any people in the world. When you are through reading this article, please write a letter to President Hoover pleading, in your own way, the cause of these farmers. President Hoover may or may not see your letter, but one of his three secretaries will, and the letter will be turned over to the head of the land-bank system the letter will be turned over to the head of the land-bank system at Washington. You will get a letter from the White House that this has been done. Also likewise write Senators Lynn J. Frazier and Gerald P. Nye and Congressman J. H. Sinclair.

Senators Frazier and Nye and Congressman Sinclair are al-Senators Frazier and Nye and Congressman Sinclair are already somewhat conversant with the situation, and are fully in sympathy with oppressed Federal land-bank borrowers, but they need to be armed with first-hand facts so they can make the best fight possible for their constituents. Your letters may contain important points that no other person has heretofore brought out and may have in them the very appeal that will get action.

On January 23, 1932, Congress passed a bill to add $125,000,000 to the capitalization of the Federal land banks, $25,000,000 of which is set aside to be used in extending the time of mortgage payments by overburdened farmers. If all good signs do not fall, the newly formed Federal Land Bank Stockholders and Borfall, the newly formed Federal Land Bank Stockholders and Borfall.

fail, the newly formed Federal Land Bank Stockholders and Borrowers Association of Divide County is going to do its full part to see to it that this late appropriation for the Federal land banks is administered according to its spirit and intent, and so that the benefits of this new money going to the land banks will really be passed on to borrowers as it should be.

Dear readers, we appeal to you as home-loving, God-fearing American citizens! There is a patriotism of peace as well as of war. But it has no drum to beat its time, no one to command it forward. It gets no iron cross or bronze medal. But it is patriotism just the same, and of the kind that is most needed in Divide County to-day. Many of our good pioneer settlers who helped build our churches, schools, and roads, and to otherwise make Divide County a fit place in which to live, are being routed from their homes. Just because they are temporarily down in a financial way the Federal land bank is, so to speak, jumping on them. The bank is taking over their farms and at prices below them. The bank is taking over their farms and at prices below the assessed valuations of the lands. These people no longer own the roofs that shelter them and soil from which to draw their subsistence. Their interest in their communities and stability and productiveness as citizens are being undermined. stability and productiveness as citizens are being undermined. Good farm homes, with their training in religion and the better things of life, are the best factors we have for the shaping of our rural communities. Our boys and girls need them and their steadying influence. But they are being destroyed. Ruthlessness, persecution, and injustice are destroying them and they are passing. Whoever is back of this damnable foreclosure policy of the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul is an enemy to the principles of our institutions and a traitor to the best interests of humanity. #### AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "The Lord Giveth and the Lord Taketh Away," being an editorial from the Farmers' Union Herald.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> [From the Farmers' Union-Herald] "THE LORD GIVETH AND THE LORD TAKETH AWAY"

In the year 1929 the Congress of the United States with great unction voted out of the Treasury of the United States with great unction voted out of the Treasury of the United States the pitifully small sum of $500,000,000 with which to help organize the marketing of farm products and transfer the machinery of marketing from private to cooperative ownership. This was the primary purpose of the alleged gift to agriculture.

The agricultural marketing act had another purpose, namely, to stabilize prices of farm comprodities by means of huring second.

The agricultural marketing act had another purpose, namely, to stabilize prices of farm commodities by means of buying seasonal surpluses and placing these surpluses in storage pending such time as they might be sold without depression of the market. No doubt some Members of Congress thought a great and generous thing had been done, though there were Senators like BROOKHART who insisted that the sum granted agriculture should have been at least a billion and a half. (And it should have been at least that

The other day Congress (practically the same Senate) took away $35,000,000 of the amount allotted to agriculture in 1929, by voting to give away 40,000,000 bushels of wheat, which belongs to the Stabilization Corporation, said wheat to be turned over to the Red Cross for charity.

Thus Congress gave and Congress took away, but we can not add, "Blessed be the name of Congress," because the seizure by congressional action of that wheat without voting money from the Treasury to pay for it was a cowardly and despicable act. It was

Treasury to pay for it was a cowardly and despicable act. It was cowardly because this same Congress had refused to pass the La Follette-Costigan bill, providing relief for the unemployed, on the ground that it would be a "dole."

And this raises the question, "When is a dole not a dole?" It is a "dole "when the funds come directly out of the Treasury of the United States, because that might cause an increase in the income tax. It is not a "dole" when the money comes out of the fund that was retained to help the formers corrections. the fund that was voted to help the farmers organize marketing, and to help them become the owners of their own marketing machinery.

This same Congress voted $2,000,000,000 for bank relief, railroad relief, and for various distressed groups of owners of securities. Did Congress then turn around and lay its hands on this fund voted for commercial relief and say to the board of which Charlie Dawes is president, "You must spend $35,000,000 of this fund for charity"? No; Congress even placed Charlie Dawes's board beyond the pale of inquiry.

How Dawes's board distributes that $2,000,000,000 for commercial relief is to be a secret locked up in the possession of the members of the Reconstruction Board. To let Congress know how the fund is administered might, they say, embarrass a bank or an insurance company to which financial aid is given. Why this difference in attitude toward and difference in treatment of these two Federal boards by Congress?

Is it because in one case Congress is dealing with financiers, the respectable element of the population, while in the case of the Farm Board and the group which the board represents, Congress is dealing with "yokels," folks who wear overalls and dirty shoes?

is dealing with "yokels," folks who wear overalls and dirty shoes? But, perhaps you say, as did a Congressman, this stored wheat is eating itself up in storage costs. That is true, but does that provide a reason why Congress should fail to vote the funds to pay for the wheat instead of ruthlessly taking it?

And did Congress take any cotton? Destitute people may eat wheat, but they can not wear it, and bread alone is a dry diet, even to a desperately hungry person. Why pick on the wheat farmers and not include the cotton farmers? Whose brilliant idea was it to discriminate against the wheat farmers by taking $35,000,000 of their revolving fund, while leaving the cotton fund untouched? The Farm Board has relatively much more of cotton than of wheat. The wheat may be eaten and that's the end of the wheat, but the cotton could be made into blankets, clothing, sacks, etc., and given away to people who have no money of the wheat, but the cotton could be made into blankets, clothing, sacks, etc., and given away to people who have no money with which to buy, and the goods thus processed would last for a long time. But we would not excuse taking the cotton from the Farm Board without compensation.

Was Congress acting in good faith when it appropriated $500,-000,000 for agriculture, or was Congress merely trying to appease and get rid of the pestiferous farm leaders who were coming to every Congress and asking for consideration? Could not any Senator from the grain districts see that in depleting the revolving tor from the grain districts see that in depleting the revolving fund to the tune of $35,000,000 he was hamstringing the grain cocps? The Farm Board, with its revolving fund $35,000,000 short, must subtract its shortage from the allotment provided for grain. All of the grain gamblers on the boards of trade, with the exception of those who own terminal elevators in which stabiliza-tion wheat is stored, are happy. They say, "Well, the farmers can't build elevators now. We have taken away $35,000,000 and can't build elevators now. put it out of their reach."

Since this thing is done, we hope two other things will happen:
First, that the Stabilization Corporation will empty that 40,000,000 bushels of wheat from privately owned terminal elevators, and insist that it be done quickly.
Second, that every farmer in the United States who is short of feed will demand that he have his share of the 40,000,000 bushels and have it delivered to him free.

And if both of the things named above are not done, we also hope that the wheat farmers will defeat every wheat Congressman and Senator who voted to give away what normally belonged, under the terms of the marketing act, to farmers for marketing

Of all the acts of a Congress which has thus far shown itself to be dominated by big business, this gift of property, which Congress had no moral right to touch, is the crowning piece of absurdity, inconsistency, and cowardice.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting nominations of sundry officers in the Marine Corps, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

FEDERAL FARM BOARD NOMINATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Frank Evans, of Utah, to be a member of the Federal Farm Board?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Norbeck], who has been temporarily called out of the Chamber, has indicated to the chairman of the committee a number of times that he desired to be present when this nomination was called. I do not desire to take any advantage of him, and I sincerely hope we may proceed to some other nominations so that he may have an opportunity to return. I think he will be here in just a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator ask unanimous consent that the nomination be passed over temporarily?

Mr. McNARY. I ask that all three nominations for the Farm Board may be passed over temporarily.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made. The clerk will state the next nomination on the calendar.

CUSTOMS SERVICE-FRED A. BRADLEY

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Fred A. Bradley to be collector of customs at Buffalo, N. Y.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the attention of the Senator from New York to the nomination just stated.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am much obliged to the Senator from Idaho, and I ask that the nomination go over. I understood last night that it was stated that there would be nothing done to-day in the case of any other nominations except those relating to the Farm Board. May I ask the Senator from Oregon if that is the case?

Mr. McNARY. That was the statement which was made, and it was understood, from a colloquy that occurred a few days ago, that the Bradley nomination and the Jonas nomination, as to which minority views have been filed by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Schall], would not come up until a future day. It was also understood by the able Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens] that the Brown nomination would not come up until such time as would be agreeable to Senators interested.

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask now if it is understood that the nomination of the collector of customs at Buffalo, N. Y., will not come up until I have had a chance to present my views? I shall object for the present to its consideration.

Mr. McNARY. I can only state to the Senator that it will not come up to-day, nor will any other contested nomination be considered to-day.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator from New York made the same suggestion that he is now making a day or two ago, and the majority leader [Mr. Warson took the floor, and, after some discussion of the matter, agreed that the Bradley nomination should not be called up until the Senator from New York had had ample opportunity to prepare himself to present such matters as are of interest to him in connection with the nomination. I do not think, in view of that fact, that this nomination should be called again, or, if called, I think some arrangement should be entered of record respecting it. In the absence of the Senator from New York or others who are interested in it, a decision might be reached in violation of the tentative arrangement entered into by the Senator from New York and the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator, and I am sure that that is the attitude of the distinguished Senator from Oregon. I will say to the Senator that I have no desire to postpone indefinitely this matter, but it has taken a long time to go through the records which I have in my possession, some of which were obtained from the Treasury only a few days ago, but I hope within a few days to be able, when we are in executive session, to ask for a time when this nomination may be considered.

FEDERAL FARM BOARD-FRANK EVANS

Mr. NORBECK entered the Chamber.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Norbeck] is present, and I ask that we may recur to the Farm Board nominations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will report the first nomination on the Executive Calendar to the Farm Board.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Frank Evans, of Utah, to be a member of the Federal Farm Board.

ate advise and consent to the nomination?

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, the Senate is now in executive session on the question of the confirming or rejecting the nominations of three members of the Federal Farm Board. All three have appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and have given their views on the farm question. None has shown any grasp of the situation; none has any practical remedy to offer.

Two of these members are now serving on the board and | are seeking a second term upon their record. I have reference now to William F. Schilling and Sam H. Thompson. I feel they should be judged by their record. I think their record condemns them. It is not a personal matter with me. I have nothing against any of the gentlemen personally-in fact, one of them has been a friend of mine for many years.

No one realizes better than I do the futility of this protest: that was fully demonstrated when these nominations were before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. vote was taken. Republicans and Democrats alike voted to approve the nominations; that is the record of the committee. I voted alone. I felt almost as lonesome as I did when this so-called farm relief measure was approved by the Senate in June, 1929. Only three Republicans voted "no" when their names were called; they were: La Follette, Pine, and Norbeck. There were two other Republicans paired against it-McMaster and Blaine. There were a few Democrats who had the courage to vote "no," but their number was also small. Thus this plan to "relieve" the farmers went into effect with the approval of both the Republicans and Democrats. I said at the time it would "relieve' only those farmers who were appointed members of the board, and that has proven to be the case. These members draw a large salary. It has helped them.

Mr. President, at the risk of being criticized for lack of modesty, I ask that there may be printed in the RECORD an excerpt from my remarks on this farm-relief legislation at the time of its enactment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill does not propose to stabilize the domestic market as to wheat, grains, cotton, or pork. But it hints at stabilizing the world market, which is a hundred times more difficult.

I had hoped that our farmers could escape this. I felt it was not a step in the right direction but a step in the wrong direction, to urge the farmer to borrow more money and get deeper in debt. It suggests an impossible scheme of cooperative organization, the lending of money to such organization for the purpose of bucking a speculative market. But I realize that nothing can be done in a legislative way to bring about economic justice for agriculture until we have gone through with this experiment. agriculture until we have gone through with this experiment. Having started on this impossible scheme of helping the farmer by lending more money and suggesting impossible plans of cooperation by which "all the farmers shall come into one big tent," we must await the final result. We know what it is going to be, but it may take a year, or two, or three before the American public come to realize that agriculture can not prosper when compelled to buy in a highly protected American market and sell its products in the free-trade markets of the world in competition with the cheap labor and cheap land of other countries.

Mr. NORBECK. These were my views at that time. Experience has confirmed me in those conclusions. I do not have to apologize for my vote; I do not have to explain it. The record speaks for itself. But at the risk of further criticism as to my immodesty, I call attention to the fact that six years ago, when Senator Lenroot first sprung this same farm-relief scheme on Congress, I then protested that farm relief could not come from the Government appropriating money for a Government board to gamble with. I said they would lose the money and the farmers would be blamed for the loss. This is what has happened.

Mr. President, I ask that there may be printed in the RECORD some excerpts from a speech I made on June 15, 1926.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

A SQUARE DEAL FOR ALL CLASSES

Mr. President, this is merely a question of a square deal between different sections and different classes. If the American tariff policy is sound, it is because it is intended to create a better standard of living here than obtains abroad. How long can we maintain it if we deny it to 40 per cent of the people? The spirit of fairness dictates that its benefits shall be extended nation-wide under the most practicable plan that may be worked out.

I am a protectionist; I was raised one and have never wavered in the faith; but we now find that business big and business small are on stilts. We find that organized labor is on stills. We find nearly everything else on stilts. Shall these favorite classes go to the farmer and say, "You will have to live on a lower standard than the rest of us; you will have to furnish us cheap food that we may have better profits or better wages." We all know that an unfair rule can not be maintained in the long run. The wise business man is already beginning to realize that his market is adversely affected by the farm depression. The farmers may be in the minority, but an active minority is often an effective force. You ask what will happen. Several things will happen. First, the farmer will tear down the tariff structure, for he believes that he will be invited down the tariif structure, for he believes that he will be invited to participate in its rebuilding. He will not be ignored when that task comes. Perhaps he may, like Sampson of old, pull down the temple upon himself, but desperate people will do desperate things, and there is no way to stop them. Radicalism that has been expressed in recent primary elections will be mild compared to what will follow if the present inequality continues.

Mr. NORBECK. It is fair to recognize the fact that the law under which this board operates is not the best law, nor even a good law, but it is fair to observe that the board has made very poor use of the authority given them. The chairman of the board appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and said that they could not separate the surplus. He said the law did not permit the purchasing of grain. Everyone knows that the only way to have a domestic price for that produced at home is to segregate the exportable surplus and export it, but we were told they had no right to buy. The facts are they bought heavily, bought unwisely, and used poor judgment when they decided to put it in storage instead of exporting it. Could there be anything more foolish than to buy grain without any prospect of selling it? They were unwilling to export it. They knew they could not sell it at home. They paid as much as $1.25 a bushel for some of this wheat and the farmers were asked to hold for higher prices.

We find that this wheat has been down to 50 cents and less per bushel, and that the cost of storage amounts to 18 cents per bushel annually. In three years the entire value of the wheat crop will disappear and we will still have the wheat on our hands and it will be a greater threat. It will reduce the prices of crops to come. If this 25 per cent surplus had been sold abroad at current prices, we would at least have enjoyed the benefit of the tariff of 42 cents on the remainder of our wheat. That which is consumed in our own land constitutes three-fourths of the crop.

This farm relief has been a disappointment to farmers who hoped for a square deal, but it has not been a disappointment to wise politicians. Well do I remember a Senator from the Atlantic coast who said to me privately when the bill was pending, "There is nothing in this bill except a chance for the Government to lose some money, and I guess it can stand that." So he voted for the bill. That is what led me to make the remarks above referred to-that I had hoped the farmer could escape this. I was fearful that the result would be that the Government was going to lose some money and that the blame for the loss was going to be placed upon the farmer. The loss was to be proof of the impossibility of doing anything to remedy the agricultural situation. It was further believed that this large loss would convince the business world and also convince the farmer of the impossibility of a square deal for agriculture.

AMERICAN STANDARD OF LIVING

Mr. President, I ask frankly, will most of the 96 Members of this body believe, or even claim to believe, that American agriculture can survive if operating costs are to be on the American basis, and the prices of our crops are to be on the European basis? Can the farmer maintain an American standard of living and compete with the cheap labor of the world?

Experts in Washington, experts in Chicago, and experts in New York knew just what was the matter with the farm problem. They said we needed more diversification-we should milk more cows. These experts were unmindful of the fact that the American consumption of butter was almost up to our production. They complained about a little butter being shipped in from foreign lands, but there was just enough of this to make our own tariff effective and give us an American price for our butter. There was a persistent public demand and a well-organized propaganda to help the farmer out of the hole. It resulted in persuading him to milk more cows. It was easy to bring about, for it was well known that dairying was more profitable than wheat raising. But the result of the whole thing was disastrous because we soon had a slight surplus to export—a 1 per cent surplus. This little surplus put our market on a foreign basis instead of an American.

TOO MUCH BUTTER

When we had a 1 per cent surplus and exported that 1 pound out of every hundred, we found that the price we received for the pound that went to Europe determined the price on the other 99. On the pound we exported we had to pay transportation, insurance, and commission and sell it in competition with European butter. The net price became the American price for the other 99 pounds consumed at home.

The American manufacturers have long ago convinced this country that the factory which has American operating costs and pays American wages must have tariff protection. They deny to the farmer what they claim for themselves. They accuse the farmer of inefficient business methods, and then they insist he ought to be able to compete under unfair conditions which they themselves can not meet. They expect more of him than they do of their own best efficiency experts. The farmer has shown remarkable ability in surviving through hard conditions, but he can not continue to do the impossible.

THE GOLDEN AGE

The golden age of agriculture existed preceding the World War. It was in that period that the farmer got some wages for his labor and some little return on his capital. The farm slowly increased in value; it increased at an average of 30 cents per day. The 30-cent increase that the farmer received daily became his savings; this, together with compound interest, became his life savings, and in that day the farmer often found himself in his old age with an accumulated capital of ten or twelve thousand dollars. It was a simple matter of mathematics; 30 cents a day, carefully saved, with compound interest, account for it. Any other person who practices the same economy can obtain the same results. It is a favorite pastime with those who know nothing about the hardship or economy practices on the farm, to speak of the value of the farm as "unearned increment."

FARMER'S EARNINGS

It is now nearly 10 years since I inquired of the Bureau of Census as to the farmer's earnings for the pre-war period, and at that time I received a communication from the Assistant to the Director of the Census, which I ask Mr. President, may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE, Bureau of the Census, Washington, July 28, 1922.

Hon. PETER NORBECK,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.
MY DEAR SENATOR: Replying to your letter of July 27, the Bureau of the Census does not compile statistics of individual incomes.

The only general statistics of income which are published by the Government are those issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, based on reports concerning personal income tax, and these, of course, relate only to incomes large enough to be subject to the tax.

Concerning the farmers' income, in 1916 there was prepared and issued by the Office of Farm Management, Department of Agriculture, a bulletin (No. 746) on the farmers' income, by Dr. E. A. Goldenweiser. This bulletin showed that the wages of the average farmer are about $600, composed of about $200 in cash and about $400 supplied by the farm. This is the best thing I know of on that subject.

Regretting that I am unable to refer you to any more recent or complete statistics, I am,

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH A. HILL Assistant to the Director.

Mr. NORBECK. I do not intend to overemphasize the unwisdom of so many high salaries paid through the operation of the Stabilization Corporation, which is under the control of this Farm Board, but I ask, Mr. President, to have inserted here in the RECORD an excerpt from the hearings held before the Committee on Agriculture, on November 27, 1931, page 259.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Senator Gore. Do you know what Mr. Huff received-about $15,000?

Mr. Milnor. That is right; yes, sir.

Senator Gore. Do you know what his salary in his previous position was?

Mr. MILNOR. I have no idea

Senator Gore. Mr. Josh Chilton receives $32,500? Mr. Milnor. Yes, sir.

Senator Gore. What was his previous position?
Mr. Milnor. Checkerboard Elevator Co. at St. Louis.
Senator Gore. What was his salary in that position?
Mr. Milnor. I could not say what it was.
Senator Gore. Your present salary is $50,000?

Mr. MILNOR. Quite right.

Senator Gore. What was your connection prior to this connection?

Mr. Milnor. At the time I accepted this position I was president of the Sparks Milling Co., of Alton, Ill. Senator Gore. And what was your compensation?

Mr. MILNOR. I was employed for many years on a basis of salary and a bonus predicated upon the earnings. During that period of time my compensation fluctuated. The high year, I think, was $33,000. From that on down, with a minimum drawing account of $10,000. In addition to which, however, my activities were not curtailed, and I was permitted, as most business men are permitted to do, to take such business chances and opportunities as presented themselves; whereas in my present connection my duties are confined to the operations of the Grain Stabilization Corporation, the Farmer National Grain Corporation—

Senator Gore (interposing). You mean that you are free to buy and sell on the board of trade?

Mr. NORBECK. It will be noted that Mr. Milnor can not remember what his salary was before he became identified with the Farm Board. He thinks it hit the peak at $33,000. He admits it was as low as $10,000; but he certainly is getting $50,000 now.

I have reliable information that our hearing did not disclose the full facts. It was not only Mr. Milnor's high salary, but I am told several assistants-many assistants-draw salaries so large they seem ridiculous.

It may be that in the grain trade some high salaries are necessary in order to get experts, but no one has yet attempted to defend the numerous large salaries paid, nor has anyone attempted to prove that Mr. Milnor had ever been able to draw as high a salary from private business, nor has there been an attempt made to prove that his record with this organization has justified the high salary he now draws.

THE FARMER'S DEMAND

The farmer demands an American price for that part of his products which is consumed in an American market. He is not foolish enough to expect that this Government can fix the prices for that part which he sells in the world market. He has been accused of making these demands. It was not the farmer that asked that the world market be stabilized; it was the Farm Board that undertook this under the existing law.

No economist of note in the whole world has ever maintained that one country could control the prices of their commodities after they had been exported to another land. Brazil tried it on coffee. East India tried it on rubber. The miserable failure of this false political economy seems well known to everybody and seems to be understood by everybody except the American Congress, that in June, 1929, enacted a law based upon the theory that we could not control our own markets, but we could control the markets of the world.

Mr. President, I repeat, no economist of note in the whole world claims any one country can dominate the world market on a commodity in world commerce, but every economist admits that any country can control the price of a domestic commodity which is consumed in the same land in which it is produced.

We can control the price of flax raised in this country and consumed here. We can do the same with wool. We do the same with numerous manufactured products; we do it through the tariff. Other countries do some of it through other methods. Some do it by the export debenture-a bonus paid on that part of the products which is not consumed at home—the exportable surplus.

I quote from a statement submitted January 6, 1926, to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House by the then Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Hoover. The statement reads, in part, as follows:

There are at present governmentally controlled combinations in nine raw materials—Egyptian long-staple cotton, camphor, coffee, iodine, nitrate, potash, mercury, rubber, and sisal.

There are some other virtual monopolies more indirectly influenced through benevolent policies of the interested countries, rather than direct and constant trade control—such as quinine

I refer to this only as additional proof of the fact that each country can without any particular difficulty dominate its own market, its own products-yes, even agricultural

TWO CARLOADS OF WHEAT

Two carloads of wheat are produced in the Northwest. One carload is converted into bread for our own people. Another carload goes to France. In each case the farmer got 43 cents a bushel. The carload that went to France paid nearly 30 cents a bushel for cost of transportation, and then it paid more than twice 43 cents duty at the French border in order to get into France. After it had reached Paris, it was converted into bread and the bread was sold just as cheap in France as was the bread to the American consumer of the Northwest, who consumed the other carloadthe carload which did not go into world commerce.

In the hearings before the Agricultural Committee held November 25, 1931, there appeared Hon. John Simpson, president of the Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union, who testified at length (p. 159 of the hearings). I ask, Mr. President, that part of this testimony be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Every year there are a thousand places in the United States where to have the surplus of the year before on the farm would be salvation. And to have a price for what the home folks use that would be in line with what the consumer pays would make the farmer prosperous. A consumer pays 8 cents a loaf for a pound loaf of bread, and that is probably not as high as the average price even to-day. Every time wheat reaches 60 cents a bushel that is 1 cent a pound. And a pound of good wheat makes a full pound loaf of bread, or a little more. But you can roughly say that a pound of wheat makes a pound loaf of bread. Then all you have to do to know what the farmer is getting out of the loaf of bread that the consumer is paying 8 cents a pound loaf for is to find what the price of wheat is a bushel; if it is 60 cents a bushel then he gets a penny of the 8 cents; if it is 30 cents a bushel the farmer is getting a half a cent. In the 1931 crop of wheat the farmers of the Nation will not average over 30 cents a bushel, thus getting one-half cent out of the price of a pound loaf of bread.

In France the farmers are getting 3 cents out of the 4 cents a Every year there are a thousand places in the United States

In France the farmers are getting 3 cents out of the 4 cents a loaf brings, and all others get 1 penny of the 4. If you put wheat up to $2 Chicago basis the farmer would be getting about 3 cents of the 8 cents the loaf sells for.

Senator Norris. Mr. Simpson, will it disturb you if I interrupt you right at that point?

Mr. Simpson. That is all right.

Mr. Simpson. That is all right.
Senator Norris. I will wait if it will.
Mr. Simpson. No; that is all right, Senator.
Senator Norris. I am very much interested in what you say about bread and wheat in France, which you have referred to before, where bread is less and wheat is more in price than here. Now, I would like to get your idea as to what can be done, if anything, to remedy the situation. In other words, between the producer and the ultimate consumer there is apparently a gulf in our country that does not exist to the same extent in France. Somebody is getting something between the producer and the consumer in your illustration in America that he does not get in France.

Mr. NORBECK. There are many who tell us that the farmer has the pleasure of country life and should not expect as large a wage as others. He has always been willing to work for a low wage, but he rightly feels his labor entitles him to shelter for himself and his family, as well as food and clothing. Like every other good citizen, he wants to educate his children and the income must be sufficient for that purpose. He must also lay by a little something for old age, or become a burden upon society. Government clerks not only get a good living; they get retirement pay or pensions. There are in the land to-day thousands of farmers who have no other prospect for old age but the poorhouse and that is where they will go unless there is an improvement in the agricultural situation.

Mr. President, we hear a great deal about the agricultural surplus, especially of wheat. The word needs a definition. In using the word, some people mean one thing and some an-To those who feel it means the result of an increased per capita production, I say you are wrong and the record proves you are wrong. We have not increased the per capita production of wheat for 30 years. We are producing less, not more. There has been a rather steady decline. But those who desire to argue, call attention to the fact that we eat less wheat than formerly; this is true. But we have in mind the surplus which, in this case, really means that which we do not consume in the United States of America: or, in other words, that part which is exported to foreign lands; and in consulting the record we learn some astonishing fact—and that is we have not of late years increased our exportable surplus. We consume less per capita, but our population has increased. It has increased more rapidly than our wheat production; therefore, we do not have anything additional to export. All this talk about our surplus is two-thirds fake. Other countries have increased their surplus supply of wheat, but we have not.

George Washington exported wheat. We have exported wheat ever since. England and other European countries have needed our wheat to keep them from starvation. Our Northwestern States were settled and built up largely on wheat production. The commerce in wheat between Europe and this country has been profitable to both sides of the Atlantic. It has been a blessing to two continents. Now it is spoken of as one of the economic sins. Since when did it become a sin? What made it a sin? Yes; propaganda will do most anything. It will even mislead intelligent

To substantiate the statements I have just made, I ask that there may be printed in the RECORD the official information furnished by our own Government as carried in the 1931 Agricultural Yearbook.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NORBECK. And again, we are told that if we increase the price, we increase the acreage. I happen to know that a decrease in the price has increased the acreage. The farmer has made a desperate attempt to maintain some earning to meet his expense. He has farmed additional land whenever possible. He has robbed the soil; he has not been able to maintain its fertility. He has been compelled to rob Peter to pay Paul. But do not tell me the farmer prefers the 16-hour day to the 8-hour day; he simply works 16 hours because he has to. Give him a more reasonable wage and he will automatically shorten his hours of labor. Instead of increasing his production, he will decrease it.

We do not need argument to prove the truth of the above. We have the record—the remarkable record of our wheat production for a number of years. The large production has been due to favorable weather and not to favorable prices. I ask, Mr. President, that the wheat production, as shown from the 1931 Agricultural Yearbook, may be printed in the Record.

Mr. NORBECK. The farmer has been told he must put his farm on a business basis, same as the great captains of industry, who were so proud and so famous a few years ago that the whole Nation stood in awe of what they said. Now they are hanging around the Capital begging the Government to go into business to save their fortunes. We are asked to lend money for this undertaking and for that to prevent a greater disaster—a real collapse of the American financial structure, which we are told will bring ruin into every section of our land. The mighty have fallen!

"FAMOUS CAMPBELL"

For years and years we have been reading about the great success of one farm that was managed like a great factory or great banking house. Campbell, of Montana, was the ideal of the business men who were giving advice to the farmers. He was a sort of King Arthur to the farm boy, who hoped that he also might some day do the same great things that the American press had been telling us Campbell did in Montana. Campbell not only farmed thousands of acres and raised millions of bushels of wheat, but his opinions were highly valued, his advice was sought. He was used as a club to curb every plea of the farmer for a square deal. We were told to look to Campbell.

WHERE IS CAMPBELL NOW?

Campbell entered the wheat business in Montana during the war. When the Government encouraged the production of wheat, large tracts of fertile Indian lands were rented to him on a one-tenth share. There was no capital investment, there was no interest to pay, there were no taxes to bear. He did not have to maintain the fertility of the soil. He was permitted to rob the soil all he pleased; he was mining, not farming. He had been financed to the extent of a million dollars by one of the largest banking houses in the land. He paid cash for what he bought and, therefore, bought cheaply. But he had to sell his wheat in the same market as others—and that was the tragedy. He concealed this until the million dollars was lost.

A very wealthy man, who was one of the stockholders in this enterprise, told me the Campbell farm was the only investment he had gone into that had lost him more than 100 per cent. The million dollars were lost, and the partners in the enterprise raised $150,000 more to pay up Campbell's debts. Campbell has gone to Russia to show the soviets how to raise wheat cheaply with slave labor. The captains of industry have lost their alibi when they talk about farming, and the farm boy has lost his hero—the modern King Arthur—and, incidentally, Wall Street lost their milliondollar investment, plus $150,000—farming in Montana!

WHAT IS THE MATTER WITH AGRICULTURE?

The turning point in agriculture came in 1916 with the high-wage period. This in turn brought high commodity prices, higher salaries, higher cost of living, higher taxes. The school-teacher had to be placed on the same basis as others, and in turn school taxes increased, and so all other lines. But no one suffered from the high production cost or high taxes as long as there was a market for the goods. The factory passed the added cost along to the wholesale house, the wholesale house passed it along to the retail merchant, and it was passed on to the consumer. If the consumer had an increased salary, he did not object. If the consumer happened to be a farmer, he was all right as long as he was able to get a high price for his goods; the war made that possible for a while. The farmer did not object to $60 lumber as long as he got 12 or 15 cents for his hogs. He did not object to high-priced coal or high-priced clothing as long as he got proportionate returns for his labor. He did not even object to the increased freight rate, because the price of what he sold was equal to the burden he had to bear. But his pleasant dream was of short duration; he passed from the dream into a nightmare, which has remained with him ever since. Gradually he saw the purchasing power of his commodities going down and down. The business world said he should not complain about the first drop, which was only 10 per cent—and still hardly any business in this country has a 10 per cent profit on its turnover except a monopoly. A factory can not stand a 10 per cent cut without reducing its operating costs. Ten per cent is the margin on which everything turns.

An old banker told me once that if our deposits shrink 10 per cent, we are in trouble; if they increase 10 per cent, we do not know what to do with the money. Still, the farmer was told not to complain about the 10 per cent. The farmer preferred to say nothing about the 10 per cent.

It is amazing how many people believe that, notwithstanding the underlying causes were fundamental, they think the thing would somehow right itself. The farmer drove along with courage and kept a stiff upper lip. He believed a change would come, but for a dozen years it has continued to get worse.

Mr. President, I ask that there may be printed in the RECORD a table prepared from the Government statistics.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NORBECK. From this table it will be seen that in the years 1913 and 1914 the exchange value of the farmer's dollar was at par, par being 100.

In 1913 it was 99.

In 1914 it was 101, and so forth.

It was up during the war, striking the high point of 118 for one single year. I point to the remarkable fact that while the farmer was prosperous during the war, it was due to the fact that he had just a little advantage for a period of three years—an advantage equal to 11 per cent for each of the three years—and that made real prosperity on the farm.

Of course, we realize that the average figures will not be entirely accurate as applied to any one section of the country. I find, for instance, that the grain farmer took more than the average loss, and that the fruit farmer had greater fluctuations. Meat products held up better. Cotton enjoyed many years of great prosperity, entirely out of proportion to any other class, but finally suffered a real collapse and was as he got proportionate returns for his labor. He did not | all the more injured because it had for 10 years enjoyed a even object to the increased freight rate, because the price | high level.

But, Mr. President, let me go back to the table dealing with the purchasing power of the average farmer dollar. We find in 1931 it had reached as low as 62 per cent. On January 1, 1932, it was 52 per cent. A month later it was 50 per cent.

I am still being asked the question, What do I mean by purchasing power of the farmer's dollar? What do I mean by exchange value?

I mean that if it takes 2 bushels of wheat to buy what 1 bushel of wheat formerly did, that the purchasing power is down 50 per cent. I mean that if it takes 4 bushels of wheat to buy what formerly could be bought for 1 bushel of wheat, then the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar is down to 25 per cent. I hope this is clear. Last summer a farmer told me it took a bushel of rye to get three oranges, and 2 bushels of wheat to buy a pair of cotton hose for his wife. If prices on other commodities and other labor and other service were down in the same proportion, the farmer's dollar would still be up to par and equal to its former exchange value. But we must not forget it would not be equal to its former power to pay off debts. Therefore, it is important that we have stability of values; if we do not, the mortgage is liable to grow out of proportion to its original size.

The low exchange value is not only due to the fall in the farm commodities, but it is due to the fact that the output of the factory has held up in price. Textiles were at 104 in 1926, 115 in 1929, and 89 in January, 1932. Ford products were 97 in 1926 and are 89 in 1932, a fall of 8 per cent in six years. Tobacco was 112 in 1926 and 121 in January, 1932. But, generally speaking, industrial products held up pretty well until a couple of years ago, and commodities that are controlled by monopolies are still maintaining their prices. The Eastman Co. still fixes the price of the kodak, and the International Harvester Co. fixes the price on machinery. Taxes do not reflect any material change, and the freight rate is the highest ever known in the history of railroads.

GROSS INCOME

We have those who still insist the gross income of the farm is the measure of everything. They try to forget about the reduced exchange value of the commodities. They prefer to talk about the gross dollar income. But as to those people, we can say we are ready to meet them on their own plane. From the records of the statistical and historical research division, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, we find 22 crops, that in 1920 had a gross value of eight and onehalf billion dollars, gradually kept going down until they were down to less than $5,000,000,000 in 1930, or a falling off of nearly 40 per cent. But the big drop came in 1931. However, I prefer to take the statistics on the gross income of all the crops and all the livestock in the United States. The value was nearly $13,000,000,000 in 1920; five years later the gross returns were a billion dollars less, or a little less than $12,000,000,000.

In 1930 it was down to nearly $9,000,000,000.

In 1931 it was below $7,000,000,000.

In other words, figuring the dollar value of the reduced gross income of the American farm from 1920 to 1931, it was $5,991,000,000, or a reduced income of $1,000 annually for each farmer in the United States. We are talking now about dollar value only, whereas we should figure in exchange value; and when the exchange value is now 50 per cent, his gross income has fallen off a great deal more. I am not talking about profits; there are no profits. The profits were small even before the war; they have long since vanished

SOUTH DAKOTA

My home State of South Dakota has felt the full brunt of this, and there have been various efforts to lay it to other causes—causes more general in their nature, causes that were unavoidable. We are told it is due to foreign conditions. We are told it is due to the low price of silver. We are told it is due to the busted boom on Wall Street in 1929, and I admit all these were contributing factors; but they were only contributing, and came later.

Division of statistical and historical research.

The agricultural depression was with us in the years of great industrial prosperity—in the years of national prosperity, if you please. It was doing its destructive work before its effect was apparent in the industrial and financial centers.

THE $10,000 LOSS

In speaking of the farm problem in South Dakota, I prefer to use the years of national prosperity, before additional contributing causes made their work felt. I prefer to use only official figures. Everyone knows that the earnings or losses on the farm are reflected in land values. I find that comparing the total value of farm lands of 1920 with 1925, the shrinkage in the value of farm lands in South Dakota was a billion dollars—just think of it—a thousand million dollars, or more than $10,000 for every farmer within the borders of our splendid State.

Those who dislike to think about the real cause of the agricultural deflation often divert us with their assertion that bank failures are the cause of it. We know now that bank failures followed agricultural deflation. They were the result, not the cause. The causes were found in the high operating costs, the high cost of production and transportation. Bank failures may lose South Dakota people a total of over $30,000,000, but the increased transportation charges for freight and passengers amount to over $10,000,000 per year—about one hundred and twenty million since the deflation started—and this is not one of the large items, though it is large when compared to the loss from bank failures. It is the agricultural depression that is large. It was this unforeseen force that depleted the farmer's resources, curtailed the sale of the merchant, making collections impossible and bankruptcies frequent. It brought devastation to the best State in the Union.

MORE ABOUT EXCHANGE VALUE

Mr. President, I ask that the following table, carefully prepared from official records, with the explanation following, be printed in the RECORD.

Amounts of specified farm products required to buy different items of farm equipment and machinery in 1910-1914 and in June, 193.

Since June, 1931, prices of farm products have declined further, while prices of farm machinery probably have declined much less; hence the disparity now is even greater than in June, 1931. To what extent the relatively high price of farm machinery now, as compared with pre-war prices, is due to improved quality of machines is problematical. Another factor which may lead to some complications in comparing present prices of any particular piece of machinery with pre-war prices is that in the earlier years items of farm machinery were much less accurately described.

Mr. NORBECK. Extreme cases are not used in this table. The figures impress us very forcibly, for they show that before the war 91 bushels of wheat would buy a wagon, now it takes 246; 77 bushels of corn would buy a mower, now it takes 150; 18 bushels of corn would buy a harrow, and now it takes 60 bushels. The hoe that could be bought with 4 pounds of cotton now requires 13 pounds.

MORE ADVICE, LESS PRICE

The Farm Board has a remedy all its own. They are going to do it by advice to the farmer, and the plan is to change the products of the farm. It is as poorly thought out as was the advice to the farmer a few years ago "to milk more cows." They have now been advising us to reduce our wheat acreage, because 25 per cent of our wheat is an exportable surplus. They ignore the fact that our wheat comes in two classes—hard wheat and soft wheat. Good flour requires hard wheat. The mills that grind soft wheat mix it with hard.

We have no surplus of hard wheat. We do have an exportable surplus of soft wheat; but the advice that went out to the farmer was the same to both sections. What would have been the result? There would have been many results. The first one would have been a shortage of hard wheat, and I presume we would have been buying that from Canada.

The next result would have been one of two things—either some idle farm land or a greater production of other crops. Every farmer knows that when you reduce the wheat acreage, you increase the corn acreage—you increase the production of meats.

We have always had an exportable surplus of wheat; we have sold it on the basis of the foreign market. The prices of cattle, hogs, and sheep have held up pretty well until just lately. We have had an American price for our meat products because we have not had an exportable surplus of same. We do export a little pork, but we import sufficient other meats to balance. This shows why, in every table of comparative farm prices, livestock has held up better than grains.

It seems futile to reduce the wheat acreage; but even if it could be done, the result would be disastrous. The very publicity given our program for wheat reduction has led to increased acreage in other countries, which send their surplus wheat to Liverpool, as we do.

My view is we can not afford to reduce our wheat acreage, because the penalty is, we will increase our production of meats to the disastrous point where we break the market on same.

I ask, Mr. President, that a table prepared from the official record, showing a comparative value of meat and wheat, be printed in the Record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Gross income from wheat, meat, and meat animals during specified years

Year	Income from wheat	Income from meat and meat animals
1924	$925, 000, 000	$2, 380, 000, 000
1928	765, 000, 000	2, 727, 000, 000
1930	401, 000, 000	2, 455, 000, 000

Mr. NORBECK. It will be noted that in 1930 the income from meats and meat animals was six times as large as that of our wheat. Meat production has been the mainstay of the farmers of the Northwest. We must not put it in jeopardy, even to comply with a newfangled scheme of the Federal Farm Board.

The board have shown their incompetency in marketing. They have shown their incompetency in giving advice.

They have failed to comply with the law that requires them to give to the country their program for the future. They have almost quit functioning. They are now doing only three things:

- (1) Lending a little money to cooperatives.
- (2) Spending their appropriation by paying storage on wheat which can neither be sold nor consumed in the United States

(3) They are drawing their salaries—and good salaries, | too. Upon this record they seek reappointment, and this Senate is going to confirm their nominations.

COOPERATIVE MARKETING

Those who tell us that cooperative marketing is a solution to the present agricultural situation forget that cooperative marketing in the Northwest reached its high efficiency 10, 20, or 30 years ago. The savings effected by the cooperative grain elevators were substantial. Many livestock-shipping associations proved to be of advantage.

The testimony before the Agricultural Committee of the Senate showed the marketing successful; shipping associations effected a saving to the farmer of about 30 cents a head. Suppose that efficiency could be increased by 10 per cent-then there would be 3 cents additional per head. No one has ever indicated that anything very substantial could be accomplished. They speak in generalities and hope we will forget.

THE REMEDY-A BETTER PRICE

The major remedy is only one-a better price for our products. Additional help may be found in reducing the expenses and some reduction of taxes. It would be helpful indeed if our freight rates could be reduced, and even more helpful if our interest rates could be reduced; but all of them taken together are small in their total value compared to a better price for farm products, a fair exchange value for the commodity, in order that the labor of the farm may bring the same returns as the labor in the factory, in trades, in transportation, or in the Government service.

Wages would not seem too high if the farmer received a fair price for his products. Taxes would not be so oppressive, there would not be default in the interest or in the principal of the farm loan.

This is my twelfth year in Washington and important farm relief measures have been pending before every Congress. We actually succeeded at one time in getting legislation through both Houses, only to have it vetoed by the President. I have reference now to the McNary-Haugen bill.

The best thinkers of the land have been wrestling with the problem. The farmer also has been thinking hard and talking the matter over. It is plain now that there is no magic solution to it. There is really no hope that it will right itself, except by a long and destructive process which will involve the whole land. We are told we had land inflation. Our land doubled in value; so did every commodity and every property, in the city, as well as in the country. Why criticize the farmer alone? The industrial and financial world seemed to take delight in the falling prices of farm commodities and land values. They believed they would get the benefit of this depreciation. They did not believe that it could affect their prosperity or their wellbeing, but the purchasing power of the farm soon decreased. Big business thought it was immune from the immutable laws of nature. The farmer continued to keep up his purchases fairly well by drawing on his savings-the wealth he had accumulated through many years of rigid economy. The fact that the sales to the farmers did not fall off materially for several years was pointed to as proof of the fact that there was no relation between agricultural prosperity and national well-being. But the trouble has now reached the industrial and financial centers. The advice of the financial experts has proven so poor that no one will listen to their voice. Every forecast that has come from self-appointed leaders, business and financial, for several years has carried less wisdom and more nonsense than that of any other group. The farmer and the laboring man were more nearly right in their analysis of the situation and their forecast of the future. The white collar has gone to discount and the overalls have come to the fore.

Debts have overwhelmed us; and I am not putting the emphasis on what Europe owes us, though this amount keeps increasing from year to year. When the war closed they owed us $7,077,114,750. Additional credit was extended afterwards-more and more. The repayments have been so small that Europe owes us to-day nearly three times what they did on Armistice Day, or nearly $20,000,000,000—over $500 for every family in our land. We will have to forget about much of it. Under the settlements made, payments were to cover 62 years—and the payments are not being made, though one country, namely, England, has been making some substantial payments.

We must not expect much from Europe in our day. What they owe us can not be used by us to pay our debts.

The outstanding thing in the land to-day is that the income from the farm will not pay the mortgage. There will have to be a change.

If the law of supply and demand had not been interfered with, and the purchasing power of the farmer destroyed, then the mortgages could have been paid. Now they will have to compromise. There are many ways of doing this, but the most satisfactory way will probably be some inflation of the currency to make money less dear. It is ridiculous that it shall take two to four times as many bushels of grain or pounds of meat to pay a mortgage as when it was given.

Unless there is a refinancing of farm mortgages at a very low rate of interest there will have to be adjustments, reductions, or compromises. The creditors will find out they can not get blood out of a turnip. Our people want to pay, but they have been given no opportunity to pay.

In closing, I want to read a poem, A Farmer's Soliloquy, by J. S. Opland, of Beresford, S. Dak., which shows a thoughtful consideration of the situation and a hope that there may be a way out.

A FARMER'S SOLILOQUY

Upon retrospection do I find, through no choice of mine, Perhaps I am selfish, dumb, but not deaf;
I have eyes with which to see.

Yet with my fellow man I can't always agree.

And fate has so destined that it ever so shall be. I am to the manor born—to toil from early morn 'till late at night.

I am supposed to be content with what I get,

I am supposed to be content with what I gov,

Be it this or that, and never, never fret.

I like good things to eat, good clothes to wear,

And to go riding here and there with my good old flivver mare.

Why not? Yes; why not?

Others do. Why not I? Why not?

Should I foreswear life's thrills and joys because of humble birth and a servant of the soil?

Must I recoil? Some say I have no right to play the game of chance whereby my efforts to enhance;

Yet all others play the game by day and night.
My lot in life, it seems to me, is toil—
To toil that others may enjoy the spoil.
I may not know the frills and furbelows and latest rules of golf, bridge, or etiquette,

Yet I am human in my thoughts and wants and generous to a

I love my wife, my children, home, and church, and my good old U. S. A., and I assure you I can naught but stay As the world would not long endure without me although it often flouts me.

I now find myself with kith and kin within a deep depression pinned, for which they say I am myself to blame.

I am sore at heart and ill at ease,

I need relief from vultures, vampires, and banker's greed.

I have no envy in my heart toward any man or clan, I have no ax to grind,

No fault to find with nature's guiding hand, you understand. Why should I, a tiller of the soil, not be worthy of my hire, and a just return acquire

For work well done? You may call me what you will, but I am a farmer still.

Trust me, doubt me, as you please, but still I am hoping, trusting, striving to appease

My fellow comrade on our journey to the promised land "O'

Better Days."

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, it is indeed timely and proper that the able Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] should discuss the economic conditions confronting the farmer throughout the country to-day.

The report of the Department of Agriculture for last January indicates that for the goods the farmer buys he was paying $1.21 that could have been purchased for $1 during the period from 1909 to 1914. On the other hand, he was receiving for his products during that month but 63 cents for which he received $1 during the 1909-1914 period. What is the meaning of the ratio of these index numbers? The ratio means that the farmer during last January had to deliver approximately two wagonloads of his products to buy what one wagonload would have bought, as an average, during the period from 1909 to 1914.

Thus far during this session of Congress we have been largely considering and legislating for the economic welfare of the country. However, no distinct and positive step has been taken to reestablish for the farmer even that economic equality which existed from 1909 to 1914.

The rural population of the country constitutes 44 per cent of the whole and the economic fortunes of the ruralites, outside of the farmers and their dependents, necessarily follow and conform to the economic fortunes of the farmers. Therefore it may properly be said that inasmuch as it has required two wagonloads of the farmer's products to purchase what one wagonload would have purchased during the 1909–1914 period, that the buying power of 44 per cent of the people of this country has been reduced one-half, a sufficient cause to account for the depression which has overtaken the Nation.

Whereas 44 per cent of the people of the United States have had their purchasing power reduced one-half, so far as arithmetic is concerned, we know that that which has been wiped out includes practically all profit, so that as a practical matter the purchasing power of this large proportion of our people has been decreased not merely 50 per cent but more than 50 per cent. Restore this purchasing power and the depression will be ended.

Two years ago we brought into being the Federal Farm Board. The majority of those who represent the agricultural districts of the West who had given most careful study to the subject matter of farm relief, realized—and many so expressed themselves on the floor of the Senate—that the measure contained little possibility for relief for the farmer.

What was the purpose of Congress in enacting that measure? What were we trying to do for the farmer? We were trying to afford him economic equality. What would have been economic equality at that time? It would have been necessary to increase the farmer's income 33 per cent.

I called upon the chairman of the Federal Farm Board shortly after its organization and asked him, "How much must we increase the farmer's income to afford economic equality?"

"That depends upon circumstances," he answered.

"I am talking about present circumstances," was my reply.

As he shrugged his shoulder again, I asked, "Would it not be necessary to increase his annual income $4,000,000,000?" He answered, "I presume so."

Analyze the Federal Farm Board act. What did it create? What is the Federal Farm Board? It is merely a finance corporation for the agricultural industry and practically nothing more. Not a power was granted in the act that the farmers could not have exercised through a similar corporation organized by themselves—not a power. No extra governmental authority was granted the board. All we did, besides creating the organization and providing for the payment of its expenses, was to afford it $500,000,000 to use as a loan fund. Thus was constituted a finance corporation for agriculture, and that is all that it is.

What was it we did, by virtue of that legislation for the farmer? He was left to achieve his own economic equality—how? Through his cooperative associations and through the stabilization corporations, provided in the Federal Farm Board act, he was to have the privilege of borrowing $500,000,000, and through the use of this borrowed money the farmer was to achieve his own economic equality—that is, increase his annual income by $4,000,000,000.

What would he have had to make on that borrowed capital to accomplish such a result? Eight hundred per cent per annum.

We from the Middle West knew that such a result was utterly impossible, and we so expressed ourselves on the floor of the Senate. We further expressed the view that if the Federal Farm Board, by a loan of $500,000,000 to the farmers, could enable them to profit to the extent of $50,000,000 annually, that is, at the rate of 10 per cent, the board and the farmer would indeed be accomplishing all that could be expected. At the same time we pointed out there was great danger of loss.

We objected to this form of legislation because we did not want to come back to the Treasury and ask for more money. It was our conviction that equality afforded the farmer, which depended upon repeated calls upon the National Treasury, could not persist; but this was just one of our objections to that legislation. However, it was deemed probable that this was the only legislation we could get for the farmer, and so many of us voted for the measure, notwithstanding our misgivings. And what has been the result? To-day the farmer is lower in the economic scale than ever before. Instead of making 10 per cent annually for the farmer, the board is confronted with tremendous losses.

Mr. President, are we not going to do something for the farmer during this session? We have done nothing thus far except to make dispositions whereby some of us have hoped that a little might trickle down to him below. What is necessary in this emergency is to take another hold on this farm problem and act.

I suggest now the wisdom of applying the McNary-Haugen proposal to wheat alone. I urged this two years ago, because I realized that any legislation we might enact would in a large measure be an experiment; and that we should not attempt to cover the entire agricultural field, in view of the fact that our legislation would be in the nature of an experiment. That is not the way in which research work is successfully conducted.

I suggest now that we put aside sectional jealousy, so far as any particular crop is concerned, and try out the equalization plan with one crop, inasmuch as it has been successfully applied in Europe and constitutes a method of taking care of resulting losses without falling back upon the United States Treasury.

Farm relief properly confronts us now. We ought to do something. We have the opportunity. Are we to put off action until the closing hours of this session of Congress? Surely we have failed thus far. In short, are we not going to do something in an endeavor to put an end to an economic situation that is compelling the farmer to haul two wagonloads of his farm products to market to buy what one wagonload would have purchased during the period from 1909 to 1914?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the range of discussion has been upon the general subject rather than as to qualification of the particular individuals to fill the offices to which they are appointed. I do not disagree with the views expressed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Norbeck], but I suppose the only question which we can determine now is whether or not these particular individuals are fitted for the offices to which they have been appointed. The subject of abolishing the board is not before the Senate at this time. In other words, we can not remedy the evils complained of by rejecting these nominees.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to one or two facts and to put them in the Record that we may have them before us to consider when we come to deal with the question of appropriations and with the question of the life of the board itself.

The Federal Farm Board has been in existence about two years. The salary pay roll of the board, including all those for which I consider it responsible, at this time amounts to $2,757,857. Mr. President, that must ultimately be paid either by the farmers or the taxpayers generally. Some of these salaries are exceedingly high. For instance, the manager of the cotton industry receives a salary of $75,000 a year. Compared with the price of cotton in 1929, and the price of cotton at the present time or within a short time, that salary would be about $150,000 or $200,000 a year.

The salary of the individual in charge of wheat is $50,000 a year. Making the same comparison it would be now about $125,000 or $140,000. The treasurer of the board receives now, I believe, a salary of about $32,000 a year, twice the salary of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. Many of the district officers receive $24,000 or $25,000 a year. I consider the Farm Board directly or indirectly responsible for these salaries.

Aside from the question of reducing of salaries in view of the depression which now exists, these salaries could not be justified at any time under any circumstances. They are to my mind unconscionable. If I could reach them in any way by voting against the particular individuals whose nominations are now before us for consideration, I should certainly do so. But if we are interested in relieving those who must pay these salaries, we will at the proper time deal with the subject. I presume that will come in the independent offices appropriation bill or by a bill offered for that purpose.

Since I introduced a bill some months ago touching this subject there has been organized an apparently nation-wide propaganda against the reduction of these salaries. This propaganda does not come from the farmers but, in my opinion, from those who are engaged in exploiting the farmers. I can not believe that the farmers themselves, who have really to pay these salaries, and the taxpayers are interested in maintaining any such salaries. I would not deny anyone the right of petition, but I may say to those who are sending telegrams to me that my view is that taking into consideration the condition of the farmers and the great weight of taxes already resting upon the taxpayers, that these salaries are indefensible and I shall do all in my power to reduce them. I do not believe, in the first place, that they represent those who ought to be represented and, in the second place, if they did, I should feel nevertheless disposed to exercise my judgment.

I think that some of the salaries to which I have referred amount to legalized graft, and those who are supporting them must take the responsibility in the future, if they do not reduce them, of being placed in that position so far as I am individually able to do so. These men took office to aid a struggling, failing industry, and to exploit those whom they were supposed to help amounts to a great wrong.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I read a part of the hearings dealing with the question of salaries paid by the Farm Board, including the $50,000 and the $75,000 salaries to which the Senator from Idaho referred. I was not able to determine whether the board was paying those salaries or whether a portion of them was paid by the association of which at the time the official was the head.

Mr. BORAH. The salary is not being paid direct by the board, but the organization which is paying it is supported by loans made by the board.

Mr. FESS. I agree with the Senator that it is simply indefensible. I had assumed that the money did not come out of the revolving fund of the board. If it does, it seems to me there is absolutely no defense for it. If, on the other hand, in the case of a man of great ability, the salary of $50,000 which he is drawing is not deducted from amounts received by the board, I would not see any objection to that; but if the salary of $75,000 is coming out of the funds of the board, I can not imagine any justification for it.

Mr. McNARY and Mr. BROOKHART addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BORAH. I yield first to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not at all confused about the situation nor the interrelationship of the Farmers' National Grain Corporation and the Stabilization Corporation or the fund out of which the money is loaned to the cooperatives. In the progress of the examination conducted by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry it clearly appeared that originally part of the salary was paid out of the funds of the Federal Farm Board to its agency, the Stabilization Corporation, but latterly an organization was formed of 27 regional farm cooperative units, embodying a membership of 250,000 legitimate farmers organized under the laws of Delaware as the Farmers' National Grain Corporation, and it was that corporation, having a board of directors entirely divorced from any governmental agency, that paid these so-called enormous salaries,

I have said over and over again, as I happen to be chairman of the committee which made this discovery, that I join with the Senator from Idaho in denominating such salaries as unconscionable, but I am not prepared at this time to accuse the Farm Board or the Stabilization Corporation, two great governmental agencies, of doing this particular thing. I lay the blame for it, if there be blame, I lay this extravagance, if it be extravagance, I lay this racketeering, if it may be so denominated, to the board of these cooperatives that administered the Farmers' National Grain Corporation.

Mr. BORAH. Which is sustained and financially nour-ished by the Farm Board.

Mr. FLETCHER. They are all supported, organized, and upheld by the Farm Board.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to clear that up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Originally the Farm Board loaned this corporation some funds, most of which have been repaid. Most of the money which has provided the working capital of the cooperative organization has been borrowed at the intermediate credit banks and commercial banks of the country. I myself can not find any disposition to censure the board for something over which I believe they have no control at this time nor have had for some while.

I think, Mr. President, it is the duty of the Farmers' National Grain Corporation, through their board of directors, to realize the censure that is being brought upon their heads and voluntarily to compel the reduction of these salaries. To them and to the regional units I attribute whatever may be called censure in this transaction.

Mr. KING and Mr. SHIPSTEAD addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho has the floor. Does he yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator from Oregon a question, with the permission of the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator from Oregon if it is not a fact that the Grain Corporation, to which he has referred, has sustained great loss, although it has reported paper profits, which losses are laid at the door of the Stabilization Corporation, which corporation lays them at the door of the Farm Board?

Mr. McNARY. No. Mr. President.

Mr. KING. One other question, if the Senator from Idaho will pardon me. Is it not a fact that quite a number of regional organizations are bankrupt and that the stabilization and the other corporations have taken over their assets as well as their liabilities, and the result will be—at least it is so stated, according to the information conveyed to me by persons who seem to be familiar with the matter—that the Federal Government is "holding the bag," to use the language of the street, and that instead of there being a loss to-day of $250,000,000,000 the loss will be more than $300,000,000?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho will indulge me further—

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. I think the able Senator from Utah is wholly misinformed. I must rely upon the record that is given before the committee rather than upon rumors that may be picked up upon the street corners. It is unquestionable and indisputable that the cooperative organization about which I speak, known as the Farmers' National Grain Corporation, owned by the 27 regional units, has made a profit upon the merchandising of the grain.

The losses came not in the operation of this farm-owned and farm-controlled organization, but in the Stabilization Corporation, which is the right hand of the Federal Farm Board and supported wholly by its funds, as provided in section 97 of the marketing act. The Senator is conversant with that act. It was that organization, employing Government money, that pegged the price of wheat and held it up around 75 cents a bushel for a period of eight months; it was that corporation that owned the wheat which suffered the loss, which was a direct charge upon the Treasury of the United States; but it has no more to do with the Farmers' National Grain Corporation than the Senate of the United States has to do with the House of Representatives.

Mr. BORAH. But all the losses fell back on the Treasury of the United States

Mr. McNARY. Certainly, because it was an instrumentality of the Government. As I have just tried to explain, it was the Stabilization Corporation which operated in this peculiar field of purchasing the grain which suffered the loss, but it has nothing whatsoever to do with the merchandising corporation which is known as the Farmers' National Grain Corporation, which is paying, I think, unjustly and unfairly these enormous salaries.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President-

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, on this proposition-The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho has the floor. Does he yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BORAH. I yield first to the Senator from Minnesota. Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon is it not true that the policy of the Farm Board has been to loan the money to farm marketing organizations only? In order to have the benefit of the Government loans from the Federal Farm Board it is necessary for them all to join the original set-up which was prepared, planned for them, and organized by the Farm Board. It is this set-up, these marketing organizations, that are paying these undue and unjust salaries; but in view of the fact that they must belong to the organization or get no money at all, the Farm Board ought to exercise some control over how the money is spent.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. In reference to the statement of the Senator from Oregon as to the manner in which the salary of the manager of the Grain Corporation was fixed, I ask to read to him from the hearings before the committee of which the Senator is chairman the following:

The CHARMAN. Inasmuch as the Farm Board supplies the funds and is responsible for the management of that corporation as you have described, you have fixed the salaries of those associated with Mr. Milnor, have you not?

Mr. STONE. We have been consulted about salaries.

The hearings disclose to us that the board was consulted about the salaries of the officers of the Grain Stabilization Corporation, and, having been consulted about them, it continues to lend the money of the taxpayers for the payment of those salaries.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I ask the Senator from South Carolina if that applies to both salaries to which reference has been made—the one of $75,000 and the other of $50,000?

Mr. BYRNES. That is the answer of Chairman Stone as to those salaries.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho, or some other Senator who knows, to furnish to the Senate the name of the gentleman who receives $75,000 a year in salaries and commissions and the names of those who receive $50,000 a year.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I can answer that, The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. Milnor received a $50,000 salary as general manager of both the Stabilization Corporation that loaned the money and the National Grain Corporation that made the profits, and testified that he would sometimes be buying wheat for one and selling it for the other on the same day.

Mr. ASHURST. At that point in the RECORD will the Senator please give the gentleman's initials and his address? Mr. BROOKHART. I do not remember Mr. Milnor's

Mr. ASHURST. I shall be glad to have the Senator supply it for the RECORD.

Mr. BROOKHART. The other man's name is Creekmore, from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; from Oklahoma.

Mr. BROOKHART. From Oklahoma.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think Mr. Creekmore has lived at Fort Smith, in Arkansas.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I want to pursue these questions further.

Mr. BROOKHART. What Mr. Creekmore received was not all salary; he had a fixed salary, and also commissions, and the commissions mounted up so that, together with his salary, they reached the sum of $75,000.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, it makes no difference whether the amount was made up of salaries, fees, commissions, or what not; it makes no difference how screened or camouflaged or hidden the payments may have been; the amount came out of the pockets of the farmers, did it not?

Mr. BROOKHART. Yes; and he testified that many farmer members of his organization had an income of less than $300 a year, and I think some of them as low as $180 a year.

Mr. ASHURST. One more question.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let me answer the question the Senator has asked in regard to Mr. Creekmore. He was employed by the American Cotton Cooperative.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho has the

Mr. BORAH. I yield the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Oregon. Mr. McNARY. Mr. Creekmore, whose name has been mentioned, is manager of the American Cotton Cooperative Association. I think he receives a salary of $20,000 a year, and is also given as much as 5 cents a bale up to 1,000,000 bales that are sold by the corporation, which, when reduced to earnings, amounts to $75,000 a year. That is paid out of the funds of this cooperative association, which operates practically in all the Southern States.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I want to be certain that I am correct. Is it not a fact that the moneys which are thus paid, the huge sums thus paid as salaries or commissions, come out of the farmer? Is not that true; or do the moneys come out of the Government?

Mr. McNARY. In answer to the Senator, let me say that originally some of these salaries were paid by the Stabilization Corporation, both in the case of cotton and wheat, but since some time in the fall the whole sum has been paid by the larger cooperative association known as the American Cotton Cooperative Association, dealing with cotton, and the Farmers National Grain Corporation, dealing with wheat.

It is not my purpose in any way to try to screen any responsibility the board may have in respect to this matter; I am trying to speak fairly regarding the testimony; and, of course, if the Government did not supply the funds for those salaries, necessarily they had to come out of the producers of cotton.

Mr. ASHURST. That is a frank answer, such as the Senator always makes.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. In regard to the salary to which reference has been made, I think the mistake perhaps was made by those who were setting up the machinery in not confining the manager of the business of the corporation dealing with cotton to his salary. However, be that as it may, as I understand, the board in getting Mr. Creekmore to serve in this capacity had promised him a definite salary, and then so much a bale for all the cotton he handled for them. He was paid in that respect on a commission basis. I presume they acted on the ground that it would encourage him to increase his business, for as he increased the business his income would increase and so he did receive, as I understand, $75,000 a year.

If in handling this cotton he had so handled it as to increase the price to such an extent to the farmer that he could have taken out his percentage and still benefited the farmer, I do not know that there could be any just criticism. The question for us to decide is whether or not by virtue of his handling the cotton he did improve its price over what it would have been had he not been there.

I hold no brief for any of these men. I am simply trying to get the Senate to see that in their effort to increase the energy of their representative, and also to increase the price to the consumer, they have offered him a certain fixed salary and a percentage on the business transacted by the board.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President-

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. What explanation has the Senator from South Carolina to make in regard to the salary of $50,000 which did not carry this impetus to the officer who was given the $50,000 salary?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not want to lose the floor, because I desire to ask one more question; but I yield to the Senator from South Carolina for the purpose of answering the Senator's question.

Mr. SMITH. I do not know anything about the contract between the Grain Stabilization Corporation and the board, and the statement that I made was not made in justification of the percentage basis. It is done very often; but I do not think there would have been any criticism if there had been a tremendous increase in the price by virtue of the activities of this man.

I do not think the policy was a good one; but, in reply to the Senator from Florida [Mr. Trammell], I do not think there is any justification whatever for paying these enormous salaries, even the flat salary without the commission. I think a mistake was made, and I do not think it is justifiable at all; and if the board is to continue I think there ought to be some statutory enactment fixing the salaries of members of the board and fixing the limit of the salaries of the subsidiaries they may employ.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President-

Mr. ASHURST. I now yield to the Senator from Minnesota, provided I do not lose the floor.

Mr. SCHALL. I am informed that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has made a loan of over $20,000,000 to the Wabash Railroad, whose president, according to reports, receives a salary of $60,000 a year. This railroad only did a business last year of $60,000,000.

did a business last year of $60,000,000.

The Farmers National Grain Corporation during that same year handled a business of over $200,000,000, and the president of the Farmers National Grain Corporation only receives a salary of $18,000 a year.

If salaries are to be governed by volume of business, the salary to be accorded the president of the Farmers National Grain Corporation, to be consistent with the salary given to the president of the Wabash Railroad Co., would be over three times such an amount, or $180,000 a year, when as a fact he received one-tenth of this amount, although he is the head of an organization that handled better than three times as much business as the Wabash Railroad.

The Farmers National Grain Corporation have made a profit of over $3,000,000, which is distributed back to the stockholders, and they did this at a cost to the producer of less than 1 cent per bushel instead of gouging the farmer as he has been by the private grain gambler by 10 or 12 cents per bushel. The Wabash Railroad Co. has gone in the hole.

What the farmers are wondering about is why the Farm Board and the cooperative organizations are singled out.

Why did we not hear some outcry when this loan was made to the Wabash Railroad, that their president was receiving too large a salary?

These cooperatives are private concerns. They are run on the same principle as insurance companies or any other private corporation, the salaries of whose officers range as high as $250,000. In the beginning it seems to me that these cooperatives are entitled to secure men who can compete with the men who handle the grain gambling and the commercial transaction of other companies that do pay their officers these immense salaries.

I hold no brief for such tremendous salaries, but I do feel that it is not unreasonable to give the cooperative farmer what he is asking of us in this fight or race—an even start. They are young to the game and need the advice and guidance of experienced men of genius in this particular line. Give them the same kind of mount, equipped with equal lung power, with equal strength, muscles that are built for the race or intrigue. Above all else, give them a horse that has been trained for the race who knows the other fellow's game and can get under the line first.

We should not say to the cooperatives you can not have the right to hire competent men who understand this business and you shall not have the right to pay them salaries comparable to what they receive from the private grain trade.

If we are to do this then we should limit the salaries which can be paid by the private grain trade to their employees. This, of course, we can not do, and unless this can be done the cooperatives will not be able to secure the type of men both as to experience and ability so necessary to successfully market the grain of the cooperative.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Since the Senator from Minnesota has raised that question, does he not think that the Stabilization Board, in trying to select this very capable man that he pictures, might have obtained him when he was getting only $12,000 a year if they had paid him about fifteen or twenty thousand dollars? He was getting only $12,000 per annum. Does the Senator think it was necessary for the board to give him $75,000 in order to obtain his services?

Mr. SCHALL. He also received a commission that netted him far more than his present salary.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield; but I want to ask one more question.

Mr. McNARY. Would it not be fair if the Senator from Florida would add to his statement that the gentleman to whom he referred owned 85 per cent of the Creekmore organization, out of which he was getting nice dividends and profits?

Mr. TRAMMELL. That was his capital, and he, of course, got his income from his capital; but as to his salary, he had only drawn that salary previously.

Mr. ASHURST. So far as I am concerned, if any private organization desires to pay anyone $50,000 a year or $100,000 a year, that is not our concern. What a man does with his own does not concern us. These moneys, however, if not directly, were indirectly Government moneys; and I think it was a bad if not a shockingly bad procedure to take the increment from Government moneys, and from those increments, by reason of this law, pay huge salaries, when these poor farmers, as has been stated, receive an | is the very point I am making—that we, it seems to me, annual income of but $300 a year.

Mr. President, one more question. I desire to know whether or not the nominee, Mr. Frank Evans, of Utah, was a member of the board at that time and had anything whatever to do with countenancing or approving this highsalary transaction?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, Mr. Evans was appointed to the board in June of 1931, after these contracts with respect to the payment of salaries and wages were entered into. The same thing is true of Mr. Thompson.

Mr. Schilling was originally, and is now, a member of the board. He was a member when these contracts were entered into.

Mr. ASHURST. Then it would seem that Mr. Evans and Mr. Thompson are exempted from any criticism on this particular transaction.

Mr. McNARY. If we are to lay criticism for these contracts and salaries they certainly would be exempt, because they came upon the board after the date of the execution of the contracts.

Mr. ASHURST. I have received the information I desired, and I now yield the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas obtained the floor.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SCHALL. In reply to the question of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Grain Corporation made a profit, I understand, of a little over $3,000,000. There was some question involved as to what business they had done. I make this statement also in reply to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings], who, I think, asked a question as to other salaries.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, that profit was at the expense of the Stabilization Corporation, so that it is really not a profit at all. If it had not been for the Stabilization Corporation, the other corporation would not have had any profit, or any existence either, for that matter.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it seems to me that the issue before the Senate has become confused.

First, there has been criticism of the act under which the Farm Board functions, and the declaration that the act itself really was not desired by the Congress, but was passed through the influence of the President or some one else, when the terms of the measure were really objectionable.

Second, there has been criticism of the administration of the act.

Third, there has been criticism of conduct by the board which has permitted the payment of very large salaries under conditions that did not justify, or seem to justify, such salaries.

The question that is in my mind is, How are we to determine these issues in a vote on the confirmation of a nominee to be a member of the Federal Farm Board? It is at most an indirect expression of opinion. As to some of the features complained of, and I think justly complained of, they are within the control of the Congress; and before we can regulate them we shall find it necessary to revise the law itself.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. On that proposition, the Committee on Civil Service has already reported a bill, and it is now on the calendar, reducing the salaries of members of the Farm Board to $9,600 a year, and providing that they shall make no loans to any organization that pays salaries above $15,000 to officers or employees. That bill is pending on the calendar at this time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; but in resolving the question arising under this nomination we do not in any sense determine the issue involved in that litigation. That are pursuing a very unusual course here.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I may not understand my leader; but if we condemn, as I do, the policies pursued by the Farm Board, and there is here for confirmation one of the members of the Farm Board whose conduct we challenge and whose conduct we criticize, I feel that we should be at liberty to vote against him, and that we are not doing an unusual

I differentiate between Mr. Evans and Mr. Schilling. shall vote for Mr. Evans. I shall vote against Mr. Schilling. Mr. Schilling has been with the organization for years. He has been a party to this maladministration; and I do not think he is entitled to a vote of confidence at the hands of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. My friend the Senator from Utah will recall that the name of Mr. Schilling has not yet been reached; that all the discussion is upon the nomination of Mr. Evans, and that in determining the confirmation or rejection of the nomination of Mr. Evans we should bear in mind that it is stated here that he was not a member of the board when the contracts complained of were entered into.

The thought in my mind is that we are going at this matter in an indirect way, when we have the power and perhaps the duty to approach it in a direct manner. It does not seem to me fair to reject a nominee for membership on the Farm Board, appointed under authority of an act passed by Congress, upon the implied assumption that he may hereafter approve some action that has been taken by other members of the board.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from

Mr. BORAH. I agree with the Senator from Arkansas that the real matter in which we are interested can not be disposed of at this time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is exactly the thought that is in my mind.

Mr. BORAH. I undertook to express that idea, but perhaps did not make myself plain—that I do agree with what the Senator says. To reject Mr. Evans-who, I think, is a man of capacity and ability-would simply mean that another name would be sent here in his place.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; he would be rejected, and still another; so that nothing would be accomplished.

Mr. BORAH. There is a way by which we can deal with this matter later; and I presume this discussion has taken place largely by reason of what is anticipated in the future, rather than the present situation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The statement just made by the Senator, that we can deal with this matter later, is true. It is also true that we could have dealt with it earlier. The question of the administration of this law, in a measure, has been a subject of criticism and mention in Congress since the beginning of this session. I concede that if it can be made to appear that the rejection of one of these nominees is on the ground that he has established his disqualification, or that there is insufficient evidence of his qualification presented to the Senate, it will result in avoiding having to meet this issue again when the name of another nominee is sent here. In other words, if the Senate rejects one of these nominees because he did participate in arrangements which resulted in paying enormous salaries to employees whose policies and actions did not result in benefit to those who finally have to bear the burden of those salaries, that action might be justified, but with regard to the nominee whose name is presented, it does seem to me that we are going out of our way to criticize the appointment, and we would be going out of our way to reject the nomination, merely because other members of the board have taken a course we can not approve.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. KING. May I say to my friend that I think Senators have been proceeding upon the supposition that all of the nominations were before the Senate, and Senators have been discussing the Farm Board and its past policies without any reference whatever to Mr. Evans, whose nomination has recently been sent to the Senate. I have not said anything about the matter, but, speaking for myself, I have not thought that the discussion revolves around Mr. Evans at all, or, for that matter, around Mr. Schilling, but rather around the policies which have been pursued by the board, in the belief on the part of some of us, at least, that there has been maladministration of the law.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think I have concluded all I wished to say, except to add that it is my desire to be fair and just. If evidence is presented here, or the suggestion is made, that a member of this board whose name is before the Senate for confirmation is lacking in either moral, mental, or other qualifications, I think that is germane to the issue before the Senate; but I do not think we can hold the board responsible for defects in the statute itself, or hold new appointees on the board responsible for the mistakes of former or old members of the board.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to make just a brief statement, more for the RECORD than for the Senate, at this

Mr. Frank Evans was born and reared on a Utah farm. He worked on the farm, he herded sheep and cattle and worked in a coal mine and sugar factory near by until he was 18 years of age. He taught school and was later selected as superintendent of public schools in his home county.

Mr. Evans worked his way through the University of Utah and later attended the University of Chicago. He is an attorney by profession and was elected to the office of county attorney of Summit County, Utah, the home of his boyhood days. He was later elected to the State senate and was appointed by the governor as regent of the University of Utah.

During the World War he was affiliated with the Red Cross, and he, together with his wife, went abroad in that service. Both attained distinction for the services they rendered in that capacity.

For the past 10 years he has devoted practically all of his time to the organizing and advising of farm cooperative associations. For two and a half years he was executive secretary of the American Farm Bureau Federation and later for a similar period served as its general counsel. During his service with the federation and since his resignation about a year and a half ago, he has worked continuously with farm cooperative associations. He is thoroughly familiar with the farmers' problems.

Personally, I have known Mr. Evans all of his life. His appointment came solely as a result of his past record. He is a man of outstanding ability as a lawyer, economist, and as an expert on farm cooperative associations. His character and integrity are above reproach. I know of no one who is better qualified for appointment as a member of the Federal Farm Board.

I need say no more. I know of no man in public life who bears a higher reputation for honor, honesty, and ability.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I differ somewhat with my friends who are trying to excuse these members of the board, whose membership only dates back 8 or 10 months. They would clear them of any guilt whatever in connection with this salary grab, which is but little short of a public scandal. Certainly for two or three months, when even the man in the street has known of this outrage through the press, the members of the board certainly must have had knowledge of it; and if they had knowledge of the abuse and did not approve and acquiesce, what have they done to try to remedy the situation? I have heard of no effort on their part to remedy the situation. Have they been "asleep on the doormat" for all of these months?

My friend from Oregon said he did not know that these salaries were unconscionable, and he contradicted a statement to that effect made by the Senator from Idaho: and in doing so he retreated behind the proposition that the funds with which these fabulous salaries are paid come out of the cooperative organizations. What are the cooperative organizations? They are representatives of the agricultural interests, the farmers of the country. So he thinks it is all right to take money away from the farmers of this country. but that it might be offensive and might be unconscionable if the same expenditures were made from the Government Treasury. He may see a distinction, but I fail to see anv.

Under the act creating the Farm Board, and under the procedure which has been followed, these are all, we might say, affiliated organizations, with the Farm Board as the parent organization. They are not separate and distinct. They all function in cooperation.

There was organized the American Cotton Growers' Association, the association with which Mr. Creekmore, who has been given a salary of $50,000 per annum, is connected. The testimony in that regard appears on page 289 of the record, and it appears that the affiliated associations subscribed for $800,000 of the capital. They paid on their stock only $75,500. That was the amount the organization with which he was connected contributed. At the time of this hearing, in November, they had obtained from the Farm Board loans amounting to $63,000,000. Yet some would try to make it appear that the Government has nothing to do with the financing, the gains and the losses. The organization put up only about $80,000; the Government has contributed, in the way of loans, $63,000,000. I approve of the benefits, if any, that this Government agent may have brought to our farmers, but I am against the salary waste and the members of the Farm Board who were connected with the board at the time this was permitted or subsequently acquiesced in the scheme. I believe from the hearings they knew and agreed to what was going on. I find on page 288 that Mr. Creekmore was asked the question:

Did any of those members-

Speaking of the members of the Farm Board-

Did any of those members have anything to do with voting those salaries to the members of the cooperatives themselves

Mr. Creekmore said, in reply:

Only indirectly through their directorate.

He further states in his testimony that before he accepted employment, he conferred with the Farm Board. The witnesses before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry practically admitted that, indirectly at least, the Farm Board had to do with the fixing of these salaries.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Does the Senator know when the salary of the counsel was increased from $10,000 to $20,000?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not know when it was increased. Mr. BYRNES. Certainly since the price of cotton and the price of wheat declined, was it not?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly it was since. In connection with these operations there is a great world of employees drawing salaries of $20,000, $25,000, $30,000, $35,000 a year in these different organizations which are under the control or affiliated with and being financed by the Farm Board; and I have not heard of any of the members of the board, even these new members who have been on the board for the last eight months, making any effort whatever to remedy that

I think that the farmers of the country are very vitally concerned when funds which have been furnished by the Government for their relief and for their aid are dissipated' in giving lavish and unjustified compensation to officers, and a very excessive number of employees.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. A year ago Mr. Thompson, who was then the head of the Farm Bureau Federation, appeared with other farm leaders before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and asked that committee not to sponsor any legislation for farm relief except to vote appropriations for the Farm Board. At that time he stated that, in his opinion, the farmers of the United States could see more daylight ahead than they had for many years. If he can show them that light, I think he is worth the salary he draws. A short time after that he was appointed a member of the Farm Board.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That might be like some other prophecies. In the dim, distant past we heard and even now we hear about "prosperity around the corner," and yet untold millions of our citizens have grown weary and tired chasing the rainbow which they said is "just around the corner."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is the corner behind us, seemingly.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I think so. That might be true of Mr. Thompson's dream.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. At least one farmer saw the light.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Yes. I think the other members of the board saw the light, those who advocated the plowing up of every third row of cotton, too. I think perhaps the farmers of the South appreciated that, or a few of them did. I have not heard of any who did, however. That was some of their wise advice, to plow up every third row of cotton.

Whether some of the Senators believe it or not, the farmers are vitally interested in this fund. Congress was moved and actuated in passing the Farm Board legislation with a sincere desire to assist agriculture. It was not the intention, as I understand it—it certainly was not my object in supporting this measure—to build up a pie counter for a lot of people to feast on in the way of extravagant salaries of from five to twenty, thirty, thirty-five, fifty, and seventy-five thousand dollars per annum, but it seems that some who had to do with the machinery have been moved more by the latter consideration than by a desire to afford relief and aid to stricken agriculture in this country.

Outside of the farmers, the Government is interested. The Government's financial support comes from the American taxpayers. I read last night for the first time the revenue bill which is now pending in the House of Representatives. I find that under that bill, in assessing the income tax, an exemption of only $1,000 is made to a single person and an exemption of only $2,500 to the head of a family. So every American citizen, if single, who has an income of over $1,000, and any head of a family who has an income of over $2,500 are to pay income-tax tribute to the expenses of the Government. Assuredly these citizens are interested in the question of whether or not there is a reasonable economic conduct of all public affairs, or whether we have an extravagant and wasteful administration of the affairs of our Government.

I do not believe in a course that would be disorderly or destructive in governmental affairs, whether dealing with the Farm Board or the different departments or any public activity. It is my opinion we should carry on in an orderly way; but that does not mean the wasteful expenditure of public funds in the way of extravagant salaries, in the way of duplication of work, or in the authorization or the establishment of new activities which will not be beneficial and helpful to the people who have to bear the burden. Now with bended backs from the overload of taxation I hear the pathetic cry for mercy from tens of millions of American freemen.

I have taken the position in this body, not only during this crucial period of depression but for years, that many of the salaries in the lower salary brackets and the medium brackets are really too low, and that, on the other hand, there were salaries in the high brackets which are excessive and need pruning downward. If we treat with the salary problem at this session, in connection with the bill introduced by the distinguished and able Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borahl, or in the consideration of any other measure on this subject, my position will be that we should not reduce the salaries of those receiving merely a pittance or receiving just sufficient compensation to enable them to eke out a very meager existence. I shall oppose the reduction of the small and medium salaries but when it comes to the high salaries, to the useless positions, and waste, I will heartly join with the Senator from Idaho in a substantial reduction of those salaries and the elimination of all waste.

So far as I am acquainted with or have observed the sentiment of the people of the United States, I think they generally approve of that attitude. Of course, we have organizations of Government employees—and I have always been their friend—who are prompted to go even farther than self-preservation and who say, "Touch not—even the employee whose salary is $8,000 or $10,000 or $15,000 per annum."

But in this they are far at variance with the will of the people of the country. I have tried to be friend those who receive small and medium salaries. I have always thought that the laborer is worthy of his hire. But we must remember that the funds with which we meet these pay rolls come from the American taxpayers, and much of that money comes from people who are earning far less than the compensation which is paid many of the Government employees. Practically all citizens want their employees well paid. I am sure I do.

I think the cooperative organizations and the Farm Board are so interwoven that there is an indirect, if not direct, responsibility upon the members of the Farm Board in the permitting of these exorbitant salaries under discussion. They are unconscionable as stated by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borahl. They are just as unconscionable to me, because the funds come out of the farmers of the country as they would be if the funds came out of the Federal Treasury, and for that reason I propose to vote against the members of the board who have acquiesced in any such policy—not only those who have been guilty of the sins of commission but those who have been guilty of the sins of omission.

One of the most distressing experiences I had during my service as the chief executive of my State was the removal of an officer whom I had previously regarded very highly; and I still regarded him very highly as a man, not because he had been guilty of a sin of commission, but because he had only sat idly by and allowed his associates on a board, with his knowledge, to unlawfully direct public funds. He thought it was a terrible thing for me to suspend him from office. He had merely neglected his plain duty, that was all. Does anyone think I should have allowed him to remain on that board? I did not think so, and I do not believe in allowing to remain these members of the Farm Board who have known the situation and, so far as we know, have made no effort whatever to correct it.

During the World War when our brave and patriotic boys were to the front facing hardships and death upon the battlefield, when with an unanimity unparalleled America's private citizenry were sacrificing and struggling in support of the armies at the front, the profiteer preyed upon his countrymen and fliched from them his tainted millions. I see another picture of to-day—millions of farmers struggling for the necessities of life, other millions destitute and in hunger—and then I see them driven into deeper hopelessness as the salary profiteer takes from their funds their $15,000, $20,000, $25,000, $30,000, $35,000, $50,000, and $75,000 per annum salaries. The Farm Board has permitted this raid. I am for retiring them to the shades of private life.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I said to my colleague a moment ago, I shall vote for the confirmation of Mr. Evans. I shall vote against the confirmation of Mr. Schilling. I differentiate between Mr. Evans and Mr. Schilling. Mr. Evans is a new member of the board. If he had been an old member of the board and had supported the policy which the board has pursued in the past, even though he is my personal friend and a man for whom I entertain a very deep affection and high regard, I should vote against him. In view of the fact that I can not associate, and do not associate, him with the practices of the board, the maladministration of the act and the delinquencies and defaults of the board, I shall feel at liberty to vote for him, and shall take pleasure in voting for him, but shall vote against the other gentleman whom I have named.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, if all the blame for the failure of the Farm Board were on the board itself, I, of course, would vote against all the nominees and for the abolishing of the board. But there is about as much blame on the United States Senate itself as there is on the board, and there is perhaps more blame still on the executive department of the Government.

In the beginning, the law was inadequate. The law did not meet the situation in the way of providing means for the handling of the farm problem. In that portion of the blame, which is a big portion, the Senate must carry its share.

To-day we have discussed more fully the merits of the proposition than we have the merits of the individuals involved. I want to point out briefly some of the things that are necessary to handle properly the farm problem. There are two phases to it. If we of the United States Senate owned this big United States as our farm we could agree on the policy this afternoon. There would be no trouble about that at all.

We have, first, the domestic market. The domestic market is 90 per cent of the agricultural production in the United States. Less than 10 per cent of it on the average is an export problem. So far as the 90 per cent is concerned, we have the power to create a set-up by law that will give the farmer a cost-of-production price for his products with a reasonable profit, just as truly as any institution in the country is able to charge and collect such a profit.

The other 10 per cent is an export proposition. That is divided somewhat in this way: A little over 50 per cent of the cotton is exported. That is the biggest export item. That is the hardest to handle. But that 50 or 60 per cent of cotton that is exported is in turn 65 per cent of the world's demand for cotton. Therefore, if that big percentage is financed and is properly handled, it will have some voice in the world price that will be paid for cotton. It will have some power to ask a price and receive something near that price. But with 40 or 50 exporters competing with each other in selling cotton in the world's market it has no voice and the buyers of cotton fix the world price.

The next largest item of export is wheat, and that is about 20 per cent. That would be less difficult still to handle than the more than 50 per cent of cotton. After we pass that, livestock products are only 7 or 8 per cent, and that mostly lard. Then we get down to corn, the biggest crop in the United States and the most valuable. Its export is less than 1 per cent, about 20,000,000 bushels a year since 1923 of a 2,750,-000,000-bushel production. That small percentage of less than 1 per cent of corn which is surplus is sold first in the domestic market, because it is not financed and separated and segregated in any way, flooding the domestic market. Then that surplus goes over into the free-trade markets of the world and there fixes the price not only of the little 1 per cent but the other 99 per cent in the United States. The next biggest bushel crop is oats, 1,400,000,000 bushels, and yet we export only about 13,000,000 bushels on the average, again less than 1 per cent. There are some other staple crops, including rice, that ought to go into the list, but I do not have the figures on them.

All of those crops added together export about 10 per cent of production. That 10 per cent is fixing the price of the other 90 per cent at home because it is not separated and segregated from the domestic market. The farmers are forced to sell it in the domestic market and forced to flood the domestic market, and then the exporters and speculators get hold of it and dispose of it in competition in the best way they can in the world market.

We created the Farm Board; and under the law it was not only to organize cooperatives for marketing the domestic production, but it was also to handle that exportable surplus, about 10 per cent of surplus which goes abroad as we export it in the form in which it goes abroad and which amounts to about $2,000,000,000 a year; and yet for the handling of that amount of exportable surplus we provided in the law but $500,000,000. That means, to begin with, that if the board scattered out and attempted to handle any more than wheat and cotton or attempted to use money to organize cooperatives or stabilizing organizations, it would fail because of insufficient financial support, and for that part of the situation Congress itself must share the blame.

We did not size up this proposition as business men should have done. Instead of that, we created this inadequate corporation with those inadequate funds.

It was a different story once before in the Congress in 1919. The President of the United States had promised the farmers $2.26 for their wheat crop if they sowed it in the fall of 1918. They sowed 18,000,000 acres more upon that promise. Then the armistice was signed, and it looked like we might not need all of that surplus wheat. The crop went into the winter good. They were predicting a 1,200,000-000-bushel crop, 800,000,000 bushels being the ordinary crop. Then Mr. Hoover, who managed the Wheat Corporation through Mr. Julius H. Barnes, now chairman of the executive committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce, got scared about their ability to finance that surplus on the allotment which Congress had given them, to wit, $150,000,000. So they came back to Congress and asked for more. That is what the Farm Board has not done in this case. They have not sized up the situation and come to Congress as Barnes and Hoover did in 1919.

Barnes and Hoover came on the 5th day of February, 1919, and asked for $1,000,000,000 to handle the surplus wheat alone, and they got every dollar of it. It was voted by the Senate and House without a moment's hesitation. They said, "We must have funds enough so there can be no question about the ability of the Government to finance and handle this exportable surplus of wheat." They said, "We must have authority to borrow more if that is not enough," and that authority was voted to them. They were given embargo authority. They were given control of the exchanges. They were given power to condemn terminal elevators. They were given control of licensing all the dealers and control of the business from one end of the land to the other.

That was a peace-time measure when the war was over, to carry out a promise of the President of the United States which is no more sacred than the promise made by both the Republican and Democratic platforms adopted in the last national conventions in 1928. They got that money. They found that it was sufficient because the crop proved to be short. They had to use only about $300,000,000, but they bought all the surplus that was offered. They bought it at cost of production fixed the same as every business man and manufacturing concern fixes the price that will be charged for their products. It was fixed by the Federal board.

This talk that we can not fix prices in the United States, where 90 per cent of our product is consumed at home, is mere idle talk. It can be done; it can be controlled. There is no parallel in the rubber of Great Britain or in the coffee of Brazil, because those were export propositions. Great Britain and Brazil had to find a world market, and the world had the right to shut them out and had the right to go other places to develop their markets.

But the 90 per cent of domestic production we can control. We control prices for manufactures by our tariff rates. We increase them to make a higher American price level. We establish by law a set-up that will enable them to fix the price at their factories without foreign competition.

It takes a little different set-up to remove the farmer's surplus and enable him to get the protection of his tariff rates. His tariff rates break down entirely because his surplus must first be sold in the domestic market and is not separated from the domestic market. That floods the market, breaks down the tariff rates, and the commodities of the farmer go into the free-trade markets of the world, where they are sold in competition with all the world and the price is fixed by that sale. It is cabled back in just a few minutes to the board of trade, the cotton exchange, and the produce exchange, and thus the price of his entire product follows the world price less the freight and expense of reaching the foreign markets.

Mr. President, assume that we set up a Government organization with sufficient funds and sufficient authority to remove this surplus entirely from the domestic market; then we can give the farmers of the country the cost-ofproduction price of their product with a reasonable profit at the same time. It can not be done, however, until the surplus shall be financed and removed in that way. As I have said, if these were our farms and we were looking upon the proposition as one directly affecting us, we would agree on such a measure this afternoon; it would not take us two hours to settle the question. That is what industry is doing right now with its surplus. Industry is financed, and when it has a surplus it segregates it from the domestic market, finds the best world market it can, and sells the surplus for the best price it can get, and usually charges less than it charges the people of the United States. Such a course, however, is not possible under the Farm Board law, with the meager sum at its disposal in comparison with the immensity of the problem.

The argument is made that if the plan I propose were adopted it would increase production so greatly that the system would break down and do more damage in the end than would have been done had it never been adopted. Mr. President, I have a most scientific analysis of agricultural conditions by the National Industrial Conference Board, which shows that the agricultural plant in the United States has been in full operation since 1900. It further shows that the per capita production has been steadily, slowly, and surely declining since 1900, and that it will surely continue to decline in the future. Perhaps 25 or 30 years from now we shall not have an agricultural surplus, except probably of cotton, but 25 or 30 years is entirely too long to stay in bankruptcy as we are at this time.

Mr. President, would such a plan increase production? The psychology of the farmer is exactly opposite, anyway. If he were getting a price so that he could pay his taxes, so that he could pay his interest rates, the farmer would not be so anxious then to sow every acre and every fence corner and to produce every bushel of grain he could. At the present time he has taxes to meet, he has much interest to meet, and he knows if he does not meet them he will lose his farm. So he does everything in his power to produce every bushel, every ounce he can in order to meet his charges. So I say to you, Mr. President, if the prices were stimulated so far as agriculture is concerned, the farmers would be more likely to decrease production than to increase it. However, the greatest asset that has come to the United States, the greatest asset of our prosperity in all our history, has been the export of agricultural products. The most desirable surplus we can have in this country is a surplus of agricultural products. I concede that the other countries of the world will no longer buy from us agricultural or any other products unless they have to buy them; they must be compelled by necessity, as it were, to buy them. We put up tariff laws against them and they have retaliated against us. I concede that that is the situation; but if wheat were financed, France would take down her tariff if she had to buy our wheat. Wheat is worth $1.60 or $1.65 per bushel in France, and has been all the time, while we have been getting only 30, 40, and 50 cents for it here in the United States. France has a tariff on wheat double our tariff, still France has to buy some wheat; but because our surplus is not financed and is held back so that the French can not get it, they make us pay the tariff.

The Farm Board did not pursue the policy that Hoover and Barnes pursued in 1918 and 1919. They went into this business just like a bunch of gamblers. Then Mr. Milnor organized the Stabilization Corporation under the direction of Mr. Legge, the head of the Farm Board. The contention that the Farm Board is not responsible for these high salaries and for the proceedings of the Stabilization Corporation is without merit. That corporation was set up by the Farm Board; it never would have had existence; it never would have done anything if the Farm Board had not authorized it to act. Mr. Legge, the great financier from the International Harvester Co., the biggest robber of the farmers in all their history, was the man who set it all up.

What did they do then? Mr. Milnor was provided with a $50,000 salary. He never had had such a salary before. He organized cooperatives, we are told. That is one thing about the law and its operations that is wrong. They can organize any kind of a Delaware corporation or any other corporation and call it a cooperative; but that is a fraud. The cooperatives they do set up are not cooperatives at all. This Stabilization Corporation is a Delaware corporation; the National Grain Corporation is another one, and Mr. Milnor is general manager of both corporations.

Mr. KING. Do they have the same board of directors?

Mr. BROOKHART. No; the board members are different, but Mr. Milnor is the general manager of both corporations, and he himself testified before the committee that in these operations he has, for instance, bought wheat on the board of trade for the Stabilization Corporation on one day and sold wheat for the National Grain Corporation on the same day. That is the rankest kind of gambling, and it can not be described as anything but gambling. The idea of stabilizing by buying and holding and then breaking down that stabilization by selling the wheat on the same day!

Mr. President, of course, that system has failed. The methods employed to handle cotton were not much better. Any such system is sure to fail. The failure of administration has been due in part to inefficiency or to the positive design of the board. I do not know what to think about Mr. Legge, unless he was a great decoy duck put in there to make good the statement of a Senator to whom the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Norbeck] referred, that the board would lose the money provided for that purpose, and thus the idea of farm relief would be discredited and we would be prevented from ever having an efficient law to protect the farmers, as we are protecting the other industries of the country. Of course the system failed; such a system always will fail.

Mr. President, if instead of pursuing this gambler's policy they had done as the Democratic Wilson board did in 1917 and 1919, if they had fixed a cost-of-production price for farm products, and if the board had had money enough and then had done as the Wilson board did in its day, namely, bid for all the products offered—not for any little share of them, but bid for all-bid for an absolute monopoly and control of the market, then they would have fixed the price on the day they made the bid, as the price of wheat was fixed in 1917, and the board of trade would have gone out of business that same day, as it went out of business in 1917, and stayed out of business until the Wheat Corporation ended its operations after the 1919 crop. board then would have had the surplus left on its hands. It need have no loss upon the domestic demand, because, Mr. President, we could have provided by tariff rates or embargo rates—as under the Democratic bill of 1919 there was an absolute embargo on imports and exports-for the purpose of controlling the price and preventing its being broken down by imports from any other country. Thus the Farm Board would have had left on hand for final disposition in the world market the surplus, which is about 10 per cent.

The Farm Board, in fact, held what it bought in the gamblers' market as a menace over the world market. A bidder in the world market did not know but that the next day the Farm Board surplus would be released and come in on the world market. That threat constantly broke down the world market itself. The members of the board bragged before the committee that they raised the price of wheat some 18 or 20 cents above the world market price in the domestic market; but, Mr. President, before they did that they broke down the world market probably 25 or 30 cents, and then raised the domestic market a part of the way back: at any rate, that is the way it figured out.

Suppose they had taken the other course and had said, "This surplus is not for sale; we will hold our cotton, our wheat, our corn, and our oats"—and there was not much to hold of corn or oats—"we will hold them until there is a world demand before we will sell them." That would have removed the threat from the world market; it would have permitted the world market to reach a higher level; it would surely have reached a higher level, and the board could finally have sold when the world had to buy. I concede that it would not have sold until the world had to buy, because other countries had adopted an attitude of retaliation against us; and the board might have had a loss upon the final sale of that surplus.

In the McNary-Haugen bill the farmers themselves said, "We will tax ourselves to pay that loss." That is what the equalization fee meant. It ought to have been called a tax. The name "equalization fee" is a camouflage; it was a tax upon the farmers. Yet they were denied the opportunity of taxing themselves to pay the losses that might ensue upon this exportable surplus and its final disposition.

Mr. President, I believe that the debenture ought to go ahead of the equalization fee. I believe the United States Treasury owes it to agriculture to pay all of that loss, perhaps so long as we will have a surplus. The tariff system of the United States creates a higher level of prices in the home market—a level four or five billion dollars higher than elsewhere. The farmers have probably paid a billion dollars of that higher price level each year throughout all the years. That has been a tax upon them, but they have received no benefit from this higher price level, because their own prices were fixed by the sale of their surplus in the free-trade markets of the world. I say that is enough tax for them to pay, and the Treasury, in order to equalize that condition, ought to have paid the losses, if any, upon the exportable surplus.

Mr. Hoover and Mr. Barnes had no loss on wheat in 1917, 1918, and 1919; they had a profit; they turned $59,000,000 of profit into the Treasury of the United States. Operating according to the same methods we would, in the case of some of these products, during some years again have profits to be turned into the United States Treasury. But if we had losses, I say that the Treasury ought to pay them.

Mr. President, in 1920 many Members of the Senate voted for the transportation act. They put in that act a guaranty out of the Treasury of the United States for the war-time profits of the railroads of the United States for the first six months after they were turned back into private ownership. They voted for that, and put it in the law. Then the deficit came along after a padding of the accounts of the railroads—one of the greatest outrages and grafting operations of the whole World War period—and when the deficit developed we wrote checks on the Treasury for $529,000,000 and paid that deficit. Many Members of the Senate who voted for that guaranty and for that subsidy out of the Treasury of the United States voted against the McNary-Haugen bill which only permitted the farmers to tax themselves. Subsequently they voted against the debenture plan designed to pay the loss out of the Treasury.

Mr. President, I should like to see enacted a bill providing an additional billion dollars for the Farm Board, but I do not like the policies of the Farm Board, and I would not vote for such a bill if the policies which have been pursued in the past are to be continued. Along with that, I should like to see the law prescribe a policy; I should like to see it tell the Farm Board what it should do in this matter; that it shall fix the cost of production for the staple products exactly as the Wilson board did in 1917, 1918, and 1919, and then bid that price for all the products that are offered. I should like them to have embargo power, so that they could shut out the imports of these products and thus protect the cost-of-production price. As soon as that bid would be made, the price would rise to that level for all the farmers of the United States.

Then I should like to lay down a policy for the board in the law so that they would hold this surplus for a world demand and then sell it on the best world demand. If they had a loss, I would start with a debenture equal to the full tariff rate—because half of the tariff rate now, at these low prices of farm products, will not protect a cost-of-production price for agriculture—and I would pay the loss on that debenture back to the Farm Board, and keep this revolving fund intact, so that there would be no diminution of it. Let us do that until we give the farmers as much as we gave the railroads in 1920, at least. Then, after we have drawn $529,000,000 of debentures out of the Treasury, I am willing to let the farmers tax themselves, if they want to, and they have wanted to all along.

Mr. President, if we will do that, and give the board authority to borrow more money if a thousand millions is not enough to handle this, as we gave it to the board in 1919—if we will do that, the farmers will at once get a cost-of-production price; there will be no argument about it; and if we have a loss, we will get something for the loss.

I would not now object to the loss the Farm Board had sustained, which they showed to be $177,000,000, if, in exchange for that, they had given the farmers of this country a cost-of-production price for their products; and if the farmers had got that price, we would have been on the road out of this depression long ago.

Agriculture went down in 1920, stricken down by the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board. It never had such a panic in farm prices in all its history. It has stayed down ever since, until its buying power is reduced. It can not even pay its interest and its taxes, and its credit is entirely destroyed. This long-continued depression of agriculture stopped many of the wheels of industry everywhere. That threw other men out of employment and destroyed their buying power, and that stopped other wheels of industry, until we have sunk down into the lowest depression in all of American history. It started at the bottom, with the deflation of agriculture; and if we are to recover from that depression we must start at the bottom again to give agriculture its cost-of-production price for its products, which in turn will start the wheels of industry, which in turn will employ men now unemployed, which in turn will increase business of every kind in the country and put us on the road to a sound recovery.

At present, whom have we helped? Nobody but the money lenders. We have tapped the Treasury for $2,000,000,000 for the railroads and for the banks. We have provided another $125,000,000 for the land banks, but that, again, was a lending policy. Agricultural prices are going lower; commodity prices are going lower all along the line; and there is still no relief in sight from these measures, because we have not tackled this problem from the bottom, as it ought to have been tackled.

If all of our agricultural products were exportable, as rubber was, of course, we would have to deal with the other nations of the world to control the price; but upon this 90 per cent of staple farm products we can deal only with ourselves and control that price. Since we are setting up these artificial things to protect the railroads, the banks, the protected industries, the great corporations of every kind, I say to you that the Congress of the United States owes it to the farmers of the United States to do the same thing for them by law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate active and consent to the nomination of Frank Evans, of Utah? [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the nomination is confirmed.

FEDERAL FARM BOARD-WILLIAM F. SCHILLING

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of William F. Schilling, of Minnesota, to be a member of the Federal Farm Board for the term of six years from June 15, 1931.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to state to my friend from Oregon [Mr. McNary] that I shall ask for a record vote on Mr. Schilling's nomination. I dislike to call Senators back.

Mr. McNARY. Will the Senator make that request with respect to the nomination of Mr. Thompson?

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. McNARY. Then may we not have presented to the Senate at this time the nomination of Mr. Thompson?

Mr. KING. I can not speak for one or two other Senators on this side. They may make that request.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate may now consider the nomination of Mr. Thompson.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the request?

Mr. McNARY. To consider the nomination of Mr. Thompson to be a member of the Farm Board.

Mr. KING. May I say to my friend that while I do not object to that I feel constrained to ask for a quorum as to that, because I understand that a number of Senators desire to speak upon that nomination, or at least to have a record vote upon it.

Mr. McNARY. The only reason why I made the request is the statement made by the Senator from Utah that he would ask for a roll call on the nomination of Mr. Schilling.

Mr. KING. I spoke only for myself.

FEDERAL FARM BOARD-SAM H. THOMPSON

Mr. McNARY. Assuming, from the general course of the argument to-day, that there would be no opposition to Mr. Thompson by reason of his not being a member of the board at the time contracts for certain salaries were entered into, and that there would not be a roll call, in order to dispose of the two nominations to-day in case of failure to develop a quorum I have asked unanimous consent that we may now consider the nomination of Mr. Thompson.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection. The Chair hears none.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Sam H. Thompson, of Illinois, to be a member of the Federal Farm Board for the unexpired term of six years from June 15, 1930.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Florida [Mr. Trammell] and other Senators who have just come in that the nomination of Mr. Thompson is now before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am on record. I think perhaps some other Senators will want to go on record. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Coolidge	Johnson	Patterson
Austin	Copeland	Jones	Pittman
Bailey	Costigan	Kean	Robinson, Ark.
Bankhead	Couzens	Kendrick	Robinson, Ind.
Barbour	Dale	Keyes	Schall
Barkley	Davis	King	Sheppard
Bingham	Dickinson	La Follette	Shipstead
Black	Fess	Lewis	Smith
Blaine	Fletcher	Logan	Smoot
Borah	Frazier	McGill	Steiwer
Bratton	George	McKellar	Thomas, Idaho
Brookhart	Glass	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Broussard	Glenn	Metcalf	Trammell
Bulkley	Gore	Morrison	Vandenberg
Bulow	Hale	Moses	Wagner
Byrnes	Harrison	Neely	Walcott
Capper	Hatfield	Norbeck	Walsh, Mont.
Caraway	Hayden	Norris	Waterman
Carey	Hebert	Nye	White
Connelly	Howell	Oddie	CHILDREN COLUMN TO A

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Mr. Thompson? [Putting the question.]

Mr. TRAMMELL. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The ayes have it, and the nomination is confirmed.

The question now is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of William F. Schilling, of Minnesota?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. How many Senators seconded the request for the yeas and nays? I asked for a yea-and-nay vote, and I did not have an opportunity to have it ascertained whether or not the request was sustained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The result of the vote has been announced.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desired to have a yea-and-nay vote on the nomination.

FEDERAL FARM BOARD-WILLIAM F. SCHILLING

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of William F. Schilling, of Minnesota?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I have heretofore indicated, I do not place Mr. Schilling, whose name is now being considered, in the same category as that occupied by Mr. Evans. I voted for the latter because I regarded him as competent to discharge the duties of the position and believed that he would not support policies inaugurated by the Farm Board long before his association with it, and would not permit the officers of the Stabilization Corporation and the Farmers' National Grain Corporation to execute the dominating influence over the board which they have exercised in the past.

My opposition to Mr. Schilling is not personal. So far as I know, he is an upright and honorable man. It is based upon his support of policies executed by the board which have brought just criticism upon this organization, and which have resulted in proposed legislation to abolish the board entirely or to transfer to the Department of Agriculture the administration of the Federal farm act. Mr. Schilling is one of the old members of the board and has been a party to the policies it has carried out, and which, as I have indicated, have provoked serious criticism and led many farmers to condemn it and ask for its reconstruction or abolition.

In the discussion that has taken place to-day the Farm Board has been criticized because of the large salaries paid to a number of individuals connected directly or indirectly with the Farm Board or with its subsidiary organizations. While I criticize the conduct of the board in permitting or not opposing the employment of so large a number of individuals and the payment of salaries so large as to be unwarranted and unfair to the Government and to the cooperatives, I believe that there are stronger and more important reasons justifying my vote against Mr. Schilling's confirmation.

We have just listened to two important speeches by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Norbeck] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Brookhart]. These Senators have long been known for their interest in agriculture and for their efforts to secure legislation beneficial to the farmers of the United States. They now condemn in unmeasured terms not only the Farm Board act but its administration. As I interpret their remarks, the members of the Farm Board who formulated its policies and put them into execution fall within the terms of their disapproval and indeed condemnation.

Certain it is that the policies of the Farm Board have resulted in enormous losses which the taxpayers of the United States are compelled to meet; and I think it is equally certain, if we are justified in accepting the statements of these Senators as well as statements made by farmers and persons familiar with the activities of the board and its subsidiaries, that the farming interests of the United States have not been benefited.

This statement perhaps should be modified to the extent that perhaps a number of organizations have received some benefit by reason of the loans made to them. Undoubtedly the large loan of more than $20,000,000 to the California interests engaged in producing grapes and raisins was of some temporary advantage to those who participated in the loan.

I believe that in both the House and the Senate many who have been the most earnest in their efforts to secure legislation for the benefit of agriculture and to aid the farmers in their unequal contest are among the severest critics of the Farm Board and its operations.

Throughout the country there has been a feeling of keen disappointment because of the unsatisfactory record of the Farm Board, and farmers in many sections are demanding that the so-called marketing act, under which the Farm Board is operating, be repealed, and that the provisions of the McNary-Haugen bill be enacted into law, or that the debenture plan, so ably advocated by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borahl and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] receive legislative approval.

Mr. President, the farm problem has not been solved, and the farmers to-day are in a more deplorable condition than ever before. It is impossible to compute their losses, or to measure the injustices to which they have been subjected by discriminatory legislation and by favoritism shown to what we are pleased to call the industrial interests of our country.

For years the farmers have protested against legislation which enriched large corporations engaged in industrial pursuits and widened the gulf between them and the manufacturing interests of the United States. The former were compelled to buy in a highly protected market, and the prices of their product were determined in the markets of the world. The result of unsound, if not unjust, legislation brought disappointment and, indeed tragedy to the agriculturists of our country. Millions of American farmers who have contributed so much to the progress and development of our country are to-day bound by the chains of debt, and they experience but little hope of relief from the tragic conditions in which they find themselves. Their farms are mortgaged and hundreds of thousands of farmers and their families are faced with expulsion from their homes, as creditors press relentlessly for payment of past-due obligations. The farmers were led to believe that the passage of the so-called farm marketing act would dissipate the clouds hanging over them and bring to them a reasonable degree of prosperity.

All thoughtful persons realize that the prosperity of our country depends upon the farmers and the stock growers, and those who till the soil and bring forth its rich products for the happiness and sustenance of man. If the farmers are destroyed, the cities will sink into ruin. The deplorable condition of our country to-day is largely due to the plight of the farmers

It is obvious, Mr. President, that the promoters of the marketing act were mistaken when they promised that it would bring prosperity to the farmers.

The act has been a failure, and even many who were its friends now believe that its results have been not only unsatisfactory but injurious. It is certain that the loss to the taxpayers of the United States has been great, perhaps between $250,000,000 and $300,000,000. Some of the regional so-called cooperative organizations are insolvent, and the Federal Government will be required to assume the losses resulting therefrom. In my opinion, many of the loans made from the $500,000,000 fund will be lost to the Government.

My attention has been brought upon a number of occasions to loans which have been made to so-called cooperatives in værious parts of the United States where it is claimed that losses have been incurred and additional losses are inevitable and that the Government will have to meet the same. It is possible that if the Farm Board at this late hour will change its policies and conform to sound economic laws some benefit may be derived by the farmers and the Government saved from further losses.

Mr. President, there is no doubt that the legislative branch of the Government is desirous of affording genuine farm relief, and it is certain that there is sincere regret that the marketing act has proven so unsatisfactory.

I have referred to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Nor-ris] as one who has been an earnest and sincere champion of the agriculturists of the United States. He has felt constrained to challenge attention to the work of the Farm Board and to offer a resolution sweeping in its character, calling for a complete and thorough investigation of the board, its affiliated or subordinate organizations, and their activities. Prior to offering the resolution there had been a hearing before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate.

Mr. Stone and other representatives of the Farm Board testified, and the facts developed at the hearing proved, I think, rather a severe shock to the country. Certainly the testimony before the committee, as well as the general complaints brought to the attention of Congress, inspired the Senator from Nebraska to offer the sweeping resolution just mentioned. This resolution, No. 42, requires the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to make a thorough investigation of all the activities and operations of the Federal Farm Board and, in addition, requires them to "specifically inquire into the organization and operations of any stabilization corporations and the organization and operations of any other corporations or subsidiaries organized by said bureau."

That part of the resolution, Mr. President, I have no doubt grew out of the information brought to the attention of the committee relating to the enormous salaries paid to employees of the Farm Board and the Stabilization Corporation and the Farmers' National Grain Corporation. The hearing also developed that the Farm Board had engaged in speculations which many denominated as gambling activities, as a result of which the Government had sustained a loss of tens of millions of dollars.

The resolution further provides that the committee shall ascertain whether, in the organization of any corporation by said board, such corporation was advisable or necessary, and whether the operation of said Federal Farm Board under said act could or could not have been better performed if, instead of organizing an independent corporation to act as sale or purchasing agent, or in any other capacity, the services of existing cooperative organizations could not have been more properly utilized.

At this point may I add that the two-subsidiaries mentioned were organized under the laws of the State of Delaware. They can scarcely be called genuine cooperative organizations, and, in my opinion, they are not controlled as cooperative organizations should be controlled. Perhaps there is much exaggeration and perhaps some inaccurate statements in the book published called "Wheat and Politics," which refers to these organizations and their administration.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. SCHALL. Would it interest the Senator to know that Wheat and Politics was incited and put out and sent throughout the country by the grain companies and the grain trade? Would it interest the Senator to know that this book should be called "Chaff and Poison in Politics," and that the author wrote article after article favorable to the Farmers' National Grain Corporation, the Farm Board, and the marketing act, and that as late as July, 1931, he tried to get employment as lecturer for it, but was turned down?

Would it be interesting to know what contact the author of this book has made with the private dealers in grain and cotton, and would it not be still more interesting to know what assistance the private farm commodity exchanges have given to Mr. Brinton in the circulation and distribution of this book?

Mr. KING. It would be interesting if I knew it, but if the book states facts, it would not change any conclusions based upon such facts. Sometimes, as the Senator may know, the devil may speak the truth.

Mr. SCHALL. It is interesting to know that Wheat and Politics is a bunch of lies from beginning to end, and I have the information within my hands to prove it, information which I will introduce into the Record within the next few days.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will appear before the committee when the investigation which is called for by the resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska is entered upon.

Mr. SCHALL. I hope the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska will be agreed to, and I hope enough money will be appropriated so that a real investigation may be made, not only into the Farm Board, not only into these grain corporations, but into the activities of the private gamblers in farm products throughout the country.

The private gamblers in commodities want the Farm Board and the cooperatives investigated, and there is no reason they should not be investigated, but before we pass any amendments to destroy the agricultural marketing act or cripple the Farm Board let us see to it that an investigation is also had at the same time of the activities of the gamblers in the farm commodities. Such an investigation will convince this body and everybody in this country that the attack now being made against the Farm Board and the agricultural marketing act is made by selfish interests, financed by the gamblers in the farmer's commodities and is the result of a well-organized publicity campaign in which dishonest and false charges have been heralded through the newspapers and in which books like Wheat and Politics have been paid for and distributed by the commodity gamblers. By all means let us have this investigation and let us appropriate enough money to bring out the facts, and show to the people the secret underhanded contemptible methods used by the commodity gamblers to destroy the agricultural marketing act.

The cotton exchange has already raised $100,000 for the very purpose of uprooting the Farm Board, for publicity purposes, and for the purpose of repealing or destroying the agricultural marketing act. They are beginning their operations by way of bills to cut down the salaries of the men who are running these private cooperative organizations in an attempt, by indirection, to put them out of business.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator from Minnesota possesses such a plenitude of knowledge, and I commend him as a witness to the committee, when it shall be organized, that out of the fund of knowledge which he possesses he may furnish pertinent information to the committee.

Mr. SCHALL. I have letters which conclusively show who is doing the job.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I look with as much hostility upon stock gamblers, and those who gamble upon the grain and cotton exchanges, as does the Senator. I believe that the gambling operations upon the New York Stock Exchange contributed in no small degree to the depression from which the people are suffering. Unfortunately, the party in power during the past few years took no steps to restrain gambling operations, either upon the grain or cotton exchanges or stock exchanges. In 1926 I offered bills tending to prevent gambling upon the stock exchanges. One of our deceased colleagues offered a bill to prevent gambling upon the grain exchanges. I was glad to associate myself with him in the efforts which he made to secure the passage of his bill. That evils have resulted from gambling upon the stock and grain exchanges there can be no doubt, and it is unfortunate that the necessary legislation has not been enacted to curb these meretricious and devastating activities.

The two corporations to which I have referred, as stated by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Brookhart], if I understand him correctly, were not created by farmers; they are not genuine cooperatives, as I have stated; they are not controlled by farmers; and, in my opinion, they exert too great an influence over the Farm Board and determine in a very large measure its policies and proceedings. I think we will hear more about these two corporations and their directors within a few days. I think they will be in Washington and will exert every possible influence with the Farm Board to secure a continuation of past policies or the adoption of policies desired by these organizations.

I return to the resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska. It proceeds as follows:

The committee shall likewise ascertain whether the said Federal Farm Board in its activities under said act has been, within the meaning and intent of said act, unjust to any existing cooperative organization, and whether said board has been guilty of any practices which tend to injure the operation or the activities of any existing cooperative organization.

The committee shall also ascertain whether, in the buying and selling of any of the products dealt in by said board by virtue of said act, its activities were advisable or necessary, or whether the trading in the buying, selling, and storing of grain, cotton, and other products was carried on in accordance with the intent of said act. The committee shall also ascertain what, if any, losses or benefits have been or will probably be sustained by any of the activities of said board or any other corporation organized by said board under said act.

The committee shall likewise ascertain whether any of the exchanges or boards of trade or other organizations privately owned and privately controlled, dealing in any of the products mentioned in said act, have in any way interfered with or hampered, wrongfully or unjustly, the activities of said board in carrying out the provisions of said act.

Without reading the entire resolution may I say that it charges the committee with further responsibilities and, as indicated, with the duty of making a searching investigaton into the conduct of the board and its subsidiaries. This investigation undoubtedly will inquire into these two Delaware corporations and by whom they are controlled; the loans which have been made; the disposition of the money that came from the Treasury of the United States; the securities for such loans and the use to which the loans have been put; the so-called regional cooperatives and their financial condition; the number that are insolvent; the losses that have been sustained or will be sustained, and the provisions which have been made or must be made to meet such losses; the amount which the Federal Government will be called upon to pay out of the $500,000,000 appropriated to meet defaults of regional or other cooperatives; the quantity of cotton and grain on hand; the per diem cost of caring for these impounded products; the losses which have been sustained and will be sustained by reason of the policy of the Farm Board in buying and holding wheat and cotton.

The committee will, of course, ascertain the loans which have been made to cotton cooperatives, the status of such cooperatives; indeed, the entire field covered by the resolution will be explored. Congress should know as soon as possible all the facts bearing upon the Farm Board and its activities, and also those relating to the cooperatives and organizations connected directly or indirectly with the Farm Board.

Mr. President, as I have stated, the resolution calling for this investigation was offered by a Senator whose efforts to aid agriculture are second to none in public life. It can not therefore be argued that the resolution was offered by one hostile to the farmers, but by one of their truest friends. I sincerely hope that the committee will proceed as expeditiously as possible with the investigation called for, in order that Congress may have at an early date the benefit of their report to aid in enacting such legislation as it may regard to be wise and proper.

The Senator from Idaho a few moments ago referred to communications received by him urging support, if I understand his statement correctly, of the Farm Board and the appropriations for it. I associate myself with the statement which the Senator made as to the position which he would take with respect to such communications. I have received a large number of telegrams and letters, many of them coming from organizations that had received loans from the Farm Board. I can not help but believe that some of the communications sent me were inspired by the Farm Board itself. The Committee on Appropriations of the House has been preparing a bill which will provide for the expenses of the Farm Board for the next fiscal year. It has been reported that the committee would reduce by several hundred thousand dollars the amount asked by the Farm Board to meet its expenses for the coming year. Immediately there were reactions in various parts of the United States, and letters and telegrams came pouring into Washington against such reduction. Mr. Stone, of the Farm Board, stated, according to the press, that the Farm Board was facing a crisis, and one of the newspapers quoted him as saying that it would be unable to function and its usefulness crippled if the appropriations were reduced as suggested.

Mr. President, in my opinion too large a sum has been appropriated to meet any legitimate expenses of the Farm Board. It, like other Federal organizations, has not practiced economy but has made demands for larger appropriations than were needed. It is one of the propensities of Federal bureaus and agencies and organizations to clamor for larger appropriations, for increased personnel. The condition of the Treasury and the burdens resting upon the people are not taken into account, as a rule, by officials in executive departments and bureaus. The President has stated that he is interested in consolidating Federal agencies and reducing expenses in the executive departments. An examination of the Budget submitted by him for the next fiscal year will reveal, in my opinion, demands for appropriations for the executive departments beyond all legitimate and proper requirements. The Budget estimate submitted by the President should be cut, not millions but several hundred million dollars. If Federal expenses are reduced and economies in executive departments are carried into effect, Congress alone, in my opinion, will be the instrumentality that will effectuate such results. The appropriation for the Farm Board should be reduced and the extravagant salaries which it has paid, and which it either authorized or approved and paid by its subsidiaries, should be radically reduced.

In my opinion, it is not an edifying spectacle to have members of the Farm Board making frantic protests against contemplated action by Congress with respect to expenditures of a Federal agency controlled by them. In view of the statement of Mr. Stone and the synchronization of telegrams and letters with his public statements, one can not help but entertain the suspicion that this was not a mere coincidence, but was the result of some direct or indirect influence emanating from Washington or the two chief subsidiaries of the Farm Board.

Mr. President, as I have stated, Mr. Schilling has been a member of the Farm Board for some time and knows of its activities and of the policies which it inaugurated and carried out. There is nothing in the record nor has anything been brought to the attention of the Senate to indicate that he disapproved of the policies of the Farm Board or that he now disapproves of such policies or is in favor of converting it, if that is possible, into an organization beneficial to the farmers of the United States.

As stated, I have no feeling against Mr. Schilling. There is nothing personal in my opposition to his confirmation. I rest my vote upon the proposition that he has been a party to policies conceived and carried out by the Farm Board that have been economically unsound, disadvantageous to agriculture, and injurious to the people of the United States.

Mr. President, I have received many letters and communications condemnatory of the board and highly critical of its methods and policies. Part of these have come from farmers and farm organizations, and some from persons in various walks of life. Permit me to read a few sentences from an address delivered by Dr. James E. Boyle, of Cornell University. He may be denominated a doctrinaire, but I think his views are worthy of consideration.

Our friends of the American Farm Bureau Federation set up two huge central marketing agencies in Chicago, the United States Grain Growers and the Grain Marketing Co., financed with private credit from the farmer. These experiments quickly faded from the picture.

Now comes the Farm Board, setting up one big central in Chi-ago and numerous large regionals. These are financed with cago and numerous large regionals. These are financed with cheap Government credit. But, like the experiments I have just named, these new ones pay high salaries, are extravagantly managed, show disregard of the sound principles of grain marketing, bring about increased costs, and are contrary to farmer psychology. So now we see signs of the break-up of this big and costly experiment. ment. Already Montana and North Dakota have pulled out of the

The Farm Board, he concluded, in addition to its other troubles, "is trying to carry two big corpses—200,000,000 bushels of wheat, 3,500,000 bales of cotton. This means a carrying charge of $175,000 a day, and even the United States Treasury can not carry such a lead indefinitely." 3.500,000 bales of cotton. load indefinitely.

Mr. President, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD a very few statements out of the hundreds that have been brought to my attention.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

FARM BOARD'S FIGURES SHOW HEAVY LOSSES—PRESENT PRICES INDI-CATE $42,000,000—ONLY ON PAPER, STONE SAYS

(Special from Monitor Bureau)

WASHINGTON, November 24.—The carefully guarded secret of the amount of wheat held by the Federal Farm Board was revealed to-day as 189,600,000 bushels. The information was given by Mr. James C. Stone, chairman of the board, at a meeting of the Senate publican), of Oregon, its chairman.

Agricultural Committee under Senator Charles L. McNary (Republican), of Oregon, its chairman.

The amount of wheat held is considerably larger than was currently estimated. The figures of wheat purchases and sales revealed that the board will have sustained huge losses in its stabilization operations, due to the decline in wheat prices, unless these prices rapidly rise. The total amount of wheat purchased during the entire stabilization proceedings, Mr. Stone said, was 329,621,052 bushels. The average price paid for this wheat was 31 and a fraction cents a bushel.

Mr. Stone denied that one could figure any "loss" for the board's activity while it was still in the open market. The figure of its loss or gain could not be estimated, he said, till the last sale was made. Losses so far existed only on paper.

ADMITS " PAPER " LOSSES

However, he admitted that present wheat prices at Chicago are only 55 cents a bushel, as against 81 cents which the board paid for its wheat. The board has sold much of its holdings, Mr. Stone said. On July 1 it owned 257,136,571 bushels, and to-day the amount is down to the 189,600,000-bushel figure.

As against the 81 cents a bushel purchasing price, the average sales price of the board's wheat has been only 55 and a fraction cents. Estimates made unofficially at the hearing in connection with Mr. Stone's remarks placed the total amount expended for all wheat purchased from time to time at around $263,700,000 at the 81-cent figure. The amount of wheat, if the balance is sold for the same 55-cent average as that sold to date, would bring back to the Farm Board only $181,300,000. This is a decline of around $82,400,000.

Mr. Stone said the wheat now held is stored in private and public elevators over the country. Carrying charges on the wheat run to  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cents to  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cents a bushel per month. The wheat also suffers from deterioration, although Mr. Stone said this could be minimized by better storage.

[From the New York World] IT CAN'T LET GO

Economically, the Farm Board's use of the taxpayers' money for Economically, the Farm Board's use of the taxpayers' money for the professed purpose of stabilizing the price of wheat and cotton has been a complete failure. When it stabilized cotton a year ago the price was 18 cents a pound; it is now 10 cents. Wheat likewise was selling a year ago at $1.22; it is now selling for 76 cents. The losses from these pegging operations which did not peg anything are estimated at approximately $70,000,000. The board is now in a position where it dare not let go, and where by belding on it becomes involved deeper and deeper in transactions. holding on it becomes involved deeper and deeper in transactions which must ultimately defeat their own purpose. It is merely duplicating the unfortunate experiments of Brazil with coffee and of the British East Indies with rubber.

[From the Washington Post, December 21, 1930] UNCLE SAM, SPECULATOR

The extent of the Farm Board's operations was revealed for the first time last week in a hearing called to consider its request for an additional appropriation of $150,000,000 to be added to the $250,000,000 already advanced. To assist in the marketing of various commodities, the board's net commitments come to $228,-000,000. Its actual advances amount to $186,000,000 and the repayments come to a paltry $66,000,000. For grain and cotton stabilization its commitments come to $145,000,000, the advances amount to $140,000,000, and the repayments total $56,500,000. Altogether, the board has purchased some 124,000,000 bushels of wheat, about half of which it holds in storage and the other half of which is represented by contracts for future delivery half of which is represented by contracts for future delivery.

It is no secret that the board's efforts to assist the farmer have fallen far short of expectations, despite the liberality with which Treasury money has been paid out in his behalf. Mr. Legge admits as much. Steadily the price of agricultural commodities has declined. More insistent becomes the demand of western Congressmen for additional relief measures. Louder and ever louder is the plaint of the farmers themselves. Mr. Legge finds himself in an increasingly difficult position, and now he proposes a step that would confirm the President's warning that "buying and that would confirm the President's warning that "buying and selling and price fixing must inevitably lead to bureaucracy and domination."

Mr. Legge proposes that the Government undertake to regulate all exchanges dealing in agricultural commodities. "At present," says Mr. Legge, "exchange rules and regulations are built up by the traders themselves. They are not in the interests of either the producers or the consumers. The traders can change them every day at their will. Under present legislation I can not find anyone who has authority effectively to deal with such exchanges. " * We think there should be an amendment to the regulations governing the exchanges to the end that they would not be permitted erning the exchanges to the end that they would not be permitted to make their own rules, except as they are approved by the Secretary of Agriculture or by some official designated by the Government for that purpose. We also feel that the Secretary of Agriculture should be given definite authority to enforce the rules after they have been approved."

The rules of the commodities exchanges are, of course, not drawn in the interests of the producer or the consumer. The function of the exchange is to provide a free and open market. The rules of the exchange are drawn with that in view. Supply and demand, those factors that inexorably determine price levels everywhere, are the fundamental basis of the rules of the com-modity exchanges. Mr. Legge proposes, in effect, that the Gov-ernment undertake to set aside the laws of supply and demand. This is bureaucracy at its worst.

The Farm Board soon will have spent $500,000,000 in behalf of the farmer. There will be no reason to complain if the expenditure fails to show tangible results. The Government agreed to devote that sum to the vast experiment that is now under way. Directly and indirectly, however, it would cost many times $500,-000,000 for the Government to set itself up as the only grain speculator in the United States.

[From the Wichite Beacon, February 21, 1932] FARM BOARD'S DEAL IN COFFEE EXPOSED

The Wichita Beacon to-day, on page 8, section A, publishes for the first time the amazing contract entered into by the Federal Farm Board with the Government of Brazil through which 25,000,000 bushels of stabilization wheat is traded for 1,050,000 bags of coffee.

On the opposite page is printed an estimate of this astounding transaction, which cost the Farm Board approximately $16,000,000, which comes out of the pockets of the taxpayers of the United States, working especially to the injury of the growers of wheat, the farmers of Kansas.

The stabilization wheat in question had better been dumped in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean than to have been bartered away in an illegal deal with Brazil.

On the basis of which the deal was made, at the most, the Farm Board will have received only 9 cents the bushel for the stabilization wheat traded to Brazil.

In all probability even that 9 cents a bushel will have been

In all probability even that 9 cents a bushel will have been wiped out by reason of overhead, storage charges for coffee, the deterioration of the Brazilian product before it is finally disposed of, which can not be, by the terms of the contract, until 1934. By what authority does the Farm Board engage in the coffee business? By what authority of law has the Farm Board a right to engage in the importing or export trade?

Read every paragraph of the analysis of the coffee contract printed in the Beacon to-day. Study the contract itself.

If this deal in coffee is an example of the Farm Board's methods of doing business, what further disaster may be expected from this vast governmental agency set up at the expense of the people through a half billion dollar congressional appropriation?

[From the Gastonia Daily Gazette, Friday, January 8, 1932] TIME TO CALL A HALT

A story of waste and extravagance unequaled for sheer ghastliness; a recital of millions upon millions of dollars gambled away in hopeless and impossible speculation; pay rolls and expenses run-ning into thousands of dollars a month; individual salaries equal to that drawn by the President of the United States; tremendous losses—such is the story being unfolded before congressional committees by the Federal Farm Board and its subsidiaries in Wash-

It is not a pretty story and the telling of it comes at a time of national and world-wide depression. It comes at a time when lit-erally thousands of people are suffering from cold, hunger, and ex-posure. At a time when individuals and business organizations must accept a smaller income and must watch expenditures with utmost care, we have this picture of another governmental bureau utmost care, we have this picture of another governmental bureau throwing money to the wind.

When our city, State, and National Governments should be reducing expenses in every way possible in order that we may carry the heavy load of taxation, it is unfortunate that the proponents of this unfortunate measure which gave us the Farm Board can not see that truly charity may begin at home and that the slashing of this unnecessary bureau will give a measure of relief.

This is no time for foolish experiment. With our mills, stores, banks and the whole of our country feeling the effects of the de-banks, and the whole of our country feeling the effects of the de-pression and with everyone's thoughts directed toward a reduction of expenses in Government, if we are to exist at all, it is time that we came to our senses and quit attempting foolish political experiwe came to our senses and quit attempting roots political experiments.

The time when a soap-box orator could attract attention by promising something for nothing is well past. This is all the Farm Board has done, and to-day the people of our country are looking toward the safe, sane leader who can come forward and in prosaic terms outline the sensible path to follow.

An examination of some of the statistics developed in a reading of the activities of the board and its subsidiaries is, to say the least, painful to the sensibilities. The Farm Board itself, with approximately 350 employees, appears to have a pay roll of not approximately 350 employees, appears to have a pay roll of not quite a million dollars per year. Then comes the Grain Stabilization Corporation, a subsidiary, with its pay roll of $34,000 per month. This mounts up to not quite half a million dollars a year. But far in excess of this comes the Farmers' National Grain Corporation, another subsidiary, with a monthly pay roll of nearly $196,000. Or, say, two and a quarter million dollars a year. Mr. Milnor, the head of the grain activities in these subsidiaries, receives $50,000 per year as a salary and is assisted by several men who receive in excess of $25,000 yearly.

Next in line we have the salary list of the American Cotton Cooperative Association. This amounts to over $92,000 per month, or another million dollars, plus, per year. E. F. Creekmore heads this organization at the magnificent salary of $75,000 yearly and an assistant at $35,000 yearly. One other vice president receives $15,000.

The salaries noted do not include those paid by the State cotton cooperatives, although Mr. U. B. Blalock, of Raleigh, receives $10,000 from the cotton cooperatives in this State, and it is to be assumed that a full list of all these State cooperative salaries would rank with the others shown.

No expenses are included in these salary lists. Nothing other

As the story further unfolds we find such items as: Loss in wheat stabilization, $102,000,000; loss in cotton stabilization, $75,000,000; costs of carrying the "stabilization stocks" of cotton, consisting of 1,300,000 bales, approximate, $6 per bale per year, or another $7,800,000.

another $7,800,000.

On top of these staggering losses we must consider the plight of the cotton cooperatives, supposedly separate and apart from "stabilization" and other activities of the board. It appears from the records that, acting on suggestions and with the financial help of the board, the American Cotton Cooperative Association, following a system of giving a farmer a 90 per cent value advance, accumulated some 2,000,000 bales of cotton from last year's crop. It now develops that the American association owes the Farm Board the tremendous total of $40,000,000. In addition, it owes to its members $10,000,000. a total of $50,000,000 debt. it owes to its members $10,000,000, a total of $50,000,000 debt.

These debts are unsecured, in so far as the value of the collateral is concerned. The cooperatives are saddled with it, and the sale of the cotton to-day would mean adding another $40,-000,000 to the losses as shown.

Now comes President Hoover with a recommendation that the board be given another $1,800,000 to be used as "administration expenses." Which seems to cap the climax.

Which seems to cap the climax.

The cotton manufacturer has been badly hurt because of the activities of the board, and we venture the assertion that our textile heads would breathe a sigh of relief if this drain on the Treasury could be stopped. Further, the abolishment of the board would, we think, greatly aid in allowing textiles a chance to recover.

We know the farmer is opposed to the board. He has plenty of sense and he knows that he can't grow his crop on orders from Washington.

We think it high time that the farmer, the textile manufac-turer, and our whole citizenship should enter a protest and should demand that the board be abolished at this session of Congress. It is time to call a halt.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am going to discuss but briefly the present nominee. I shall not refer to the general marketing act and how it has been administered. There are many things I would like to say in answer to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Norbeck] with respect to that act and the general purposes and practices thereunder, but it would be useless at this time. I am quite in accord with the distinguished leader on the other side, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson], that we should confine ourselves to the particular subject under consideration and the purpose for which we are in session to-day.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. King] seems to advance the argument that we should vote against the confirmation of Mr. Schilling in order to express our displeasure at certain salaries received by employees of the Farmers' National Grain Corporation. I think that is the burden of his speech. There has not been one word said to-day against the character or the ability or the administrative qualities of Mr. Schilling. The argument is all based upon the implication solely that because certain salaries have been paid by the cooperative organizations operating through a great national institution, somehow we should discountenance salaries of that kind by voting against Mr. Schilling alone. Mr. President, in all fairness, that is not the thing to do. Mr. Schilling has been a member of the board, it is true, since the time of its inception. The different members succeeded, happily, I think, in the organization of 27 units of cooperatives in the country dealing with grain and the great problem of marketing and merchandising.

That organized group was at no time under the control of the Federal Farm Board. It was an organization entirely and wholly independent of the board. That organization. of which Mr. Milnor is vice president and manager, is controlled by the cooperatives, embracing 250,000 farmers throughout the country over whom the Federal Farm Board has no control whatsoever. Mr. Milnor was hired at a salary which I am not attempting to justify and which, as I said earlier in the day, I think is unjustifiable and unconscionable.

Anyone at all familiar with the grain exchanges of the country knows that some of the most skilled and high-priced men in public life are in the employ of these organizations.

Hence it is extremely competitive, and I have no doubt that these 27 organizations known as cooperatives, which came together as the Farmers' National Grain Association, believed it essential, in order to compete in the great markets of the world, to hire men of the caliber of Mr. Milnor. I believe the salary to be too high. I think every Member of the Senate believes it is too high and that it is out of line with the salaries paid even men of that skill and ability at this time. But to charge Mr. Schilling, who was put on the board in July, 1929, when the contract with Mr. Milnor was made in the spring of 1930, seven months after its organization, when the matter was completely under the charge of those cooperatives—to charge Mr. Schilling with this particular thing that is so offensive to all of us is not fair to Mr. Schilling.

Let me ask the Senator from Utah [Mr. Kinc] if he can point to one thing in the administration of affairs while Mr. Schilling has been a member of the board that does not conform to the spirit and purposes of the act? Has anyone here accused Mr. Schilling of neglect of duty, with misfeasance or malfeasance in office, with any act that does not show an attempt and a desire to assist the cooperatives of the country in this work?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, does the Senator invite a response? I say that, considering his connection with the Farm Board and that the Farm Board is practically the head of and dominating control over this organization, he has neglected his duty in permitting these salaries to be paid.

Mr. McNARY. There is where the Senator from Oregon and the distinguished and able Senator from Florida disagree. The Senator from Florida makes a statement that is not borne out by the facts, and I am incapable of meeting a situation of that kind; hence I pass it by as I do the idle wind.

Thirty-nine years ago Mr. Schilling organized the first great creamery in the State of Minnesota. He is to-day one of the moving spirits in the Land O'Lakes Creamery Co. He has been all over the country, in from 42 to 48 States, preaching the advantages of cooperative marketing. He has been generous and fine regarding the necessity of furnishing adequate security for Government funds which have been advanced to creameries. If there is one man on the board who truly warrants the title of a dirt farmer it is Mr. Schilling, who was born and reared on a farm, who now holds large farm properties, who has devoted his life to cooperative work, and to-day is probably the most representative of those on the board so far as agriculture is concerned. Simply to defeat a member upon a mere implication because the board at one time did a certain peculiar thing, of which we do not approve, acting through another agency over which it did not have control, is not at all fair. Mr. President, I appeal to the fairness of the membership of this body.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I am sure that no one will suspect me of upholding some of the practices of the Federal Farm Board or of defending many of the things for which they have been criticized. I simply want to call the attention of the Senate at this time to the fact that if Mr. Schilling's nomination should be rejected the Senate will be in the position where it will heap all of its wrath upon one man, who, in my opinion, is no more to blame than are the other members of the board.

Mr. Thompson has been a member of the board for more than a year, and his nomination has been confirmed. Mr. Evans has been a member of the board since September, and his nomination has been confirmed. I do not know of any movement that has been started to correct the practices of the board of which complaint has been made.

I simply want to call attention to the fact that to me it hardly seems fair to select for punishment one man who certainly can not be said to be more to blame than any other member of the board. Either the board ought to be abolished or, in my opinion, all members of the board ought to be treated alike and their nominations confirmed.

I think what the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] said about Mr. Schilling is accurate. He knows something about cooperative marketing, and so forth. Whatever his knowledge may be, there is no justification for the practices of which the board has been accused and for which it has been censured; but I did not want this nomination to go to a vote without calling to the attention of the Senate the question of fairness and the propriety of treating all nominations of members of the Farm Board alike. I do not think, I repeat, it can be said that Mr. Schilling is more to blame than is any other member of the board.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Mr. Schilling? [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the Senate advises and consents to the nomination.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, does that conclude the Executive Calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are some post-office nominations on the calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, announcement was made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] yesterday that no other nominations than those pertaining to the Farm Board were to be considered to-day, and, while there was no unanimous-consent agreement formally entered, there was general acquiescence in the statement of the Senator from Oregon. So I shall object to the consideration of any other nominations at this time.

Mr. McNARY. I think that is quite appropriate. I move that the Senate—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

DISPOSITION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS

Mr. WALSH of Montana. As in legislative session, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The bill, Mr. President, deals with the disposition of the public lands. It provides for their transfer to the States. It is intended as a substitute for the bill introduced in the House, being the bill recommended by the commission appointed by the President to consider the subject. The bill which I have offered was prepared by a member of the commission from the State of Montana, the commissioner of State lands and investments of that State, who has given this subject very deep consideration, and whose discussion of the related problems excited, I believe, the admiration of everyone who was connected with the proceedings. He has prepared a statement concerning the bill, which I ask to have incorporated in the Record, and I ask that the bill also be printed in the Record and referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, as in legislative session, the bill will be received, ordered to be printed in the Record, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, and, without objection, the memorandum presented by the Senator from Montana will also be printed in the Record.

The bill (S. 4060) to grant vacant, unreserved, unappropriated, nonmineral lands to accepting States, and to authorize the President to establish national ranges in non-accepting States; to create a board authorized to determine as to the disposition of certain areas of public domain; to enable the United States, the States, and individuals to exchange lands for the consolidation of mingled areas, and granting lands to certain States to achieve that purpose; to provide for the control, disposition, and protection of stockwatering places and of intrastate and interstate stock driveways; and for the conservation of grazing resources, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, and, together with the statement, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 4060) to grant vacant, unreserved, unappropriated, nonmineral lands to accepting States, and to authorize the President to establish national ranges in nonaccepting States; to create a board authorized to determine as to the disposition of certain areas of public domain; to enable the United States, the States, and individuals to exchange lands for the consolidation of mingled areas, and granting lands to certain States to achieve that purpose; to provide for the control, disposition, and protection of stock-watering places and of intrastate and interstate stock driveways; and for the conservation of grazing resources, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc .-

LANDS GRANTED

Section 1. Subject to the terms, conditions, and exceptions hereinafter stated, there is hereby granted to each of the States of Washington, Montana, North Dakota, Oregon, Idaho, Wyoming, South Dakota, California, Nevada, Utah, Colorado, Arizona, and New Mexico certain lands within the boundaries of each of the said States, as follows: All the unappropriated and unreserved public lands, including the minerals therein; also all lands withdrawn or reserved on account of coal, oil, gas, oil shale, phosphate, potash, or other valuable minerals contained or supposed to be contained therein; also all lands restored to the public domain through the cancellation of homestead entries or other entries, rights, or claims; also all lands eliminated in any manner from national parks or monuments, national forests, Carey Act withdrawals, and lands reserved for reclamation purposes or withdrawn or reserved for other purposes, but only when and to the extent drawais, and lands reserved for reclamation purposes or withdrawn or reserved for other purposes, but only when and to the extent that these lands in any manner become eliminated from such parks, reservations, and withdrawals as hereafter provided in this act; also all minerals, including coal, oil and gas, and mineral rights, and other rights connected therewith, which have been reserved by the United States in the lands to which the title has passed from the United States under the homestead laws or other laws of the United States subject to mineral reservations. Helium gas is hereby reserved by the United States from all of the foregoing grapts.

Additional lands from the public domain may be reserved by Congress at any time before they have been clear listed to the States as hereinafter provided for national parks, national forests, and other purposes, and such lands are hereby excepted from the

RESERVATIONS, AND WITHDRAWALS—ABANDONMENT
Sec. 2. Lands within the boundaries of national forests found to be more valuable for grazing or agriculture than for timber production shall be eliminated therefrom, and such eliminated lands shall thereupon become subject to this grant and be clear listed to the States as hereinafter provided; lands adjoining existing national forests found to be more valuable for timber production than for grazing or agriculture shall be included within their boundaries, but all additions to national forests and eliminations therefrom shall be so made as to prevent jagged and irregular boundary lines. boundary lines.

Any reservation or withdrawal shall be entirely abandoned and the land restored to the public domain whenever it is found that the land restored to the public domain whenever it is found that the object for which the reservation was created or the withdrawal was made has lost its importance or is found not to be of such far-reaching consequence as to justify national administration; that the object sought can advantageously be accomplished through the activities of the State or through individual enterprise, or if the lands are found to be more valuable for agricultural or grazing purposes than for the purpose for which they were reserved or withdrawn.

The same principles shall apply to partial eliminations from

The same principles shall apply to partial eliminations from reservations and withdrawals.

In order to facilitate and expedite this readjustment of boundary lines and the abandonment of superfluous reservations and withdrawals a commission shall be created, as provided in section 4 of this act.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF THE GRANT

SEC. 3. (a) In accepting this grant each State must agree to charge a royalty of not less than 12½ per cent, payable in money or in kind, at its option, on all oil and gas produced and saved from the lands received through this grant and to pay 52½ per cent of the proceeds collected from all such royalties to the Treasurer of the United States quarterly each year, such money to be for the credit of the reclamation fund, so long as this fund is used in reclaiming arid lands in any of the 13 States named in this grant: Provided, however, That if at any time a smaller percentage of the proceeds of the oil and gas produced and saved from the public domain in States which do not accept this grant percentage of the proceeds of the oil and gas produced and saved from the public domain in States which do not accept this grant is paid into the reclamation fund, then the portion of oil and gas royalties to be paid into the reclamation fund from States which have accepted this grant shall be reduced to the same percentage. Whenever the Reclamation Service has ceased construction work in all of the said 13 States, such royalties shall no longer be paid to the Treasurer of the United States, but shall be retained by the State and added to the permanent school fund to be created from part of the lands granted by this act, as hereinafter provided.

(b) The United States reserves the right to prorate the quanof crude oil that may be produced and marketed from any of the lands hereby granted whenever this is deemed necessary in the interest of conservation, or to prevent overproduction, and to prescribe reasonable rules and regulations for all oll and gas operations on and in the said lands or connected therewith. The United States also reserves the right to take and remove helium gas from any of the said lands and the said lands or connected therewith.

omitted States also reserves the right to take and remove helium gas from any of the said lands and to regulate and control the production and disposition thereof by others.

(c) The lands hereby granted shall be subject to a right which is hereby bestowed upon any citizen of the United States to enter upon any of the said lands and prospect for metalliferous minerals therein during a period of 25 years from and after the approval of this act. When metalliferous minerals are discovered in commercial quantities during or effect the 25 years provide the approval of this act. When metalliferous minerals are discovered in commercial quantities during or after the 25-year period the discoverer shall, upon proper application to the State, be entitled to a perpetual mining lease subject to a royalty of 5 per cent of the value of the extracted ores or minerals at the mouth of the mine, which royalty shall be payable monthly to the State. The proceeds of all such royalties shall be added to the permanent school fund to be created from part of the lands granted by this act. The prospector or miner on any such lands shall also pay to the lessees and purchasers of the State fair and equitable compensation for any and all damages which may result to the land itself and crops and improvements thereon from such prospecting, mining operations, and other activities connected therewith. therewith.

The State shall enact all legislation necessary for the regulation of all such prospecting and mining, and matters relating thereto, both before and after the expiration of the said 25-year period.

of all such prospecting and mining, and matters relating thereto, both before and after the expiration of the said 25-year period, and the same percentage of royalty shall be paid to the State after its expiration as before, and shall be paid into the same fund.

(d) The lands passing to a State under the provisions of this act shall be subject to lease, sale, and other disposition as the legislature thereof may determine; but all sales of lands granted by this act shall be only at public auction after previous advertising; the lands sold shall be subject to the rights granted by this act to enter upon the said lands, prospect for metalliferous minerals, and to mine and remove the same. All subsurface minerals, including coal, oil, and gas shall be reserved from sale, but shall be subject to disposition through lease on a royalty basis. Any of the said lands may be exchanged for other lands of equal value and as near as may be of equal area when it is found advantageous for the State to do so in order to consolidate its holdings into more suitable units. When any such lands are exchanged for other lands the mineral rights shall pass with the lands exchanged by the State without reservations, but the same rights and reservations shall thereupon attach to the lands received by the State.

(e) Leases for grazing and agricultural purposes shall not be for a longer term than five years; mineral leases, including leases for the exploration for oil and gas and the extraction thereof, shall not be for a longer term than 20 years, except the perpetual leases for mining metalliferous minerals as provided in subdivision (c) of this section. Leases for the development of hydroelectric power shall not be for a longer period than 50 years.

(f) The State may also, upon such terms as it may prescribe, grant such easements or rights in any of the lands granted by this act, as may be acquired in privately owned lands through pro-grant such easements or rights in any of the lands granted by this act, as may be acquired in privately owned lands through proceedings in eminent domain: Provided, however, That none of such lands, nor any estate or interest therein, shall ever be disposed of except in pursuance of general laws providing for such disposition, nor unless the full market value of the estate or interest disposed of, to be ascertained in such manner as may be provided by law, has been paid or safely secured to the State.

(g) One-half of the lands granted by this act and clear listed, as nearly as practicable, shall be for the benefit of the public schools and shall be designated in the clear lists as "public-school land"; the remaining lands shall be available for other public purposes. All lands that suitably belong together on account of natural boundary lines or for other reasons shall be clear listed for the same purpose; but the clear listing shall be so alternated that when completed the "public-school land" is within 20,000 acres of the exact one-half of the total. The proceeds from the sale and other permanent disposition of any of such "public-school land," and from every part thereof, shall constitute a permanent fund for the support and maintenance of the public manent fund for the support and maintenance of the public schools of the State, to be safely invested and to be guaranteed by the State against diversion and loss. It may be administered by the State against diversion and loss. It may be administered as a separate fund or added to the permanent school fund originating in the lands previously granted by the Federal Government. The rentals from leases on such lands, and all the other actual income arising therefrom, including interest on funds, shall be available for the maintenance and support of such schools. Any State may, however, in its discretion, add a portion of the annual income to the permanent fund.

The remainder of the lands granted by this act, both the proceeds from their sale and other permanent disposition, and the income therefrom, shall be available for such public purposes as the legislature of the accepting State may from time to time determine.

(h) No part of this grant shall become effective as to any State until such State, through its legislative assembly, has accepted the grant under the terms and conditions upon which it is made, and such acceptance, duly certified, has been received by the Secretary of the Interior of the United States. Whenever any of the said States so accepts this grant within 10 years from the date this act is approved by the President, the grant shall immediately become effective as to such State, irrespective of the action of other States. (i) All lands not already surveyed shall be surveyed by the United States in the usual manner before being transferred and clear listed to the State.

(j) When a State has accepted this grant and the Secretar of the Interior has been notified of such acceptance as aforesaid, and the Secretary has notified the local land offices, no application and the secretary has nothed the local land offices, no application for a homestead entry or other entry under the laws of the United States to public lands within such State shall be accepted; but all homestead entries and other entries of public lands initiated prior to the date such notifications were received by the local land offices may be completed under the statutes, rules, and regulaiand onces may be completed under the statutes, rules, and regulations applicable thereto.

(k) The present ratio of participation by the Federal Government in the construction of Federal-aid highways within the accepting State shall be continued for a period of 10 years from the date of acceptance of the grant.

THE COMMISSION ON PARKS, RESERVATIONS, AND WITHDRAWALS APPOINTMENT, POWERS, AND DUTIES

SEC. 4. (a) When the Secretary of the Interior has been notified of the acceptance of the grant by any of the aforesaid States, he shall give notice thereof to the local land offices of the State concerned, and shall also notify the Secretary of Agriculture of such acceptance. Within 30 days of receiving the said notice he shall designate some suitable person already in the employ of his department to serve as a member of the commission on parks, reservations, and withdrawals for the accepting State. The Secretary of the s reservations, and withdrawals for the accepting State. The Secretary of Agriculture shall appoint one suitable person already in the employ of his department to serve as a member of the commission, and the said secretaries shall notify the member of the commission from the accepting State of the appointments made. The chief executive officer directly in charge of the administration of the lands heretofore granted by the Federal Government to the accepting State is hereby designated as the member of such State on the commission. When the State member of the commission has been notified of these appointments, he shall call a meeting to be held within 60 days from such notification at the capital of the State or some other suitable point within the State for the of the State or some other suitable point within the State for the first meeting of the commission.

(b) From records and information available the commission shall proceed to determine what lands subject to the grant are not likely to be included within national forests upon the rearrangement of their boundary lines, and which otherwise are available for immediate transfer to the State, and shall thereupon proceed to certify lists of such lands to the Secretary of the Interior. The lands so certified shall be clear-listed without awaiting the disposition of the remaining lands affected by the grant.

(c) The said commission shall then proceed to examine the boundary lines of existing national forests for the purpose of determining the proper readjustment of such boundary lines upon the basis of the principles stated in section 2 of this act. The commission shall from time to time make reports of its findings of the readjustment of such boundary lines; one to the Secretary of the Interior and one to the Secretary of Agriculture. The findings agreed to by the commission or by two members thereof as to such boundary lines shall be binding upon both the United States and the State, and the boundary lines so determined by the commission shall thenceforth be the boundary lines of such

It shall also be the duty of this commission to examine the boundary lines of national parks, game and bird reserves, Carey Act withdrawals, reclamation withdrawals, power-site withdrawals, lands withdrawns, recramation withdrawais, power-site withdrawns, lands withdrawn for stock-watering purposes, for stock driveways, and all other reservations and withdrawais, and make recommendations to the secretary of the department under which such reservation or withdrawal is administered with regard to elimination of lands therefrom, or the abandonment of such reservation or withdrawal and their restoration to the public domain. In all such recommendations the commission shall be guided by the principles stated in section 2 of this act.

(e) If the Secretary, to whom such recommendations are made, finds that they are in accordance with such principles, then he shall cause such lands to be eliminated from the reservation or withdrawal, or the reservation or withdrawal to be entirely abandoned as the case may be.

(1) The said commission may also submit recommendations to reserve additional areas for reclamation purposes, reservoir sites, national parks, and monuments, and other purposes when in its judgment such reservation is required for the good of the Nation.

(g) The commission shall continue as such and diligently prosecute its labors until the same have been completed; but it shall from time to time make report to the Secretary of the Interior of lands found to be available for transfer and clear listing to the State under the terms of this grant.

DUTY OF SECRETARIES TO ELIMINATE LANDS WITHOUT RECOMMENDA-TIONS FROM THE COMMISSION

Sec. 5. It is hereby made the duty of the Secretary under whose department a certain reservation or withdrawal is being administered to readjust the boundary lines thereof or cause the same to be abandoned entirely whenever he finds that such action would be in accordance with the principles stated in section 2 of this act without awaiting recommendations from the said com-mission; but this shall not deprive the commission of the power to reexamine the boundary lines so adjusted.

CLEAR LISTING

SEC. 6. It is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of the Interior from time to time to cause to be clear listed to the grantee

State any and all lands found to be subject to transfer under the provisions of this grant and so certified to him as expeditiously as the same can reasonably be accomplished. The clear lists shall show what lands are "public-school lands" and what lands are available for other public purposes, and shall accurately show the nature of the title conveyed. Title shall be in fee simple except as to the right to prospect for metalliferous minerals and mine the same, as granted in section 2 of this act, and except also as to any other vested rights which may previously have passed from the United States.

The clear lists shall be accompanied with information available as to the character of the land conveyed, its mineral possibilities, and other features affecting its use and value.

POWERS CONFERRED UPON THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR

SEC. 7. Full power is hereby conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior to do and perform all things necessary to carry this act into effect on behalf of the United States.

NOTES ON SUGGESTED LEGISLATION RELATING TO THE PUBLIC DOMAIN

Section 1: It will be noted that North Dakota and South Dakota are included among the grantee States, although they are not regarded as public-land States. According to the latest figures available there is less than 150,000 acres of vacant, unappropriated, and unreserved public lands in the State of North Dakota and less than 400,000 acres in the State of South Dakota; but vast coal resources have been reserved by the United States in homestead lands and other lands in these States, and section 1 specifically grants such mineral resources. If these States are specifically grants such mineral resources. If these States are not interested in obtaining title to these resources, their names may of course easily be eliminated.

It will be noted that with the exception of helium gas all minerals are included in the grant. It is thought that with the reservations and conditions set forth in subsections a and b of section 3 of the suggested measure, making provision for the continued support of reclamation and reserving the right to supervise and restrict oil and gas production in the United States, such granting of the minerals is in full accord with the recommendations of the supervision of the minerals is in full accord with the recommendations of the supervision of the s tions of the commission on the public domain. Section 5, page 2 of the report of the commission reads in part as follows:

"We recognize that the Nation is committed to a policy of conservation of certain mineral resources. We believe the States are conscious of the importance of such conservation, but that there is a diversity of opinion regarding any program which has for its purpose the wise use of those resources. Such a program must of necessity be based upon such uniformity of Federal and State legislation and administration as will safeguard the accepted property of the received when the received with the receive principles of conservation and the reclamation fund. When such a program is developed and accepted by any State or States concerned those resources should be transferred to the State."

The substance of this recommendation is that when any State has accepted and developed a policy that will safeguard reclama-tion and the principles of conservation then these mineral retion and the principles of conservation then these mineral resources should be transferred to the State. The said subsections a and b of section 3 fully meet these conditions. The conditions are not only met but by making them a part of the granting act the perpetual observance of the principles of conservation by the accepting State is permanently insured. And, by the way, is not this just about the only method by which uniform conservation policies can be established throughout 13 separate States? These problems will be discussed further under section 3.

It will be noted that the grant includes not only the unappro-

It will be noted that the grant includes not only the unappropriated and unreserved public lands but also lands which may hereafter be restored to the public domain through the cancellation of homestead entries and lands which may become eliminated from national parks, national forests, and other reservations and withdrawals. In view of the vast areas included in such reservations and withdrawals, this may constitute an essential portion. tions and withdrawals, this may constitute an essential portion of the grant.

Any student of the public-land problem should obtain a copy of the Public Land Statistical Table, prepared by the General Land Office under date of December 18, 1929, the most illuminating document placed before the Commission on the Public Domain.

The machinery and procedure for effecting readjustment of boundary lines and elimination of superfluous lands within reservations and withdrawals are provided in section 4 of the suggested measure.

ervations and withdrawais are provided in section 4 of the suggested measure.

The second paragraph of section 1 provides for making additional reservations from the public domain for national parks, forests, and other purposes. This is in full accord with section 2 of page 2 of the report of the commission.

Section 2: This section lays down in general terms the principles for the readjustment of boundary lines.

Section 3, terms and condition of the grant: Subsection a makes provision for charging royalties on oil and gas produced from the lands granted and for paying 52½ per cent of the proceeds collected into the United States reclamation fund. This is the same percentage which is now paid into such fund, and it may be worth emphasizing that by having this condition embodied in the grant the accepting State will thereby be bound to continue this contribution as long as reclamation carries on construction work in the West. It constitutes an insurance policy for the continued support of reclamation for a long time to come. Subsection b not only accepts the conservation policy developed by the National Government with reference to the production and disposition of oil and gas, but it explicitly reserves in the United States the right to supervise the development and distribution of these products. The power of the United States to continue this branch of conservation remains undisturbed and undiminished.

Subsection c grants to citizens of the United States the right Subsection c grants to citizens of the United States the right to prospect for metalliferous minerals in the lands granted without any supervision by the State or Nation during a period of 25 years. This simply amounts to continuing the present policy of the National Government. The same subsection provides that the discoverer of metalliferous minerals in commercial quantities shall be entitled to a perpetual mining lease subject only to a flat royalty of 5 per cent to be paid to the State and added to the permanent school fund. Prospectors and miners now living would strenuously object to any curtailment of their right to prospect for metalliferous minerals, and it is thought best not to attempt to do so. If a State should be granted the unrestricted right to charge royalties to the full extent that the traffic would bear, it would have the effect of discouraging prospecting and mining. would have the effect of discouraging prospecting and mining. There would be a constant apprehension in the mind of the prospector that no matter how rich mineral deposits were discovered, it would not bring any wealth to him as the State might take all the profits. By restricting the royalties that the State may charge to the flat rate of 5 per cent, this apprehension will largely be alleved. largely be allayed.

By fixing this flat royalty and by providing that it is to be paid into the permanent school fund, a form of perpetual conservation has been created which so far is new to the National Government. This is thought to be conservation of the truest and highest type. Subsections d, e, f, and g of section 3 embody restrictions upon the State as to the use and disposition of the lands granted and the proceeds therefrom. The administration of property held by the State through public officers and for the general good of all the people of the State is a problem beset with numerous and persistent difficulties. Sound principles and regulations for such administration specifically enumerated in the granting act will be of inestimable help. Being part of the conditions of the grant itself, part of the contract with the United States, these principles and regulations can not be altered with the shifting winds of public sentiment or the upsetting changes in the administration of public office. Restrictions along the same lines are recom-public sentiment or the upsetting changes in the administration of public office. Restrictions along the same lines are recommended in section 11, page 6 of the report of the commission.

The last portion of subsection d provides that the lands granted may be exchanged for other lands in order to consolidate the holdings of the State into suitable units, and stipulates that the lands exchanged by the State shall carry with them all the mineral rights, but that the restrictions in regard to minerals shall then attach to the lands received by the State. Full power to exchange the lands and thereby consolidate them into suitable units is of the utmost importance, and in order to facilitate this exchange it is essential that the lands exchanged shall carry with them all the mineral rights as the lands obtained will carry such rights. such rights.

Section 8, page 5, of the report of the commission recommends that authority to exchange lands be conferred upon the States.

Subsection g provides, among other things, that one-half the lands granted by the proposed act shall be designated as public-school land, the funds arising from the sale and other permanent school land, the funds arising from the sale and other permanent disposition of such lands to constitute a permanent school fund. There is no specific recommendation to this effect in the report of the commission; see subsection c of section 11, page 6; but the original recommendations of the President with regard to the disposition of the public domain, dated August 21, 1929, apparently contemplate that all the lands transferred shall be for "public-school purposes." The public school is evidently a permanent institution in the United States, and constantly increasing funds are likely to be required for its maintenance. It would, therefore seem highly appropriate that at least one-helf of the manent institution in the United States, and constantly increasing funds are likely to be required for its maintenance. It would, therefore, seem highly appropriate that at least one-half of the proposed grant should be set apart for the perpetual maintenance of this great American institution. If the use and disposition of this substantial grant are left entirely to the State legislature, it is reasonable to assume that it will be used for a multiplicity of purposes and ultimately be frittered away without leaving any outstanding results.

The last part of this subsection provides, among other things, that of the lands granted to the State of Montana 400,000 acres are to be set aside for a State land administration building. It is more than probable that other States may want portions of the grant set aside for specific purposes.

Subsection j provides in effect that when a State has accepted the grant and notified the Secretary of the Interior, and he in turn has notified the local land offices, homestead entries in such State shall cease. Until a State has decided to accept the grant State shall cease. Until a State has decided to accept the grant it would hardly be fair to the homestead seeker to deprive him of the rights which he now enjoys. The homestead laws are discussed on pages 11 and 12 of the report of the commission.

Subsection k provides for retaining the present ratio of Federal aid in highway construction through a period of 10 years from the date of the acceptance of the grant. This provision is practically copied from section 16, page 8, of the report of the commission.

In discussing Federal aid for public highways in his original statement President Hoover makes the following suggestion: "It would only be just if this allotment could be undisturbed for at least 10 years while the States were organizing their range conservation measures.'

It should also be borne in mind that it is likely to take several years after the grant is accepted before any considerable portion of the lands has been actually transferred to the States.

Section 4: Subsection a provides for a commission of three to examine the boundary lines of national forests and other reservations and withdrawals. In view of the liberal policy that has been pursued by the Government in the creation of reservations and withdrawals of all kinds, it is evidently desirable to reexamine their boundary lines so that the lands may be devoted to the purpose for which they are best suited. The task involved is huge.

Subsection c gives this commission of three practically final power to readjust the boundary lines of national forests. The findings agreed to by this commission as to such boundary lines shall be binding both upon the United States and the State. This is in substantial conformity with section 5, page 4, of the report of the Commission on the Public Domain except that a board of five members is recommended by the said commission.

Subsection d makes it the duty of this commission of three to examine the boundary lines of national parks, game and bird reserves, and other reservations and withdrawals of all kinds, and to make recommendations with regard to eliminations of lands therefrom or the abandonment thereof as the case may be. It should be noted that the commission does not have the power to make eliminations but simply to make recommendations to this effect. effect

Subsection e provides that if the Secretary, under whose deartment the reservation or withdrawal is administered, finds that partment the re the recommendations made are in accordance with the principles laid down in section 2 of the proposed act, then he shall cause such lands to be excluded from the reservation or withdrawal. It will be noted that in making the judgment of the Secretary the criterion of what shall be eliminated and what shall be rethe criterion of what shall be eliminated and what shall be retained there is really nothing mandatory in these provisions. It is reasonable to assume, however, that when individual cases are brought to the attention of the public and the officers having jurisdiction the necessary adjustments will to some extent be brought about. Recommendations on this subject are in full accord with the last paragraph of section 6, page 5, of the report of the Commission on the Public Domain.

Subsection f authorizes the commission of three to submit recommendations for additional reservations when required for the good of the Nation. This is in full accord with the first portion of section 6, page 4, of the report.

Section 5 is based on the theory that the department under which a certain reservation or withdrawal is administered in many cases will have sufficient data available for making eliminations without going to the expense of making an examination in the field.

Sections 6 and 7 will probably need no explanation. The lands are to be clear listed to the accepting States as soon as it has been determined that they are subject to the grant. This will result in a gradual transfer which is the only method by which the transfer can be effected. Clear listing is recommended in section 4, page 3, of the report of the Commission on the Public Domain. Domain.

Domain.

The outline prepared contains no suggestion as to what is to be done with regard to the public domain in States which do not accept the grant. The State of Montana, through Senate Joint Memorial 5, approved March 9, 1931, has expressed the deliberate judgment that it is willing to accept the grant substantially on the terms and conditions set forth in the foregoing outline. The States not choosing to accept the grant are obviously in the best position to say what legislation they want. It might be added to any act for transferring the public domain or embodied in a separate measure.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, MARCH 12, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

In this sacred stillness, O Lord, we wait. We bless Thee that there is a power not ourselves that makes for righteousness. Let this supreme truth inspire us with increasing hope and courage; Oh, put us all in harmony with it. In humbleness of heart we ask for another opportunity to work; may we have mental poise in all that we shall do. In our unwisdom may the fundamental principles of right and wrong be adhered to. We claim no exemption from duty, but we do pray for divine guidance in all our efforts to increase the stability and the prosperity of our country. Unto all our people be Thou the teacher of wisdom, the soother of grief, the healer of wounds, and keep the lamp of happiness burning at every hearthstone. About them may life be rich and full of heavenly love, and always sustained by the reflections of wisdom. Through our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following date the President approved and signed a bill of the House of the following title:

On March 8, 1932:

H. R. 5064. An act authorizing Vernon W. O'Connor, of St. Paul, Minn., his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rainy River at or near Baudette, Minn.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 252. Joint resolution to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to make an investigation as to the possibility of establishing a 6-hour day for railway employees.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1473. An act to authorize an appropriation for the relief of I. L. Lyons & Co.; and

S. 2822. An act for the relief of Anna Marie Sanford, widow of William Richard Sanford, deceased.

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE—KUNZ v. GRANATA

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I present minority views from the Committee on Elections No. 3 in the case of Kunz against Granata, and ask unanimous consent that they be published with the majority report as one document.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts presents minority views in the election case of Kunz against Granata and asks unanimous consent that they be printed with the majority report as one document. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to extend my remarks in the Record and embody therein a petition signed by 100 magnificent women from the little city of Albion, Nebr., urging their Representative in Congress to refrain from voting for any change in existing prohibition laws.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SALES TAX

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record upon the sales tax.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, every Member of this body realizes the importance of balancing the Budget. This has been expressed by everyone whom it has been my privilege to hear speak upon the revenue bill now before us.

I, too, want to pay my respect to the members of the Ways and Means Committee, with its great acting chairman. I have been deeply impressed with the sentiment expressed by Members on both sides of the aisle, and I am glad that we can let the great citizenship of our country know that none of us are looking upon this revenue bill as a partisan measure, but rather the result of careful and long consideration on the part of the committee with but one thought, and that being to bring before us what they believe to be the most equitable for all our people. I do not care to address myself, Mr. Speaker, upon the income-tax rates in this bill.

Others have covered this, and I have no objection to voting for the bill so far as that part of it is concerned. I do, however, want to speak briefly about the sales tax and on which, if I have any knowledge of the feeling of a great many of the Members of this body, I can not help but make some observations in opposition to parts of the bill as proposed. I can not with good conscience support the present sales tax embodied in the measure, particularly that relating to exemption of food products. It has been stated repeatedly by Members here that we are trying to present a measure that will cause as little additional cost in living to the great host of our citizenship as is possible. In your failure to exempt canned fruits and vegetables, which is the food upon which the great host of our people are dependent, you cause an additional living expense that I do not believe to be justified even under the present deficit in the Treasury. In my own district more than $10,000,000 are invested by our people in the canning industry, and I am reliably informed that during the past few years these canners have made less than 3 per cent profit in their operations, and many of them have been operating at a loss. They are obliged at this time to compete with Canadian products of like character; and if an additional 21/4 per cent sales tax is imposed upon this industry, you either compel them to discontinue their business or pay less to the farmer, who is already farming at a loss to himself. For me to try and explain the plight of the farmer is out of the question.

It has been stated so often on this floor of his conditions and I do not believe any Member has exaggerated the plight he is now in. I have received protests from every section of my district from farmers and canners, and this has caused me more alarm than any other feature of this revenue bill.

I do not subscribe to the popular cry "to soak the rich," because I realize that the rich have been soaked pretty thoroughly, but I do say that taxes should be imposed upon those best able to pay them. A sales tax of 21/4 per cent on canned fruits and vegetables is so objectionable to me that I could not support this measure, as much as I dislike to go against this hard-working committee, and one which I know has worked for so many weeks in trying to bring out this revenue bill. I have had protests concerning the tax on gasoline, admission taxes, ice-cream taxes, and so forth, but none of these bear a relation to all our people so much as that of the tax on canned goods. I can say with all of you that I dislike to vote for any tax upon our people, but our people realize that in order to bring back prosperity or a more normal condition to our people that we must do something to balance our financial Budget.

There must be a reduction in governmental expenditures, and I hope that the economy committee appointed by our distinguished Speaker will be able to make substantial savings in the administration and every other governmental activity. I have been pleased to learn from the committee of the anticipated savings in this respect for which every Member is to be commended. We must stop appropriating moneys for unnecessary projects and yet not to the point of causing additional unemployment. I would be very glad to have my own salary reduced and that of every other Member of both branches of Congress and the salaries of those in brackets above $2,000 or $2,500. A tremendous amount of money could be saved in this manner and much more than is proposed to bring to the Treasury from taxing foodstuffs. My colleagues, let us stay away from foodstuffs.

Very few of us fully realize the plight of the unemployed, the workingman whose salary has been reduced to the point where he can not afford to have us vote an increase in the us to defer balancing the Budget for one additional year than to do this, and I am very certain that we would not impair the credit of our great country by doing so.

It does seem to me to be unjust to tax the poor people of our country who want amusement, particularly those who save their pennies to go to an occasional movie that costs 25 or 35 cents.

Let us advance the exemptions to 50 cents and by so doing do less injury to that business, and which has suffered very greatly during the past few years, too; and at the same time not deny to those whose lives are not so very happy during these strenuous times the occasional opportunity for a little pleasure to help take away the gloom in their lives. The soul who can not want these persons to have a little joy in life must be unfortunate indeed, and I do plead with you, my colleagues, that you try and see the justification of those of us who object to these features of the bill. I feel our great American citizenship will respond loyally and with that patriotism that has ever characterized them in the past, but we will all feel better if we add the exemptions I have named.

ECONOMY IN GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Speaker, members of the committee, with an estimated deficit for the fiscal year 1932 of $2,240,-000,000 and for 1933 of $1,738,000,000, economy, retrenchment, a careful curtailment of expenses to the minimum have become the imperative necessities facing Congress in this session. The growing realization of the seriousness of the situation, the need for drastic action, and the grave responsibility that is ours are evidenced by the stormy course which besets every appropriation measure in both Houses and by an increasing number of bills introduced providing for a reduction in the expenses of government.

I have voted against every appropriation requested at this session with the exception of those required for the actual running expenses of government, but we must go even farther. We must reduce the running expenses of government.

As a temporary emergency measure I introduced early in the session a bill providing for a reduction in the salaries of Federal employees for one year only, including Members of Congress, the Army, Navy, and, in fact, all Government employees and officials not specifically excepted by the Constitution. With the reductions as proposed, the wages and salaries of Federal employees would still have a greater purchasing power than in 1930 and for several years prior thereto. Labor, with 6,000,000 men out of employment, the farmer with a 40 per cent reduction in the purchasing power of farm products, and, in fact, the business, professional, and unofficial classes throughout the entire country are bearing their share of the burdens of depression. Why should Federal employees and officials, enjoying the benefits of steady employment, object to shouldering a portion of the load? Why should they remain a preferred class? Should they not be willing to share in the general reduction forced upon the country and cooperate in a policy of retrenchment to minimize the imposition of increased taxes?

This was my attitude when I presented my bill, but after limited hearings the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments refused to report any measure for salary reductions, and tabled the proposed legislation in committee.

Since that time, however, there has been a growing sentiment in Congress and throughout the country in favor of reduced Government salaries. There are now pending in both Houses a number of bills making such provisions, the special House Economy Committee is making a careful study of the matter with a view to making its recommendations in the near future, and the probability is that some legislation will be enacted in this field by this Congress.

Uncle Sam's pay roll, including 1,032,422 persons in the executive and legislative branches and in the military percost of the necessities of life. It would be much better for sonnel, amounts to $1,338,778,231.12, apportioned as follows:

Number and cost of salaries of civilian employees 1 and of the military personnel 2

[Compiled by the Bureau of the Budget]

	Number	Salaries
Civilian: Executive branch Legislative branch 1	732, 460 9, 049	$1, 055, 970, 636, 55 23, 087, 764, 00
Total Military	741, 509 290, 913	1, 079, 058, 400. 55 259, 719, 830. 57
Grand total (not including judiciary)	1, 032, 422	1, 338, 778, 231. 12

The Garber bill provides for a temporary reduction in salaries, for a period of one year, ranging from 10 per cent on salaries from $1,800 to $2,500 to 25 per cent for those in excess of $5,000, and would result in a saving to the Government of a total estimated amount of $131,169,571.95. The following analysis of the measure shows in detail its effect and the total reduction in expense which would be accomplished by its enactment.

Proposed reduction	Salaries affected	Amount of reduction
EXECUTIVE AND MILITARY
25 per cent	$5,000 or more	$15, 058, 815. 45
20 per cent	$3,500 to $5,000 $2,500 to $3,500	24, 332, 730. 00 27, 295, 412. 16
10 per cent	$1,800 to $2,500	61, 526, 090. 34
LEGISLATIVE
25 per cent	$5,000 or more	1, 199, 350. 00
20 per cent	$3,500 to $5,000 $2,500 to $3,500	171, 716. 00 490, 088. 00
10 per cent	$1,800 to $2,500	1, 095, 370. 00
Total		131, 169, 571, 95

My bill is an emergency measure, a temporary necessity. The ultimate necessity is for reorganization of governmental agencies, for coordination of efforts and activities, for the elimination of duplication and waste, which will actually reduce governmental costs to a minimum.

We have been caught in the meshes of our heedless lethargy. We have witnessed the dizzying skyrocketing of Federal expenses, the multiplication of bureaus, boards, and commissions with careless disregard for duplication and efficiency. We have intermittently discussed the needs for reorganization and bewailed the increasing costs of Government, and yet never have we subjected its organization to a general realignment of functions according to a unified administration plan. Only now, with the rigid fingers of bureaucratic control and costly inefficiency at the throat of democracy itself, are we stirred to actual contemplation of legislative action to place our Government on a sound, economic, business basis. It is estimated that by such reorganization we could effect an annual saving of a billion dollars, half of it in direct appropriations and the remainder in the cost which citizens bear in essential contacts with their Government.

Economy, retrenchment, reorganization, curtailment of expenses to a minimum! These are our dire necessities now! But more than that, they are our sacred obligations to the American people who have manifested in this great national emergency a splendid, unselfish, patriotic spirit unequaled in the world's history!

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I am constrained to object. Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I have not made that request since Congress convened. I ask for only five minutes' time, and it is upon an important matter.

Mr. CRISP. I shall withdraw the objection, but I shall object to anyone else. I think the tax measure is a matter of the highest importance and should not be interfered with.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the subject of the gentleman's remarks?

Mr. FISH. I want to present some information immediately to the House in regard to the shipment of munitions of war from this country. I think the House ought to have it.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I think the tax bill is more important in the matter of not rocking the boat at just this time. I object.

GENERAL LEAVE TO PRINT

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House be permitted to extend their own remarks in the RECORD on the tax bill for 10 legislative days.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman mean after the bill has been completed or from now on?

Mr. CRISP. I shall change the request to five legislative days after the House has concluded its consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that all Members of the House have five legislative days after the passage of the tax bill to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE REVENUE BILL OF 1932

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes. Pending that, it is apparent that further general debate is desired on this measure. My own desireand I am sure I state the sentiment of the committee—is for the House to have full opportunity to consider the bill. Therefore it will be necessary to have further general debate next week, when the bill is again taken up.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10236, the tax bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the revenue bill of 1932, with Mr. BANKHEAD in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. With the indulgence of the committee, the Chair will state that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] has consumed 4 hours and 15 minutes; the gentleman from Georgia, 2 hours and 35 minutes; the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Doughton], 3 hours and 24 minutes.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have by arrangement reached an agreement that this side shall use time until it has used approximately the same time used on the other side, and in that respect I suggest to Members on this side who expect recognition that they remain where they can be available. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to correct an item that appears in this morning's Washington Post. It reads as follows:

President Hoover will accept the sales tax and other provisions of the bill, the House was told by Representative Allen Treadway, Republican, of Massachusetts.

I positively did not make any such assertion. The Record will show exactly what I did say, which is as follows, in answer to a question put to me:

I have not the slightest idea what the President of the United States thinks about the bill.

I want that to appear definitely, because certainly I would not presume to speak for the President of the United States.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. No. I yield back the remainder of my

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia].

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I realize that the Committee on Ways and Means had a difficult task before it. What I may say in the course of the debate I wish to assure the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Crisp] is not in criticism of the committee that reported the bill, because I realize fully how difficult it must have been to bring in a bill which would raise anything like the necessary revenue.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. LaGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. CRISP. I simply desire to say to my friend that I know I have his friendship and confidence as he has mine.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I thank the gentleman. That will make it much easier for me this morning.

Now, I want to say that it requires no particular courage to vote against a tax bill. It is the easiest thing in the world for a legislator to vote against a tax bill and then go home and be a good fellow to everybody concerned, because no one likes taxes.

The appeal that I want to make to-day, in all earnestness, is the possibility of getting together so that we may pass a bill which will raise something like the revenue which the Government needs at this time. I am sure that, as far as the progressive group in this House is concerned, we are anxious to assist in raising revenue, and we will leave the raising of the noise to some of our conservative friends. [Laughter and applause.]

The administrative features of the bill are very well drawn. The income-tax feature, as far as it goes, is quite a step forward; but, Mr. Chairman, for 20 years in this country, and surely for the last 14 years since I have been here—and I was here in 1917 when we voted the war revenue bill—there has been a determined effort to write into our law a sales tax. A sales tax by any other name is just as odious, even if it is called a manufacturers' tax, because revenue, unlike synthetic fertilizer, can not be taken from the air. The manufacturer is going to pass it on to the ultimate consumers. There are three ways only of paying a sales tax of this sort. First, the consumers; or second, if absorbed it is taken out of wages; or third, it is taken out of the cost of the raw materials. Undesirable in any way.

Now, let us be frank about these things. Let us at least concede existing facts.

This will put $600,000,000 on the people of this country, and it is only an entering wedge. I will tell you when this country may listen to an argument for a sales tax. Some time in the future, perhaps in the next generation, when we will have some sort of an industrial democracy in this country; when we will not have the concentrated wealth that to-day controls industry, business, commerce, agriculture, and perhaps even the Government. [Applause.] But we have not yet arrived at that time. That being so, I want to make one suggestion. I realize that it is extremely difficult to write a revenue bill on the floor of the House. I want to make a constructive suggestion. We can not hide the fact that there is a sharp division of thought in this House on the sales tax-manufacturers' tax, as it is called in this bill. Would it not be possible to have a vote on that section, and if the manufacturers' tax is voted out of the bill, then the Committee on Ways and Means may take the bill into committee and bring back a substitute source of revenue?

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman desire me to answer?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I would like to have the gentleman consider it. Certainly I would like to have an answer.

Mr. CRISP. I realize the force of what the gentleman says. The committee will have meetings in the mornings to consider suggestions made relative to the bill. They may have some committee amendments to suggest. I do not think it would be advisable to vote on the proposition of eliminating the manufacturers' tax until possibly it may have been perfected. It may be amended in such way that the House may desire to retain it or the House may not desire to retain it, but I will say to the gentleman that it is my intention, should that tax be eliminated, to have the Ways and Means Committee consider a plan to offer in substitution for it. I will say further for myself, it is immaterial to me what plan is adopted that will raise sufficient money to balance the Budget. I firmly believe it is essential to do that.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I thank the gentleman, and I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. CRISP. I am supporting and will support to the extent of my ability the bill which the committee has brought out, because we believe it is the most equitable, just, and fair way to accomplish the purpose.

Mr. Laguardia. And I will say that if the manufacturers' sales tax is stricken from the bill, the only plan that can be intelligently considered would be some plan which the committee would bring in, because if we are going to start individual plans, and take item for item, there is danger that we may have an accumulation of votes on different items, and we may come out with an unbalanced bill.

I want to say there has been a great deal of misapprehension created in the minds of the American people on the condition of the Treasury and the causes for that condition. The average citizen, because of statements made on the floor of this House, is under the impression we are spending $4,000,000,000 a year on budgetary appropriations which could be reduced by 50 per cent. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is not true. The increase in the appropriation and in the current expenses of government is not the result of increases by Congress in current necessary Government expenditures; but it has been brought about, first, by the war. We can not get away from that. I shall give the figures in a minute. It is an aftermath of the war. And, secondly, it has been brought about by extraordinary conditions, physical and economic, which have required the appropriation of large amounts of money. The depression has caused such a decrease in the revenue of the Government as to unbalance the Budget to an unprecedented degree.

Now, of this $4,000,000,000 there is one billion immediately accounted for in the debt service.

In the current appropriation bill we find an item of $640,000,000 for interest and an item of $426,485,000 to take care of maturing bonds, unless we pass the maturing bonds on to the national debt by the issuance of more long-term securities. Now, there is $1,066,485,000 accounted for in debt service, and all the economies which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] and the Committee on Appropriations can exercise will not be able to touch that amount. So there is a billion dollars accounted for, and that is a war item. Each of these items reflect an increase above the amounts required for the current year. I want to mention this to give some of my colleagues who believe in issuing more bonds for current expense an illustration of how the national debt directly reflects in the cost of government. Last year we appropriated $605,000,000 for interest, the amount this year is $35,000,000 more, the sinking-fund requirement last year was $411,771,300, this year it will be about $15,000,000 more. This is due to the deficit in the Treasury which has been passed on to the next generation by adding it to the national debt in the shape of long-term bonds. Such financing immediately increases the annual budgetary requirements and places millions of dollars of interest on the backs of the taxpayers. Then, of course, there is the great danger of soon, and perhaps very soon, arriving at a point where the Government will be unable to borrow.

Then we come to another war item, and that is the cost of the Veterans' Administration.

Under Resolution No. 3 we appropriated $203,825,000; in the first deficiency bill $46,872,975 for veterans. In the current appropriation bill there is $928,387,795 in the Veterans' Administration, and as to this amount in the appropriation bill it has been stated on the floor that it may be $50,000,000 short of the committed requirements. So here we have another $1,000,000,000 as a direct result of the war. Yet all of you courageous gentlemen who talk about economy and who jump on me when I try to maintain the standard of wages and the American standard of living, I would like to see how many of you are going to stand up and vote for a decrease in appropriations made for disabled and deserving veterans. Let us be frank about this thing. So we have here well over $2,000,000,000 as the direct result of the war, which can not be decreased. In addition to that we have had extraordinary conditions, such as floods, which have added to our appropriations for rivers and harbors and flood relief. We have had droughts, and we have had such miserable financial control as to ruin the farmer. We have appropriated $500,000,000 for the Farm Board.

We have appropriated $500,000,000 for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. We have appropriated $125,000,000 for increasing the stock of the Federal land banks. Right here are three items amounting to $1,150,000,000. Somebody will tell me we are getting stock and commodities. That I will concede; but in the meantime we are putting out good cash for engraved paper and surplus unsalable crops. Now, take $750,000,000 spent for the Army and Navy—you will find that we are not spending any more, not a penny more, than is required for the normal minimum needs of running this Government.

Now, let us get back to the tax. Why are we opposed to a sales tax? Because, in the first place, it is unscientific and difficult of administration; and, in the second place, it puts a burden out of all proportion on a large majority of our people; and third, because it is contrary to the American system of taxation.

The gentleman from Georgia took as an example a family spending $1,000 for the maintenance of that family, excluding, of course, items that are exempt like bread, milk, and eggs. Gentlemen, when you have exempted eggs in these days of unemployment it will do little good in my city because eggs to-day are a luxury to the mass of unemployed workers. I grant that bread, milk, and flour are exempted: but take other household necessities-clothes. shoes, stockings, furniture, cleaning materials, and prepared foods-all enter into every family expense list. We all know that under our present system of living a great deal of prepared food is used. Lard, oil, canned food, and sausages are taxed. The gentleman from Georgia points out that such a family would pay about $20.25 a year. However, the average income of that family may only be $1,500, so that such a tax is unbearable and out of all proportion to the income of that family. We have other sources from which we might properly derive taxes. I believe we all agree that taxation should not only be distributed where it can best be borne but also in accordance with the proportion of the benefits derived from government. The working people of this country contribute more than their share and get less in return. I am sorry to say, than the taxpayers who are fortunate enough to be included in the higher brackets. It is the working people who create the wealth. We have not yet reached the time when a sales tax should be imposed on the American people.

I will grant that this demand for a sales tax is by no means partisan. There is no partisanship on anything that goes beyond $1,000,000. That is a conclusion from my observation. [Laughter.]

You will find men who will come to the gentleman from Georgia and say, "Ah, Charlie, you are a great statesman—so constructive. That sales tax sure is wonderful. By jove, we are lucky in having a man like you on the Ways and Means Committee." They said the same thing to splendid old Judge Green, and when he insisted upon holding his inheritance tax in the law they kicked him upstairs. You know that. They made him a judge. [Applause.] Do not be deceived by these compliments of constructive statesmanship when you are asked to put on a sales tax. The American people are going to resent it and will not stand for it. The tax dodgers of the higher brackets have been urging a sales tax ever since we have had an income tax. We are not going to give it to them now.

You have a right to ask, What do you suggest in its place? I have submitted a tentative plan. Very little of it is original; none of it is original, and most of the items have been discussed in your committee. I agree that in opposing any feature in the proposed bill we should be ready to support a substitute to raise revenue.

I know that the items which I will mention from now on will be unpleasant, and I will be criticized by some. My proposition is based on the dire necessity of raising additional revenue and offered as the lesser of two evils. you to do this: In considering the items which I will now suggest, please compare them with the burdens and iniquities of the sales tax and determine whether or not they are less odious than the blanket comprehensive sales-tax plan contained in this bill. I would not think of offering them cold and unless there was an abnormal need for revenue, and as a fair method of destroying the sales-tax idea. I offer them as a substitute for the most unfair and most un-American tax that has ever been suggested, and that is the sales tax. When I do this, gentlemen, I realize the displeasure I will incur in certain powerful quarters in my city.

If it is a question of whether I shall seek editorial praise or the gratitude of the people I represent, I am going to stand by the people and let powerful interests inspire all the editorials they want against me.

Now, I suggest in my plan a stamp on checks and drafts. We had this during the Spanish War. Let some one stand up from my side and say, "Oh, that is radical." Well, if it is, Ogden Mills, Secretary of the Treasury, recommended it before the Committee on Ways and Means, and I am sure no one will ever charge him with being radical in his economics. This would raise $95,000,000. You may say it is a nuisance, and, of course, it is. Not so much of a nuisance as to pay a tax on baby clothes and a pair of stockings and a pair of shoes, soap, or a can of beans.

I propose a 10 per cent tax on the annual rental of safety-deposit boxes, to be collected by the safety-deposit companies or the banks, and this will bring in $5,000,000.

I suggest a 5-cent tax on every contract, conveyance, deed, lease, or agreement in writing. This has been tried in other countries. It is not burdensome; and a 5-cent stamp on any agreement in writing will bring in, it is estimated, $10,000,000. This $10,000,000, of course, is just an estimate. It can not be anything else, because we have no data or figures on the subject.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman somewhere in his remarks tell us how he arrives at his estimates?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The $95,000,000 figure is a Treasury estimate. The estimate of $5,000,000 on safety-deposit box rentals is interesting. We got that in this way: The only complete record we could find on safety-deposit vaults was in New England. We took the percentages of banks in that area with the amount of business and made a computation of the other sections, taking into consideration population and area and volume of business, and arrived at our estimate in that way.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The estimate with respect to the stamp on contracts is as conservative a guess as we can make.

Then we come to stamp taxes on receipts—receipts for the payment of money or property—and we estimate this after taking a very conservative percentage of the number of checks issued during a year and we arrive at a figure of $25,000,000.

The substitute tax on the stock transfers and loans—we take the rates recommended in the committee and add 2 cents on the loan of stock. The committee's rate is 4 cents a share on transfer and 4 cents on loan of stock. Our proposed substitute increases the tax on stock loans to 6 cents a share. Taking the estimates of the committee and adding the 2 cents or the proper proportion thereof, we bring that | increase I suggest, a 49 per cent over $1,000,000, would bring item up to $40,000,000. The committee estimate is $28,000,000.

Now, gentlemen, there is one item of taxation that has been overlooked-I suggested it before the committee-and that is a bond-transfer tax; and I submit that 10 cents on every $100 of the face value of a bond or on the original issuance of bonds is not exorbitant and is a tax that can be easily collected. This would bring in $10,000,000, and the amount is based upon the amount of transactions on the New York Stock Exchange, the curb exchange, and the percentage of business which the New York exchanges do in relation to the volume of business of exchanges throughout the country. The figure of $10,000,000 is very conservative. I think it would be much higher.

Now, I plan a 5 per cent tax on radio and phonographs. The bill as brought in by the committee would tax them 21/4 per cent. While phonographs and radios are useful, desirable, and educational, after all they may be properly classified as a luxury for purposes of taxation, taking the condition of the country into consideration. This would bring in $30,000,000. The amount is a Treasury Department

I would tax the gross receipts of radio advertising or broadcasting advertising 5 per cent; and surely any industry which is dependent entirely upon the public domain can not complain if we tax them 5 per cent of their gross receipts. This would bring in $5,000,000. I base this estimate from statements made by officials of radio companies.

I put in a sales tax of 5 per cent on cosmetics and perfumes. This has been suggested by many, and I get my figures from the manufacturers' census. This tax would amount to about $15,000,000. Over $150,000,000 is the wholesale value of the sale of cosmetics and perfumes.

Now, the bill contains an item which is suggestive of another source of income. It provides a licensing fee for manufacturers. Inasmuch as every corporation must file an income tax, it occurred to me that we could devise a tax on a sort of compromise between a capital-stock tax and the fee suggested in the bill by providing a registration fee annually for every corporation, regardless of whether it paid taxes or not. I would start with a corporation capitalized at $10,000 and tax it $5 a year, and then taking it up in steps from $10,000 to $150,000 and from $150,000 to $250,000 and upward to $5,000,000 capitalization and over and taxing them $5, $10, $20, $30, $40, $50, and $100, up to $500 for all corporations with a capitalization of over $5,000,000. Surely this is not exorbitant. It would hardly be felt by any corporation. Any small corporation could afford to pay a Federal tax of $5 or $10 if it does not pay any other tax. This would bring in something like $50,000,000. This estimate is based on the number of corporations that filed income taxes and an approximate estimate of their capitalization taken from the old capital-stock payments of 1921.

I take automobiles and trucks and simply apply the same tax that they would have to pay under this bill. There is no increase. This would bring in $68,500,000.

We would have two and a quarter per cent tax on passenger automobiles, exactly as it is in the committee bill, but on trucks I reduce it to one and a half per cent and on accessories to 2 per cent. So on trucks and accessories my rates are even lower than the rates proposed in the committee bill, and my figures are taken entirely from the estimate of the Treasury Department that it will bring in $68,500,000.

On jewelry and precious stones I take the rates of the 1921 act, and the figures there make allowance for decrease in business and estimate the jewelry tax at about $20,000,000 on a 5 per cent retail rate.

Then I graduate the income tax from the present 40 per cent rate maximum on incomes over $100,000 and increase it up to 49 per cent on incomes over $1,000,000. Other efforts will be made on the floor of the House, which I think may carry, increasing even the 49 per cent rate, at which I start with $1,000,000, bringing it up to 60 per cent; and, of course, I would join any such movement that may be made. The in $10,000,000, according to the Treasury estimate.

Then I take an increase of 1 cent on first-class postage. The 2-cent rate is increased to 3 cents, and in this way get another $135,000,000. The Treasury Department estimate is $150,000,000, but I take the Post Office Department estimate of $135,000,000.

Now, of course, the increase in postage is not popular, and a great many may complain, but I say that you must take these items in this substitute plan and compare them with the proposed sales tax, and when you make the comparison you will see how much better, how much less burdensome, it would be to collect the $500,000,000 under the suggestions

Another thing, I want to appeal to the Members of the House who are against the oil tax that we must stand together. Do not permit sales-tax advocates to separate our forces. I want to say that any man who is in favor of the protective tariff is going to have some job in taking the floor to oppose the tax on foreign oil. [Applause.]

If you are consistent, now is the time. We have a direct interest in the East in that matter. I know that it will be strongly argued that a tax on foreign oil may increase the cost of oil in the East, but we must look at the proposition as part of our present system. Suppose we do pay a fraction of a cent more for gasoline. We know that if we can rehabilitate the oil industry in the West and the Southwest. we will place a large number of people in employment, reopen many activities, create new purchasing power, then those people, by virtue of these measures, will be able to buy more of our goods. [Applause.]

It may cost us a little more on the Atlantic border, but it will be more than made up by increased demands for our manufactured products of the East. We must look at this proposition from a national point of view.

So I say to you oil people, do not be scared by a threat that if the sales tax goes off the oil tax goes off with it. Not at all. We can easily take care of that. In the face of the tariff history of the Republican Party, I do not believe there can be real opposition to a protective tariff on oil. I can not imagine the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] standing here on this floor and opposing your oil tariff. A tariff by any other name is just as Republican as anything else. [Applause.]

I appeal to you oil people not to be deceived or trapped in any scheme that involves the parliamentary situation. We will be able to take care of that. The oil protection to which you are justly entitled has no place in being stuck and sandwiched in the sales-tax section.

I have absolutely no pride in my plan. I am willing to cooperate with the Committee on Ways and Means. All we ask is that for the best interests of the country, realizing the necessity of increasing the revenue, we should take a broad national but fair view and pass a bill in accordance with the traditions, and not at this time of stress write into the law a tax feature which special interests have been trying to impose on the American people in order to relieve a few who are better able to pay the taxes.

I want to assure the gentleman from Georgia that he will find that we will cooperate with the committee, and do everything possible to get a balanced bill, but we will fight to the very last ditch against a sales tax. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. According to the morning paper, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] says that under it that is, the sales tax—a family which spends only $1,000 a year for the necessities of life would have to pay $22.50 in taxes. Considering the fact that nearly all the food products are exempt, how does the gentleman get that sum of $22.50?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Not all foods are exempt. There are other things beside food. There is clothing-

Mr SNELL. The two big items are food and rent.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. If the family spent $1,000 on taxable goods, they would pay $20 of that under this sales-tax program.

Mr. SNELL. But the gentleman said $1,000 for the necessities of life.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I insist upon that. Clothes are a necessity, shoes are a necessity, household furniture is a necessity, and many articles of food are not exempt.

Mr. SNELL. But the gentleman assumed that every one of these things is taxed, and they are not. I want the gentleman to be fair. He said we ought to be fair about this.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Every family in the United States is going to be taxed if this sales tax ever goes into effect.

Mr. SNELL. Is the statement the gentleman is purported to have made this morning in the newspaper fair?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I stand by that statement.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman please state the total amount to be raised by his proposed tax?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. About $518,000,000. [Applause.] I will here add the various suggestions in itemized form, including also my appeal to the responsible leadership of the House.

MARCH 11, 1932.

FROM F. H. LAGUARDIA TO THE SPEAKER, MAJORITY FLOOR LEADER, CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS, MEMBERS OF CONGRESS:

My Dear Mr. Speaker and Colleagues: I find a strong current of opposition to the so-called sales tax. I am aware of the depleted condition of the Treasury. I realize the necessity of new sources of revenue. Attempts to establish a system of sales tax in this country have repeatedly failed. It is my belief that it will fail this time. In lieu thereof I beg to submit the following items as sources of revenue. Estimates are conservative and everyone will agree that the administration and collection would not involve the complexities and difficulties of collecting a sales tax on some thirty or forty thousand different products of manufacture. I offer as a compromise the following:

Estimated revenue Stamp taxes on checks and drafts (1 cent under $100; 2 cents above) ______Safety deposit boxes and vaults (10 per cent of $95,000,000 annual rental). 5,000,000 Stamp tax on contracts, covenants, conveyances, deeds, mortgages, and agreements in writing (5 cents on each document)______Stamp tax on receipts, acquittances, or any evidence 10,000,000 of payment of money (1 cent under $100; 2 cents 25, 000, 000 above) Stock transfer and sales (increase of present rates from 2 to 4 cents and application of tax of 6 cents to loans of stock) 40,000,000 10,000,000 30,000,000 5,000,000 Radio and phonographs (5 per cent retail)

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Watson].

F. LAGUARDIA.

Very truly yours,

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to the statements of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia], especially his plan of raising revenue, and I feel quite sure if we should adopt his suggestion, from one end of Broadway to the other we would hear "Down with LaGuardia's plan." I am surprised at his attitude in respect to the sales or manufacturers' tax. The manufacturers' tax was never seriously considered heretofore by this House, but the manufacturers' tax to-day is an emergency. Although it may not be popular, because no new tax is popular, yet in two years from now the sales tax will not be written out of the revenue bill.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. BACHMANN. Does the gentleman mean by that that if Congress adopts the principle of a sales tax now the Government will never relinquish that form of tax?

Mr. WATSON. I do.

Mr. BACHMANN. Then the gentleman thinks it is here to stay?

Mr. WATSON. That is my belief—and why? Because we will find that it is one of the easiest taxes to collect, and again we will find that the people at large will not know to a degree that they are paying taxes.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. Lest there be any misconception of the matter, this bill itself provides that this sales tax title expires by operation of law on the 30th of June, 1934. There would have to be affirmative action by Congress to extend its life beyond that time.

Mr. WATSON. That is exactly my view. But it will be so popular that the committee will be obliged to renew it. France, Germany, Czechoslovakia, and Canada all have adopted the sales tax. At first in Canada the sales tax was very unpopular, but to-day it is one of the most popular. We can judge from other countries what we may do now and in the future.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it fair to compare a country like Canada, which is not an industrial country, where the manufactures are very small, compared with their total output, with a great industrial country like the United States, where the taxes will be passed on so generally to everyone?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly it is fair. It is only a question of proportion. France and Germany have adopted it; and is there any country that produces more commodities than Germany, according to population?

Mr. STAFFORD. But Germany was forced to that posi-

Mr. WATSON. They have had a sales tax there for years, and it will never be repealed.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON. Yes. Mr. HASTINGS. As I understand the gentleman's argument, he is in favor of having this manufacturers' or sales tax kept on after June 30, 1934.

Mr. WATSON. I am if the people want it.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman believes in making it a permanent policy of our Government?

Mr. WATSON. I believe it, because the people will demand it.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. BACHMANN. I am interested in the gentleman's comparison of the sales tax in Canada with the probable sales tax in the United States.

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. BACHMANN. Is it not a fact that the Canadian sales tax has been successful because a great amount of the revenue has been received from the sale of intoxicating liquors?

Mr. WATSON. No; I think not, because there was a sales tax before Canada repudiated prohibition.

Mr. BACHMANN. I was privileged to go with the committee to Canada in an investigation of the sales tax and how it works in that country, and my recollection is that we were told, although no figures were given, that a great amount of the revenue derived under the sales tax in Canada came from the sales tax on intoxicating liquors.

Mr. WATSON. That may be, but, nevertheless, the people are pleased to accept it, because there is a sales tax on all commodities. I did not expect to take up the question of the sales tax, but was going to leave that subject to others. I brought it up because the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] presented his views.

There are only two ways by which the public debt of a government can be balanced—one by taxation and the other by a bond issue. To issue Federal bonds for the purpose of paying indebtedness, rather than by taxation, is as ineffective to the end as a corporation issuing bonds beyond its ability to pay. In both cases repudiation of debts must follow.

When banks close their doors, with only frozen assets upon which loans can not be procured, and Federal reserve banks were obliged to refuse collateral offered for discount, one could hardly blame men and women not in business, having only small incomes, withdrawing their deposits. But the President of the United States has recommended, and it has become a law, that $2,000,000,000 shall be issued in order to establish the stability of banks, and from inquiry I find that this appropriation has been of benefit in establishing the solidity of banks throughout the country. From January 1 until October 1 of the year 1931 there were 1,745 bank failures, but since the operation of this $2,000,000,000 law there have been few bank failures in comparison, which indicates that President Hoover was wise in suggesting such a plan and the Senate and House to favor it.

The Interstate Commerce Commission regulating railroads under an iron hand has greatly modified its rulings and given the railroads wider latitude and field, where they can at least hope to meet the interest on their bonds and to save bankruptcy not only of themselves but of the banks and financial institutions holding their securities. The year 1912 was the highest peak of prosperity not only in this country but in all the world; the highest peak in individual wealth; the highest peak in corporate wealth. It was a temptation to the Government to take advantage of these conditions, and it adopted an income tax bill. The whole world was prosperous. With the restlessness of the idle rich, the large standing armies in Europe trained for years and eager for war, when the pistol shot was heard in Serbia Germany was ready to send her army to the frontier. The World War, lasting four years, reduced the nations almost to the point of repudiating their domestic obligations and ignoring external debts. Therefore we can not go back and say we expended money recklessly during the period of the war and since, because that has passed over the dam. It becomes us to-day to raise money to meet our indebtedness, because, if we do not and continue to sell bonds we are bound to repudiate our debts, and then our Government or our Republic will fall.

When the Committee on Ways and Means held hearings for a revenue bill it was confronted by nearly all witnesses with objections to a tax on business of which they were a part.

In regard to the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia], let me say that the various commodities he presented to you for taxation were opposed by every witness that appeared before the committee. Nearly every witness, when questioned whether he preferred a tax on his individual commodity or a sales tax, always answered, "I prefer the manufacturers' sales tax." That was the general opinion of witnesses appearing before our committee. Therefore, it was the judgment, and the wise judgment of our committee, that we bring out a tax that the American people wanted, and I believe, as I said before, it will be acceptable to the people and the taxpayers of the United States.

There has been no period probably since the Civil War when it has been so difficult to write a revenue bill as now. Your committee searched the best methods in every avenue possible, and we bring to you a tax that will be the least drastic for the taxpayers and at the same time meet the deficit. We are not living in ordinary times. We must call a halt in regard to our expenditures; we must do it now and not put it off for other generations.

The Government to-day has a greater deficit than any other nation in the world. On March 15 there will be due $600,000,000 bonds. Where is the money coming from to pay the interest and the principal on those bonds? We are not collecting enough from the revenue tax on the 15th of March, and there must be another sale of Federal bonds. Now, we can not continue this. I want to bring home to everyone that you may take it back to every constituent and every voter in this country that America can not live and exist paying her debts by selling bonds. She must meet her debts by revenue, and the bill presented is one that has been carefully studied by every member of the committee.

Before I touch another subject I want again to recall the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. La-Guardia], where he brought to you the question of sales tax on stockings. One can buy three pairs of stockings for a dollar, and they are excellent ones. The wholesale price would probably be three for 80 cents. When you pay 2½ cents for stockings at three for a dollar you are not spending very much money. That is an example of almost every commodity that goes into clothing.

It is my purpose to consider three or four sections relative to the net gains and losses, and call your attention, under this subtitle, to the increased revenue set forth in the various revenue acts.

1913 TAX, $35,600,300

Our first income tax law, written in 1913, provided that in the case of gain from the sale of stock by an individual, such gain was taxed at the regular income-tax rates. In case any loss was taken on such sale, except in the case of a dealer in securities, such loss was not allowed as a deduction from net income.

1916 TAX, $124,937,253

The act of 1916 provided that gains from the sale of real estate, stocks, bonds, and so forth, should be taxable, but it allowed to be credited against such gains whatever losses were taken in the taxable year from the sale of similar securities. However, if the losses from the sale of these capital assets exceeded the gains, the excess of the losses over the gains was not allowed as a deduction against the other income of the taxpayer.

Example: A man with a $20,000 income sells certain securities and gains $1,000, and he sells other securities and loses $500. Then $500 is added to his $20,000, making $20,500 upon which he must pay a tax, but the excess of loss over the gains would not be taxable.

1918 TAX, $2,838,999,894

We now come to the act of 1918, which provided for the taxation of gains and for the full reduction of any losses. Under this act if an individual had an excess of losses over gains, he was allowed to deduct such excess from his other income.

Example: If a man lost $10,000 and gained $9,000, he would be allowed to deduct $1,000 from his taxable income.

1921 TAX, $3,228,137,674

When the revenue act of 1921 was under consideration, it was pointed out that the high tax rates then in force prevented normal business transactions in the case of real estate, stocks, and bonds. For instance, if a man had a million-dollar profit which could be realized from the sale of some asset which he had held for a long period, he would be deterred from making such transaction, because his profit would be cut in half at the rates then in force. Accordingly, the 1921 act provided for the taxation of capital gains arising from the sale of assets which have been held over two years at a maximum rate of 12½ per cent. Of course, the purpose of the 2-year limitation was apparently to arbitrarily divide as nearly as might be investment operations from speculative operations. In the case of assets held for less than two years, the revenue act of 1921 provided for their taxation in full at the regular normal and surtax rates, because no reason could be given for taxing such income at a lower rate than ordinary income. Subsequent figures plainly show the action of Congress was wise in enacting the 121/2 per cent rate on capital gains. From 1917 to 1921, inclusive, the losses exceeded gains by about $2,500,000,000. This excess of losses being allowed as a deduction against other income produced an unfavorable effect on the revenue. It would have been better if we had not taxed capital gains and had not allowed capital losses as a deduction from net

The 121/2 per cent provision has been in force since 1922, and the Government derived from 1922 to 1930, inclusive, a large income from the taxation of gains arising not only from the sale of assets held over two years, but also from the sale of assets held less than two years; in fact, during this period the total gains have exceeded the total losses by not less than $15,000,000,000. During the prosperous year of 1928 nearly 25 per cent of our total income tax on individuals was derived from the taxation of these gains.

The revenue act of 1921 was inconsistent in that it allowed substantial advantage to the taxpayer on the sale of assets held for more than two years but failed to make corresponding provision for the treatment of capital losses in favor of the Government. This defect was remedied by the revenue act of 1924, which provided that in the case of losses from the sale of assets held over two years that the tax might not be reduced more than 121/2 per cent by the deduction of such loss from the net income.

In 1930 heavy losses were taken on the sale of real estate, stocks, bonds, and similar assets. In fact, 2-year net gains in 1930 decreased 77 per cent over the gains reported in 1929, and gains in the less than 2-year category decreased 67 per cent. On the other hand, capital losses increased 85 per cent in 1930 and ordinary losses increased 22 per cent. The total decrease in 1930 from the income tax alone over the preceding year was about 465. In 1930 we received $2,410,-259,230, and under the same act the revenue in 1931 was reduced to $1,860,040,497.

In the present emergency, created by an enormous deficit in the Treasury, the committee proposes to amend the present law on the basic principle of the revenue act of 1916, namely, to allow losses from sales to be deducted only to the extent of the gains realized from sales within the taxable year. The committee thought it wise, however, to limit this proposal to stocks and bonds and to treat as under the present law gains and losses from the sale of real estate, Government, State, and municipal bonds.

Inasmuch as our present law computes the tax differently, according to whether the gains or losses arise from the sale of assets held more than two years or less than two years, the adaptation of the new principle to the sale of stocks and bonds is somewhat technical.

Example: A man has $100,000 salary, and during the year sells a block of stock for $400,000 for which he had paid $500,000 one year previously.

Under the present system the man would pay no tax, because the loss is permitted as a deduction against salary income. The loss being $100,000 and the salary $100,000, no net income and no tax.

The bill now under consideration provides that the tax on salary of $100,000 would be collected and the loss on the stock transaction disallowed.

Example, second case: A man has $100,000 salary, also $100,000 gain from sale of stock held over two years, and a $10,000 loss from sale of stock held less than two years.

Under the present system the man would be subject to the 12½ per cent provision and pay $12,500 tax.

The bill now under consideration provides the man would offset the 1-year loss against the 2-year gain and be subject to tax on his salary, which, under the new rates, would be about $25,000.

The principle adhered to in all cases—that the losses from the sales of stocks and bonds are not permitted to eliminate tax on salaries, interest, dividends, rents, and so forth, but the taxpayer is allowed to offset his stock losses against his stock gains in a consistent manner.

It is believed that in a full year this change in the law will result in much greater revenue to the Government. It has been estimated that such increase will average $100,000,000 annually.

There are 12 Members in the present Congress who recall the expenses of the Government for 1912 and the criticism. It was called a "billion-dollar Congress." Our taxes have increased over $5,000,000,000, and I do not have hope that taxes will decrease, because the country is growing in population and the many developments of science will create an entirely new civilization, which will be upon a very different basis. So I can not conceive that our taxes will be very much reduced.

Mr. COLLINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. COLLINS. Does the gentleman believe that this ought to be a permanent tax?

Mr. WATSON. Which tax is that?

Mr. COLLINS. The sales tax.
Mr. WATSON. Yes; I said that sometime ago.

Mr. COLLINS. The gentleman thinks it ought to be a permanent tax.

Mr. WATSON. The way I see the question now and when I study the philosophy of the sales tax in foreign countries, I think we will eventually have it as a permanent revenue. The whole world is now living on nearly the same basis, and I believe the time will come when the American people will want the sales tax. I may not be here, but I hope the gentleman will be to contradict or approve of what I have said. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER].

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I have sought this time to discuss the tax bill. The problem of balancing the Budget is very important, but it is not the most important problem before the American people or before this Congress. Most of the time that has been allotted to me I intend to use in a discussion of the tax bill.

I have the highest regard for the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Crisp], who is in charge of the tax bill. I hold him in very high esteem for his intelligence, industry, and patriotism. I entertain the same high regard and esteem for the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Hawley]. The gentleman from Georgia made the statement in his opening speech that balancing the Budget is the most important problem before Then he made a statement which, I think, could at least be taken as a criticism of a considerable number of this House who favor monetary stabilization.

The farm organizations of the country, as you know, are urging action on the part of the Congress, and on the part of the Federal reserve system, for the restoration and stabilization of commodity prices on the 1926 level. Then the gentleman referred to cheap money and said that at one time for 25 cents of our money it was possible to buy a million dollars' worth of German marks. Then he stated:

In my honest judgment, the only good money a government can get is from taxes.

Those who favor monetary stabilization do not advocate the printing-press type of money.

The gentleman from Oregon called attention to the fact that after every great war of necessity there have to be two major depressions. Well, he may be right, that after great wars there have been two major depressions, but he did not undertake to discuss the reasons for those depressions. According to my view and the views of those who have studied this problem for many years such depressions can be avoided.

You can not tax yourself into prosperity and you can not lift yourself out of a depression by going deeper into debt, either private or public. The only way we ever got out of a depression was by a rise in the commodity-price level. The only way we can get out of this depression is by a rise in the commodity-price level.

I can not to-day take the time to discuss this problem of monetary stabilization. All I am going to do is to merely suggest it, because this problem is coming before a committee of this House, and I hope before this House, in the very near future.

I have given this problem considerable thought during the last two years. Last June a year ago the Iowa Bar Association appointed a committee to study and report on stabilizing the purchasing power of money. I was made chairman of that committee and served with former Congressman Letts and Congressman GILCHRIST, both from the State of Iowa. Last June we made a report on this subject to the Iowa Bar Association. Because it was a report on an economic subject made to a bar association which chiefly considers legal subjects, it attracted considerable attention at the time. This report was printed in the Congressional RECORD of December 11, 1931. As a result of this report I was asked by the president of the American Farm Bureau Federation to join the committee of that organization on the stabilization of the unit of value. That committee had quite a number of meetings in Chicago last fall, at which we had the advice and help of some of the best economists of the country. Under the direction of this committee on the stabilization of the unit of value there was prepared and printed the first of this year the publication which I hold in my hand, a booklet or pamphlet on Honest Money. This pamphlet was sent to every Member of Congress. According to some eminent economists, who had nothing to do with the writing of this pamphlet, it is an intelligent, conservative, sound, and sane discussion of the money question. It does present views on the restoration and stabilization of the commodity-price level on the predeflation basis that has the indorsement of the three big national farm organizations.

On the first Monday of December I introduced a bill, H. R. 128, to carry into effect the principles outlined in this publication. We have been trying to get a hearing before the Banking and Currency Committee on this and other like bills. Of course, that committee has been very busy, but now hearings have been set to begin next Wednesday. All parties and organizations interested in the problem of monetary stabilization intend to go into this subject fully. The Banking and Currency Committee is going to tackle this problem earnestly and sympathetically, and probably in two or three weeks this House will have a report on one of the bills on monetary stabilization. The farm organizations of the country are going to be heard before that committee next Wednesday and Thursday. After that anybody else, economists, business interests, and the Federal reserve system will be heard.

Now, in going over this hurriedly, and I am going to leave this subject in a very few minutes, I want to impress upon you that this is not a dream of individual Congressmen, nor is it a dream of farm organizations, but the problem of elevating and stabilizing the price level has received the thoughtful consideration and study of some of the ablest minds in this country and abroad, including economists, financiers, and bankers as well as farm leaders and Congressmen. I want to call your attention, in passing, to a few of the outstanding authorities who have given this subject thoughtful consideration, in order to impress those of you who have not studied it with the importance of the problem of monetary stabilization.

Here is a chart [indicating] on monetary stabilization that has been prepared for the use of the Banking Committee next Wednesday.

In the first place, the gentleman who prepared this chart quotes from the Constitution, "The Congress shall have power to coin money, regulate the value thereof." Congress has exercised the power to coin money, but it has not exercised the power to regulate the value thereof.

Then he quotes from a message to Congress by Abraham Lincoln back in 1862, which says:

Fluctuations in the value of currency are always injurious, and to reduce these fluctuations to the lowest possible point will always be a leading purpose of wise legislation.

Abraham Lincoln said that to prevent fluctuations in the purchasing power or value of currency is always a leading purpose in wise legislation. The trouble with us now is that debts and taxes and other fixed charges were assumed on the higher price level existing before this depression began. To-day the commodity price level is much lower, way down here [indicating]. We have the commodities or the capacity to produce them, but the commodities do not command prices so that we can pay the debts and the fixed charges and the taxes that were assumed on a higher level.

Owen D. Young, one of the outstanding business men of the country, as well as a very scholarly gentlemen, says:

The proper handling of price stability is one of the most important matters facing the capitalistic system.

Now listen:

In it will be found the roots of those maladjustments which result in unequal and unfair distribution of wealth, in unemployment, and other serious problems.

If we had some means to hold the commodity price level where it was in 1926, 1928, and 1929, of course, we would not have unemployment, and we would not have had this depression.

Now, here I go to an authority over in Great Britain [indicating]. Lord D'Abernon is one of the leading financiers and bankers of Great Britain, and from a speech which he made on September 25, 1931, is quoted what you see at the bottom of the chart.

Mind you, in 1931 we were not as low as now, but we were way down below what we were before the depression began. He said:

The fall in prices which has occurred is nothing more or less than the rise in prices of currency, or means of payment. If the means of payment had been available in adequate quantity with adequate dispersion, the general fall in prices would not have occurred.

What he says there is in line with what you will find in this booklet on Honest Money. If any of you have lost your booklet, Honest Money and will call at my office I have a few extra copies which I will be glad to give you.

The great economist of Sweden, probably the world's best-known expert on monetary problems, is Mr. Gustav Cassel. I am going to quote just three or four sentences scattered throughout a lecture of his on our Federal reserve system, delivered in this country in 1928, before the depression, to wit:

The result is that the monetary policy of the United States determines the value of the currency of every other gold-standard country. The Federal reserve authorities therefore control not only the general level of prices in the United States but also the price levels of all the other gold-standard countries in the world.

And last:

Consequently the price level of the United States has a determining influence on the world price level, which is thus actually regulated by the leaders of the United States bank policy.

Referring again to this booklet on Honest Money, with all due modesty, it is the contention of the farm leaders, who have united on a program of monetary stabilization which will be presented in all its detail to the subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee next Wednesday, that the Federal reserve system now has the powers, and by a proper exercise of its powers can stabilize the commodity price level. What we seek is legislation to direct the Federal reserve system to use its powers to restore the commodity price level on the 1926 basis and thereafter to stabilize commodity prices on that level.

Let me call your attention to this chart [indicating], just to show you the havoc that is wrought by not having a proper control over the purchasing power of money. Here is a chart on Debts in Relation to Commodity Prices.

Our national debt at the present time, as you know, is about $17,000,000,000, or a little over $17,000,000,000. A debt

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain what he means by the load now?

Mr. RAMSEYER. The load in terms of commodity prices. In other words, a debt contracted in 1926 of $17,000,000,000 to be paid off now would require commodities which in 1926 would have brought in $25,258,600,000.

Mr. REED of New York. In terms of corn and wheat.

Mr. RAMSEYER. In terms of corn and wheat at present prices it would be a great deal more. I refer to the general average of all commodity prices, including agricultural products, which are used in the index number of wholesale commodity prices gotten out by the Labor Department.

A debt in 1920 of $17,000,000,000 in terms of commodities would now require $38,930,000,000 to pay off.

Our war debt at its peak was something like $26,000,-000,000. We point with pride to the fact that we have reduced the national debt $10,000,000,000. The national debt, notwithstanding the $10,000,000,000 reduction, represents a burden in commodity values $12,000,000,000 heavier than the debt did at its peak.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I will.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I want to ask the gentleman whether or not he has based the figures under the head "load now" on commodity values as indicated by the index number of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes. Now, to bring it down to smaller figures, which are easier to comprehend, a debt of $10,000 in 1926 would now represent a $14,958 load in commodities. In 1920 a debt of $10,000 now in commodities represents a load of $22,900.

Now, let us get to the statement of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Hawley] that you have to have two depressions following a war.

Here is a chart on the index number of wholesale commodity prices from 1801 to 1931. This chart shows the three big wars—the War of 1812, the Civil War, and the third is the World War. This line represents the index number of wholesale commodity prices on the basis of 1926 being 100.

Now, take the Civil War: You see this decline down to 1878. There was an upward movement about 1878, and then a general decline here to 1896 and 1897.

We have not had a money campaign in this country since 1896. Prior to 1896 for over 20 years the money question was an issue in every political campaign.

With the decline of the commodity price level the burden on the debtors increased year by year. You notice a constant downward trend of commodity prices from the early eighties to 1896. During that period there were three great movements-the granger movement, the greenback movement, and the free-silver movement.

I have not time to discuss these movements, but merely to call attention to them. The discontent of that period chiefly centered in the Middle West. As an impartial student of the history of those times, I have come to the conclusion that what the people back there wanted was not cheap money, but they wanted honest money. They wanted stabilized purchasing power, so that when they contracted debts at a certain time they would not have to pay them in terms of dearer money a year or five years later.

You will notice on this chart that in 1898 there was a sharp upturn in commodity prices which continued to near the World War. Those were prosperous times, and the people were making money.

Prior to 1896 for 30 years there was a diminishing gold supply. That is, the supply of gold did not increase as fast as the productive capacity of this country and of the world. Right about the point of this upturn in 1898 gold was discovered in the Klondike and in South Africa, and a stream of gold poured into this country and the world. We then started in on an upward trend of commodity prices. Then the World War came on and we had this inflationary period. In 1913 we established the Federal Reserve system, and surplus to apply on our national debts. In 1929, when the in 1926 of $17,000,000,000 now amounts, in commodities, to | many of those who were in favor of that system thought that that system was given the power to stabilize the purchasing power of money; in other words, to stabilize the commodity price level. The war came on, as I say, and we had this inflation. It was a controlled inflation, and it continued until the middle of 1920. Then there was a deflation. In my opinion, it was a controlled deflation.

The drop continued until 1921. Then for a period of seven years there was quite a stable price level, and, in the opinion of those who have made this subject a study, it was a controlled stabilization.

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RAMSEYER. Not right here. Since 1929 we have been on the decline. I am of opinion-and I can cite you good authorities in support thereof-that if the Federal reserve system had with foresight and courage exercised its powers, commencing in 1928, most, if not all, of this decline could have been prevented. I have not the time now to go into the intricacies of this problem. The only purpose I have in bringing this up at this time is to impress upon the membership of this House that there is an infinitely more important problem before the country and this House than the problem of balancing the Budget, and I am in favor of balancing the Budget. I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. GARBER. I was going to ask the gentleman to clarify the statement with regard to what he meant by controlled deflation. Subsequently the gentleman partly answered that.

Mr. RAMSEYER. These matters will be taken up fully and in detail in the hearings before the Committee on Banking and Currency, which begin next Wednesday. I leave this subject now to take up the tax bill. If we are not going to have an upturn in commodity prices, the imposing of more taxes and the loaning of more money to individuals and to public bodies in the course of a year or so will find us worse off than we are now. The balancing of the Budget will be helpful. The loaning of money to individuals will be helpful only in case there is an upward swing in commodity prices, so that in the meantime they can get money for their commodities and their services in order to pay off their obligations and to pay taxes. We must restore debtpaying and purchasing power to the farmers and other producers. Unless commodity prices go upward you can not collect taxes, nor can debts and other fixed charges be met. The restoration and stabilization of the commodity price level is the most fundamental problem before the people and Congress. It is incumbent upon the membership of this House to work out speedily a course of action for relief.

I must leave this subject now and give a few minutes' time to the tax problem. This subject matter will be thoroughly gone into before the Banking and Currency Committee, and I hope as many Members of the House as can will appear before that committee to manifest their interest and pledge their support.

The Committee on Ways and Means has worked diligently and patriotically and in a nonpartisan spirit in an attempt to get out a tax bill that will balance the Budget. I have studied all the tax bills ever since the war. I voted for the tax bill of 1921 and I voted for the tax bill of 1924. The subject that I shall discuss chiefly in the time I have remaining will be the estate and gift taxes. In 1924 Congress adopted an amendment that I offered to the estate tax which raised the maximum rate on that portion of the estate over $10,000,000 to 40 per cent. In 1925 there was a tremendous highly financed propaganda against the estate tax. Organizations from all over the country came down here opposing it. In 1926 we almost lost the estate tax. The Senate voted it out, but the House conferees were able to save in conference what little there is left in the law. I voted against that conference report. In 1928 we had another revenue bill. That bill was chopped up so badly while here in Committee of the Whole that I voted against its passage. I have always urged not only that we should have sufficient money to balance the Budget but that we have sufficient tax remittance bill was brought in here, I was on the Committee on Ways and Means, and was the only one on that committee who filed minority views and fought the passage of the bill on the floor of the House. The situation that confronts us now is a deficit of about $2,000,000,000 for this fiscal year, which we are not trying to make up except by borrowing. Next year the deficit is to be a little over $1,000,000,000. Of course, if there should be an upward swing in commodity prices, as there ought to be, so that tax money would come in more easily, the deficit would not be so great. If we shall continue in times such as we have been going through during the last two years, the deficit at the end of the next fiscal year may be larger than it now appears. But I am willing to take the judgment of those who make these estimates that a billion dollars plus will be sufficient to balance the Budget. You who have followed me on the estate tax know that I have discussed it fully and at length from time to time. My position is that we have hardly scratched the surface of the possibilities of the estate tax as a revenue getter. We now collect something like $160,000,000 annually from Federal estate and State inheritance taxes combined. Of that amount the Federal Government will this year probably get something like $40,000,000. A great deal of talk is heard to the effect that we should not use the taxing power to redistribute wealth.

Our national income is something like $60,000,000,000. The total expense for Government-Federal, State, and local—is something like $12,000,000,000, or 20 per cent of the total gross income of the Nation, that either has to come out of the income of the people or from accumulated wealth. In my State and in other States, because of the situation that prevails, the local and State taxes not only eat up the income, but they are actually confiscatory of the corpus of some of the property itself.

There devolves in this country each year, as the result of the death of the owners of property, between eight and ten billion dollars. We collect something like $160,000,000 from the estate and inheritance taxes, or about 2 per cent of the amount of the property that devolves, while to meet all the expenses of government, we take 20 per cent of the gross income of the Nation.

I have heretofore cited authorities to you in favor of estate taxes in order to assure you that some persons of standing in days gone by advocated the same thing and gave the idea respectability. In other speeches I have quoted to you from Andrew Carnegie's Gospel of Wealth and My Partners the People. Last spring, when I was making a new survey of the estate and inheritance taxes and also the income tax and bringing the data on those taxes down to date, I accidentally ran across a speech of Andrew Carnegie which he delivered back in 1892, and I want to read to you a few sentences from that speech. He said:

we must let the worker alone during his life, but after his death the State should step in and demand its share of his hoard, through a graduated system of taxation. Every fortune left by a hoarder should contribute to the State in proportion to its size; small amounts left to those dependent upon the decedent being exempt, but the scale rising by steps until with enormous fortunes reaching into many millions it should be decreed that "one-half goes to the privy coffers of the State."

This is the proportion which the laws of Vanion exected from We must let the worker alone during his life, but after his

This is the proportion which the laws of Venice exacted from her Shylock. Our modern Shylocks should be made to contribute at least as much. We have no returns showing the amount of wealth annually left in this country, but we have for Great Britain; it amounts to about one thousand million dollars per annum; it must be at least fifteen hundred million dollars with us. Assuming that only one-fifth of this were collected by the State, we have $300,000,000 per annum, a sum quite sufficient to pay the ordinary expenditures of the Government. Every dollar of taxes required might be obtained in this manner, without interfering in the least with the forces which tend to the development of the country through the production of wealth. It would be a tax easily and surely collectible.

Our wealth now is six times what it was in 1892, so that the amount which descends each year would be six times $1,500,000,000, or $9,000,000,000. Carnegie suggested that at least 20 per cent of all the property so developing should be taken, which at that time would have made $300,000,000. On the same basis of figuring, our national wealth having increased six times, we could now raise $1,800,000,000 on the rates proposed by Andrew Carnegie in 1892.

Now, in the few minutes I have remaining, I want to explain to you my amendment which I intend to offer. Under the present law the exemption is $100,000. Under the law that was passed during the war, reenacted in 1921 and again in 1924, the exemption was $50,000. We ought to go back to the exemption of $50,000.

I thought surely the committee would bring in a bill reducing the exemption from $100,000 to $50,000.

In order to make the rates productive, we have got to start the increase sooner than we do under existing law. Starting with an exemption of $50,000, on the first $10,000 the rate is 1 per cent. Then I graduate the rates up so that on a net estate of $100,000 we would collect $5,000. Now, that is not a great deal of money off of a net estate of $100 .-000. The rates go on up until we get to that portion of the estate over $10,000,000, where the rate is 45 per cent. I have the proposed amendment here, and I shall have it printed in the RECORD so that the members of the Committee on Ways and Means can study it. They may adopt it. I hope they do. I hope the Members of the House will take time to study this amendment, so they will know just what these rates are and what will be accomplished by my amendment.

With the rates proposed by the committee in the bill, the income from estate taxes becoming productive in the course of two or three years will probably be not to exceed $300,-000,000. Under my amendment the rates will yield in two or three years, when they become productive, between five hundred and six hundred million dollars. Personally, I would go as far as Andrew Carnegie suggested we should go if I thought the House would follow. The rates in my amendment will yield only one-third of what Andrew Carnegie suggested back in 1892 should be collected from the estates upon the death of the owners thereof. I have so framed the amendment that it fits in with the existing law and will not disturb, in the least, existing law or what is going to the respective States under the 80 per cent provision.

The rates in the proposed gift tax are not as high as in the estate tax. We adopted a gift tax in 1924 which was repealed in 1926. I think the committee is right in not making the rates in the gift tax as high as in the estate tax. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], in his speech the other day, made the statement that we had reached the point of diminishing returns on income taxes, gift taxes, and estate taxes.

I have never urged burdensome rates on incomes, and I am not going to urge higher rates than the committee has recommended. You can get income taxes so high that they will yield less. There is no question about that. Of course, you can get gift tax rates so high that people will not make any gifts, and, therefore, such high rates would not yield any revenue. However, on estate taxes the law of diminishing returns can not possibly apply, and it is simply a matter of determining how much estates should bear in fairness and justice under the conditions in which we find ourselves.

Mr. DICKINSON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Under the gentleman's proposed amendment, which he says is one-third of what Andrew Carnegie suggested, how much additional revenue would be obtained above what is recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. RAMSEYER. The bill before us, under the estate-tax provisions, in my judgment will yield not to exceed $300 .-000,000, while under my amendment the yield should be between $500,000,000 and $600,000,000. If we went as far as Andrew Carnegie suggested in his speech of 1892, we would raise $1,800,000,000 from this source.

Mr. DICKINSON. Then the gentleman thinks that under his amendment the amount received from this source would be increased $200,000,000 or $300,000,000 above the amount suggested by the committee?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes; I do not think there is any question about it.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes.

Mr. LOZIER. Apropos of the ethics of an estate tax, is it not true that the devolution of property or descent from ancestor to heir is a matter of statute?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Certainly.

Mr. LOZIER. And therefore the State in permitting the devolution of property can attach such provisions as it thinks wise and proper?

Mr. RAMSEYER. There is no question about that. Now, gentlemen, I want you to pay especial attention to this amendment, which will be in the RECORD, so that when the time comes to consider it you will understand just what it will accomplish.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes. Mr. GILCHRIST. Did the gentleman discuss the proposition of the 80 per cent differential on estate taxes? I was not able to be present during all of the time of the gentleman's discussion.

Mr. RAMSEYER. No; I am not seeking to disturb that at this time, and my amendment will not disturb that provision. I was opposed to that provision when it was enacted, and I still feel the same way about it, but under the circumstances prudence dictates that that provision should not be disturbed at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the amendment I will offer is as follows: Page 189, strike out lines 8 to 14, both inclusive, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KETCHAM].

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, on my desk this morning I find this telegram, which I am sure is typical of many telegrams that have been received by members of the committee. It summarizes my attitude on the manufacturers' sales tax. Omitting any identification of it. I simply present the language:

We protest proposed sales tax as being an unwarranted burden to impose on industry already overburdened in time of stress, such as we have endured for past two years and which is likely to continue at least through this year. We petition you to fight this measure for the protection and survival of struggling Michigan manufacturing concerns like ourselves.

This was not the inspiration of the discussion I present at this hour, but I am very happy indeed to have this bit of encouragement, because I had already planned the discussion I am to present in the next few minutes.

Referring to the manufacturers' tax, it occurred to me that it might be of some interest to the members of the committee to find out how this would be allocated. I am always interested to find out how any action taken by Congress will affect the whole country and each State. So last night I took the total manufactured products of the country as of 1929 and compared it with the manufactured products of each particular State. I computed the percentages of these products in each State in comparison with the total for the country and I have those percentages in the table before Then I thought it would be of interest to take the $600,-000,000 which it is proposed to raise by this sales tax and apply the percentages which I had secured to the $600,-000,000 and show the approximate amount to be paid by each particular State. I also have that table before me, and I ask permission that it may be included in the extension of my remarks.

Without objection, it is so ordered. The CHAIRMAN. There was no objection.

Mr. KETCHAM. I hope you will read it with considerable interest. But there is another phase of this question that I want to present to you, because to me it is the most compelling one in connection with our whole consideration of this so-called manufacturers' tax.

What I want to determine, if I possibly can, in taking any action here, is not only its immediate consequences but what may be the consequences if the new policy which we are establishing by this manufacturers' tax is gradually to supplant that which we have had through all the years; in other words, how Federal taxes would be spread if a manufacturers' tax should eventually take the place of present | income and corporation taxes. We have heard a great deal about getting the camel's nose under the tent, and frequent and emphatic predictions have been made by those who have already spoken that if once we get this principle established, it will remain as a permanent feature of our tax system. I ask the members of the committee to look ahead to a time which I think will never come but which might come, when powerful interests in this country might persuade Congress to discard in its entirety our income and corporation taxes and substitute therefor a manufacturers or sales tax. To assist you in seeing the results of such a situation I have added to the table showing a distribution of the actual sales tax provided in the bills two additional columns designed only to show the tendency of this new sales-tax principle of taxation.

The table follows:

Mr. KETCHAM. In the third column of my table there set out the total internal-revenue taxes paid by the people of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1931. Parallel to this I have set out tentative figures, because I could not in the brief time at my disposal vouch for absolute accuracy, and yet they check pretty fairly well; in the fourth column and directly opposite, so that it might be easily compared, I have run out what would be the assessment of taxation if all the corporation and income taxes collected in the last year were apportioned according to the percentages of the sales tax in the first column. I invite your attention to the table.

Now, because you are not interested in tables except as you have opportunity to look at them, I want to pick out just two or three striking illustrations. Will you please go with me to Delaware? I think, probably, without any elaboration on my part, almost everyone within the sound of my voice knows who pays the largest share of the income taxes and corporation taxes in the State of Delaware. If there is not anyone who knows, I am sure if he will make a little inquiry he will be able to find out.

Under our system of Federal taxation the State of Delaware pays $34,000,000 in corporation and income taxes. If this should be done away with and we should substitute therefor a manufacturers' sales tax, what would be the effect on Delaware? Instead of paying $34,041,865 Delaware would pay $5,103,000. The difference between $34,041,865 and $5,103,000 would indicate to you immediately the interest of the people who have a very large financial interest in the State of Delaware.

Friends, it has been said—and I think there is considerable truth in it—that there are in the United States a large number of people who do not relish the income and corporation taxes, and if there could be any way devised or any scheme of taxation set up whereby they might shift over their burden to the rest of the people, they would be only too glad to see this done. This manufacturers' sales tax is the best bet of such people.

Mr. ABERNETHY and Mr. HARLAN rose.

Mr. KETCHAM. I yield first to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I just want to know whether the gentleman is for or against that proposition?

Mr. KETCHAM. If the gentleman has not arrived at any conclusion thus far, I think he will before I am through.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I am speaking of the sales tax. Is the gentleman for or against a sales tax?

Mr. KETCHAM. Just let the gentleman please draw his own conclusion at the end of my remarks.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I usually follow the gentleman on all farm matters, and I just wanted to know how he stands on this proposition.

Mr. KETCHAM. I hope the gentleman will follow me on this proposition; and if the gentleman has any doubt about my position, I am sorry he did not hear me read the telegram or hear my preliminary statement.

Mr. ABERNETHY. No; I just came in the room. I have great respect for the gentleman's opinion, and I was just trying to get a line on how the gentleman felt about this important subject.

Mr. KETCHAM. Well, I am against the manufacturers' tax as it is proposed here.

Mr. HARLAN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. KETCHAM. I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. HARLAN. Does the gentleman contend that any tax, whether it is an income tax or a corporation tax, does not ultimately become a consumer's tax so far as the consumer is concerned, and is ultimately paid by the person who buys the product that the individual, whoever he is, be it Du Pont or anyone else, puts on the market.

Mr. KETCHAM. I am not arguing that proposition; but there may be some doubt about income and corporation taxes, but there is no manner of question about where this manufacturers' tax will be paid. The consumer will be the goat. And if the gentleman will just pardon me, in view of the fact he has asked a question, I want to show him what this will do in Ohio, and I would like his attention.

For instance, Ohio paid this year $112,931,178 of Federal income and corporation taxes. If we had the manufacturers' tax as a complete substitute, the State of Ohio would pay $208,980,000, or an increase of over $95,000,000; and it seems to me, looking these figures squarely in the face, there ought not to be any question as to the gentleman's opposition to a manufacturers' tax.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I am very much interested in the gentleman's statement, and I am wondering how the gentleman got his figures for the year 1931. How do we know what that amount is?

Mr. KETCHAM. The figures are from page 89 of the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the fiscal year 1931.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I thank the gentleman. I simply wanted to know his authority for the figures.

Mr. KETCHAM. Now, gentlemen, may I call your attention to one or two other States. I hope there are some gentlemen here from the State of Indiana. The figures for that State are exceedingly interesting, and they certainly tell their own story.

In internal-revenue tax for the present year Indiana pays $21,431,225. If that system of taxation were entirely wiped out and we substituted this new sales-tax policy under which we are starting to operate if this title is retained in the bill-I would like to have every Indiana man hear these figures-instead of $21,431,225, the State of Indiana would pay $86,022,000, which would multiply her tax burden more than fourfold. I think, friends, you want to be looking at this pretty carefully before you launch upon a policy of this kind, because, after all, you have a responsibility not only to your country, but you have a responsibility to the folks who sent you here.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes. Does the gentleman want to know about Mississippi?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; and Texas.

Mr. KELLER. And Illinois.

Mr. KETCHAM. I will be pleased to give information, first, about Texas, because our distinguished Speaker, I am sure, will be interested in the application to his State.

Texas, under the present system of taxation, paid this last year $32,791,000. If the proposed manufacturers' tax should go into complete operation in place of the present system, she would put down the neat little sum of $50,058,000.

Replying to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], who, like every man, has a special interest in his own

Mr. ABERNETHY. Give North Carolina as you go along there, too.

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes; I shall be very glad to call attention to North Carolina, because thereby hangs the tale, and I think I can understand the reason my good friend from North Carolina was projecting his inquiry. I think he will probably be for this sales tax.

Well, the gentleman has another Mr. ABERNETHY.

think coming to him.

Mr. KETCHAM. This is what Mississippi paid last year-$1,568,796. If the new manufacturers' tax should go into effect and there should be a complete substitution of that tax for the income and corporation taxes, Mississippi will pay $7,503,000.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I would like to hear the figures for North Carolina.

Mr. KETCHAM. I would like to have every man in the House listen to the figures I will give for North Carolina. What it does is significant, and it is in the opposite direction. North Carolina last year paid $262,849,306; and, if this sales-tax policy should ever go in complete as a substitute for our present system, it would be cut to $43,000,000.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Is that all we would have to pay?

[Laughter.]

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. And still I am not for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. KETCHAM. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. I did not understand whether the gentleman based his figures on the proposed bill now before Congress or based the same on conditions which he thinks might prevail at some time in the future, provided that Congress should pass a law which was along the lines that he

Mr. KETCHAM. I thought I made it plain that this salestax policy was simply the beginning of the camel's head getting under the tent. The figures I am giving are all based upon what would be the situation if a sales tax superseded our present system.

Mr. MICHENER. But, from the gentleman's statement, I am afraid that the listener might get the impression that the gentleman is talking about the bill now before Congress.

Mr. KETCHAM. I think my colleagues are too astute for that.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. As I have said before, 8 States of the Union have been paying the great burden of the taxes while 40 States have paid much lesser sums. I want to bring to the attention of the gentleman that internal-revenue measures are excluded in this bill.

Mr. KETCHAM. Again may I assure the gentleman from Massachusetts that my effort has been to show the possible and probable trend of this new sales form of taxation. I consider it most inopportune at this time and, in fact, a poor taxation policy at any time. Taxing gross business instead of profits appears to me to be grossly unfair. Thousands of small manufacturers who are holding on bravely will be wiped out by the new competitive principle involved in this tax. Its inclusion in this bill would shift the burden to those who simply can not bear any more, and I hope it will be stricken out. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the debate upon this bill has been somewhat distorted by undue emphasis upon the so-called sales-tax feature of the bill. In the emotional outburst which has occurred on this subject, the real purpose of the legislation has been obscured, and Members appear to have lost sight of what we are trying to do.

The expenditures for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1931, were $903,000,000 greater than the income for that year. For the current fiscal year, the estimate is that the Federal income will be $2,123,000,000 short of the amount which we will spend. For the fiscal year 1933 it is estimated that our revenues will be $1,417,000,000 less than our expenditures. These figures do not include expenditures under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act nor the $125,000,000 appropriated in aid of the farm-loan system, both of which items are carried as investments of Federal

My own judgment is that these figures are much too low and that the deficit for the present fiscal year will amount to about $2,500,000,000, and for the next fiscal year it will amount to something like $2,000,000,000. But taking the figures of the Treasury, which are postulated on existing conditions, and upon the assumption that we will collect the next installment on our European debt, which everybody knows we are not going to collect, we will be confronted on July 1, 1933, by a deficit in the Federal Treasury of $4,500,000,000.

The purpose of this bill is to stop in some part that gap; to raise in some part the necessary funds to pay not the deficit which will occur in the present fiscal year or the last fiscal year but the shortage which will occur during the fiscal year of 1933. Taking this bill in its most favorable aspect, and giving the most favorable interpretation to the estimates of the Treasury, we will be compelled to add to the public debt by the deficit which will accrue by July 1, next, something over $3,000,000,000.

The first issue which we must meet is whether we will attempt to raise revenues adequate to our future expenditures, not our current or our past expenditures, but to the expenses of our Government for the year ending June 30, 1933. We have presented to us the issue of whether we will attempt to bridge that deficit, to add that safeguard to the public credit, or will default upon our responsibility and leave the deficit to continue to accumulate, with all the consequences which that action will involve. When we have decided that issue-and there is only one patriotic decision to make upon it—the remainder of this bill becomes a matter of mere detail. It resolves itself into the simple matter of what is the best way to go about raising the money.

The committee, after long deliberation and with the most careful study, have brought us this bill. It does not suit me in all its details, but with its fundamental purpose to raise revenues to prevent future deficits I am in hearty accord. [Applause,]

What is the alternative? Suppose we do not meet this deficit. Gentlemen on this side say: "It is a Republican deficit; it is due to their mismanagement; they have been in control of all of the branches of the Government; and the responsibility is theirs. It is a Republican deficit, and we should let them worry about it."

They say, "Why should we compromise our position with our constituents, why should we violate the views on taxation which we have held in order to cover up Republican mistakes and to cure the faults and evil practices of Republican misrule?" That perhaps is a good answer for the man who has at heart only the interest of his party. That perhaps is a sufficient answer for those who hold the welfare of their party above the welfare of their country. But it is no answer for the man who feels that he owes his country more than he owes his party, and that he owes to future generations more than he could possibly owe to himself.

What will be the consequences if we do not bridge this deficit? There are certain facts perfectly obvious to us all. They are to be seen by even the simplest of us, whether or not we have been able to interpret those facts. We have, for illustration, seen the constant outflow of our gold. We have lost hundreds of millions of our gold stock during the last eight months. During the month of January alone, after there had been a temporary cessation of gold withdrawals, the demand for gold was renewed, and we lost more than $100,000,000 in gold out of our stock. That is continuing. It can not continue indefinitely. The time is near at hand when with this constant loss of gold we will find ourselves unable to maintain the gold basis of our money. Our financial and economic system will be subverted and something revolutionary in the financial world is bound to

We have seen our Government securities depreciate day after day. Our 41/2 per cent bonds, which sold in the market last July for 114, are to-day worth only 100 plus a fraction. The 3 per cents that we issued last June at 100 are now quoted at 90. What does that indicate?

What does the continued downward march of commodity prices indicate? Is it the natural consequence of conditions, or does it register a barometric pressure which indicates the approach of a storm?

A man need possess only a little economic sense and a little understanding of financial affairs to realize that the credit of the Government is impaired, that confidence in the dollar has been shaken not only in foreign countries, which caused the export of gold, but among our own citizens.

Why is there hoarding? Why is there being hoarded, according to the estimate of men who claim to know, about $1,800,000,000, which has been withdrawn from circulation and stored away in safety boxes? Some of it is due to the lack of faith in the banks. That is obvious. But a large part of it is due to the lack of confidence in the financial integrity of our Government. Hear and consider these

What will happen if we do not balance the Budget? Public securities will continue to descend. A gentleman mentioned yesterday that the Treasury certificates just issued had been oversubscribed. But note that the rate of interest which they bore is the highest ever paid by our Government on similar securities. Note that the 3% per cent paid is double the rate for which such securities were sold only one year ago.

It is certain that if we do not balance the Budget we will have to steadily increase the rate of interest upon the securities which we issue. Except for the pendency of this bill and the stimulus which was given by the recent financial legislation, we would not now be able to put out long-term bonds at less than 41/2 per cent. Unless we balance the Budget it is certain that before the 1st of July we will be paying 5 per cent or 5½ per cent on the securities which we issue. What as would be required to reduce it to such a figure.

will we be paying six months from now? Will our bonds be selling at all?

I do not want to speak with the voice of an alarmist, but I say that the condition is much more serious than the average citizen believes. I am in doubt whether even with this measure we will be able to remain on a gold basis. That will depend upon what confidence it may inspire in the world; it will depend upon the psychological condition of our own people and the investors of foreign countries. I do know that we can not remain on a gold basis unless we do something to balance the Budget. [Applause.]

Some gentlemen will say, "All right; England went off the gold basis, so let us go off." There are men as simple as that. What will be the consequence? Of course, inflation, an inflation which will stop at a point which no man can foresee, an inflation which might result in the depreciation of our money until it gets to the vanishing point, as in the case of Germany a few years ago.

It is said that there are something like sixty to seventyfive billions of outstanding obligations in this country, public and private, payable in gold " of present weight and fine-Leaving the gold basis will not touch those securities. We will still have to produce gold to pay the Government bonds. Your State, your city, and your county will have to produce the yellow metal to meet those obligations. You will collect your taxes and your public income in a depreciated "rag money," but you will pay your debts in high-priced gold money. The result would be bankruptcy for every State, county, and city in the United States, as well as the Federal Government itself. [Applause.]

I suppose men will say, "Oh, we can repudiate the public debts." Yes; we can also repudiate the Constitution. We can have political revolution. We can play hob generally, but show me the man who is willing to contemplate the full consequences which I have pointed out without taking some

We must balance the Budget. The deficit, although a Republican deficit, is our deficit, too. I have heard in the Demagogues' Club this talk, "It is a Republican deficit; let the Republicans worry about it." Yes; it is a Republican deficit; but this is not the Republicans' country. It is my country and it is yours. [Applause.]

Our country is at war-a war fraught with all the tremendous possibilities of a war with a foreign foe; a war against ruin, starvation, and despair. The same courage and patriotism required to fight the armies of foes in the trenches is required on the part of legislators now [applause] and the same spirit of self-sacrifice must be invoked; the same spirit of devotion to our country and to its institutions.

All taxes are bad. I abominate them. They are a species of confiscation. No tax should be levied except to meet the necessary expenses of the Government economically administered. No tax should be levied unless the taxpayer is given a value in government equivalent to the amount which he is required to pay. Anything less than that is confiscation. The burden of taxes which now rests upon the shoulders of the people of this country is almost unbearable. Had we not within our own hands, as citizens, the means to correct the evils from which we suffer I should say that it was time we availed ourselves of the prerogative enunciated by the preamble, to create a government fit to govern. The taxes are so heavy that the cost approaches more than the value of the government that we pay for. We must correct those evils, not by bankrupting upon public obligations but by economy and thrift and industry and businesslike management of our Government.

I fully agree with the statement made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] that we ought to keep the expenses of government to $3,000,000,000 or less. I believe it can be done. The difficulty about the situation now is that public sentiment throughout the country is not sufficiently aroused and enlightened to sustain us in such cuts Here are four items of expense that aggregate something like $3,600,000,000. They are interest on our public debt, expenditures for the War and Navy Departments, the outlay for soldiers' pensions and benefits, and the salaries of public officials and employees. Together, those four items alone aggregate some $3,600,000,000. In which of them will public sentiment support us in making a drastic reduction? As for myself, let me say with regard to every item except that of paying the interest on the public debt, which we are in honor bound to pay, I will support cuts in every one of them.

Taxes are bad, and a sales tax is particularly bad. It is levied upon poverty and not upon wealth. It is levied upon a man's needs and not upon his ability to pay. It is levied upon what men may consume and not according to the benefits which are derived from government. They violate every fundamental of taxation.

But there is nothing new in the proposal to levy a sales tax. We have had a sales tax ever since the Civil War; a sales tax on tobacco, a necessary of life, a thing which even the poorest and most ignorant man uses. We have had a sales tax on it; and as far as I have been able to hear, in a service in the House for nearly 20 years, mine has been the only voice lifted against it on this floor. You have proceeded from time to time to levy it. We had sales taxes during the World War, a time of no greater emergency than now.

Let me say to those who object to a sales tax as a matter of principle, that a sales tax upon a luxury is just as much a sales tax as a sales tax on the necessaries of life. It is a sales tax; and if you have principles, immutable principles, which your conscience forbids you shall override, you can not vote for a luxury tax, even though it be on silks and diamonds and Cadillacs. You can not vote for a tax on those articles, because it is a sales tax.

Then, too, what is a luxury and what is a necessary of life? We every day enjoy things which are to us the common necessaries of life. We could not get along without them, and yet they were beyond the dreams of princes and lords a hundred years ago. The luxuries of yesterday become the necessaries of to-day. There is a wide twilight zone in which many luxuries and necessaries are so confused and intermingled that it is impossible, for principle's sake, to draw the line between them.

This bill does not suit me in numerous details. As a matter of policy—and I do not mean policy in a sinister sense, but sound public policy—I would like to see the field of exemptions greatly broadened. I would like to see the manufacturers' tax lifted from those articles in common use among average people and the rates made much higher upon those articles which are well within the field of luxuries, so, if possible, to make up the revenue that would be lost by exempting the necessary things. What that might be and how it might figure out surely no horseback rider galloping up and down these aisles upon a steed of oratory can undertake to decide. It is a matter for the careful study of the committee and figuring upon the part of experts.

The tariff section of the Demagogues Club complain about sales taxes. Whatever may be said against a sales tax, it is taken out of the pocket of the taxpayer and put into the Public Treasury. We have that justification. But what about that which is taken out of his pocket through the higher prices of protective tariffs and put into the pocket of the manufacturer? [Applause.] The sales tax is for the benefit of the Public Treasury while the tariff taxes are for the benefit of the private, selfish interests which have been strong enough to take hold of the legislator's arm and force him to write a law for their benefit.

Let me turn to the "farmers' friends" section. What were they doing only two years ago? They took $500,000,000 of the money belonging to all of the people and through the farm marketing act put it into the hands of a board commissioned to juggle the market, to buy, to sell, to organize, to incorporate, and to manipulate the prices of farm produce for the sole purpose of raising the price, and so as to increase the cost of living to every man, woman, and child in the United States. [Applause ]

the United States. [Applause.]

They took the public funds and used them to oil the machinery for taxing all the consumers of the land for the benefit of those who produce. And now they holler, "I will not put on a sales tax," yet they tried to levy a sales tax on the consumers for the benefit, not of the Treasury, but for producing farmers. They failed in their effort to break economic laws; they could not get away with that atrocity. They did their best to levy a sales tax for the benefit of the producers of only a few farm products. They levied a tax for their benefit upon the stomach and the back of every other citizen of the country, including all the farmers themselves. Where were their conscientious scruples then? Where were their high ideals about letting the law of supply and demand have free play and free opportunity?

In that choice company of fine spirits which meet daily in the cloakroom, known in the vernacular as the Demagogue Club, of which I am one of the oldest and most consistent members [laughter], we have had frequent discussions about this bill during the last few days. Our slogan is "safety first," and living up to it we have had no difficulty whatever in deciding what is the vote to cast, particularly as to the sales-tax feature of the bill.

Taxes are always unacceptable, always objectionable, and always cost political strength and popularity. It has been easy for us to decide to vote "no" on that question. That is easy. There is no trouble about that.

We have several sections of our club. There is the farm section. I have already paid my respects to them. They are willing to vote for anything as long as it does not cost their constituents anything, particularly if it gives them something.

Then we have our oil section. They say, "For God's sake do not vote a sales tax on the people." Yet they insist upon an excise tax on oil coming into this country, "so that our wells can reopen and so we can go ahead and extort more out of the consumers of oil."

Then there is our beer group. They say, "We are unalterably opposed to a sales tax on the necessaries of life." Then they turn around and say that "beer is a necessary of life, and we want you to put a provision in this bill which will legalize beer and levy a tax on it." Of course, they want that done on the theory that they do not expect a poor man to drink any beer, but that the beer tax is going to come out of the rich.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No. I do not want to turn this into that kind of a debate. [Laughter.]

There is our "soldier friends" section. They are one of the biggest groups we have. Let me say in passing that some of us belong to all of these groups and some to none in particular, but just "demagogue" around generally on anything that happens to come along. [Laughter.] But the soldier group of the Demagogue Club are not willing to vote for a sales tax which will put money into the Treasury, but they are willing to take any kind of money out of the Treasury and give it to the soldiers. They are not willing to take $600,000,000 from all the people of the country, as provided by this sales tax, yet they are "raring" to take $1,900,000,000 of the people's money and distribute it among the soldiers as a bonus.

Let me say here that I am going to pay the expenses of my next campaign out of my own pocket and not out of the Public Treasury. [Laughter.]

We formerly had a Member of the House who attributed his political success to the fact that he never voted for a tax bill and never voted against an appropriation bill. He was a fine and worthy gentleman, but, eventually he was gathered to his constituents [laughter], and later he was gathered to his fathers. He has been gathered to his fathers and is but a memory with us here who loved him for his personal qualities and charm; but his spirit, like that of John Brown, "Goes marching on, goes marching on." [Laughter.] We have in this House, Members who will not vote to reduce the public expenses one penny but who are over $10,000 graduated up to 40 per cent on incomes in constantly imposing claims upon the public funds; they lead raids upon the Public Treasury but will not vote a tax to replenish it. I do protest it is not fair for these gentlemen, as much as I sympathize with them in the dire situation that leads them to do these things [laughter]—it is not fair for them to put upon the remainder of us the burden of producing all the patriotism and all the brains for the Congress. [Laughter and applause.]

And now I close. The Republicans got us into this. When I was a soldier in the Spanish War, on one rainy, disagreeable night, a little, short sergeant, Billy Ball, brought in a bunch of recruits. They had been drunk all night and all day and had now sobered up; they had had nothing to eat for a day or two and were as wet as drowned rats. They came into camp. Those of you who have ever served in the Army know how hard-boiled soldiers are. We did not give them even a pleasant look. They could not get even a place to sit down, nothing dry to put on, or anything to eat. Finally, one tall fellow whom I came later to know as Charlie Connally, one of the bunch who had just come in, found this little sergeant who had brought him in. He walked up to him and shook his finger in his face and said, "Look here, Billy Ball, you got us into this." Billy looked up into his face and said, "Yes; but, by gad, I can't get you out of it."

The Republicans got us into this but they can not get us out of it. It will take the combined courage and devotion of the whole people of this country to meet this emergency. [Applause.] I call upon my party associates, I call upon my fellow Democrats, to respond, as Democrats always have responded-do your duty by your country; correct the evils which the opposition party has brought about, redeem your country's credit, put it upon solid ground. The past is dead; let us go forward to the future. [Prolonged applause, the Members rising.]

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CANFIELD].

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, the much-discussed tax bill is now before us, and we shall all have to admit that we have just listened to one of the ablest speeches, made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], that has been made in favor of this great bill. [Applause.]

As has been previously stated, the members of the Ways and Means Committee have been called upon to devise ways and means by which the deficit in the Federal Treasury may be balanced. In other words, we have been asked to devise ways and means to collect over a billion dollars in additional taxes at a time when there is not a single person in the United States that feels they should be called upon to pay 1 cent of it, and believe me it has been some job. The facts are, it is the biggest job any committee of this House has ever been called upon to do. There have been times when more taxes had to be raised, but it was at a time when business conditions were entirely different. Here we are in the worst financial panic ever known in this country, almost every class of business being operated at a loss or without profit and still we are called upon to increase taxes to take care of the deficit in the Treasury.

On January 13, Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, through then Under Secretary Mills, reported to us that the fiscal year of 1931 closed with a deficit of $903,000,000. That it was estimated that the fiscal year of 1932 would close with a deficit of $2,123,000,000 and that it was estimated that expenditures will exceed receipts by no less than $1,417,000,000 in the fiscal year 1933. This he stated was due, on one hand, to increased expenditures, and, on the other, to a decline in receipts from taxation and postal receipts.

He further stated that it would require approximately $920,000,000 additional income from taxes to bring the Budget into balance by July 1, 1933, providing the proposed tax law was made retroactive. This, as you know, the Ways and Means Committee did not deem advisable.

At that time the Secretary of the Treasury recommended an increase on individual incomes to be fixed at 2, 4, and 6 per cent; surtax rates at 1 per cent, beginning with incomes excess of $500,000.

He recommended that personal exemptions be fixed at $1,000 for single persons and $2,500 for married men with a credit of $400 for each dependent. That corporation income tax be increased from 12 per cent to 121/2 per cent. That the exemption of $3,000 for domestic corporations with net income of $25,000 or less be eliminated, that the tax on cigarettes and tobacco be increased one-sixth; and increase of 1 cent in the existing stamp tax upon sales or transfer of capital stock; that a 10 per cent admission tax be placed on all admission tickets of 10 cents or over. A 5 per cent tax on automobiles, 3 per cent on trucks, and 2½ per cent on accessories. A stamp tax on conveyances of realty of 50 cents for each $500 of value in excess of $100: a tax of 5 per cent on manufacturers' sales of radio and phonograph equipment and accessories. A stamp tax of 2 cents on each check and draft; and a tax on telephone, telegraph, cable, and radio messages of 5 cents for charges in amount of 14 to 50 cents and 10 cents for charges in amounts in excess of 50 cents.

He further recommended an estate tax of 25 per cent, and that the 5 per cent added tax should be a supertax.

He also recommended that the postage rates be made 3 cents on first-class letters to take care of the deficit in the postal revenues.

At that time he estimated that if his recommendations were carried out the deficit would be taken care of by July 1, 1933.

On February 11 these estimates were revised, and at that time it was estimated that the proposed changes suggested by the Secretary on January 13 would only increase the incomes of the Government $786,000,000 and that instead of the deficit being $920,000,000 July 1, 1933, it would be $1,241,000,000; or, in other words, we were informed that our job of devising ways and means of taking care of the deficit in the Treasury would be just about twice as hard as it was first estimated it would be.

When it was learned what the Secretary of the Treasury's recommendations were, every industry that was to be affected demanded that they be heard; and without exception they proved, to their own satisfaction at least, that they were not in position to pay any part of the proposed increase in taxes that had been suggested by the Secretary of the Treasury.

After holding hearings for several weeks the members of the Ways and Means Committee went into executive session for the purpose of writing the tax bill, and then their real work began, and now you have before you a bill which is the recommendation of the majority of the committee. In fact, it was voted out by unanimous vote, some, however, voting to report it out with the understanding that they reserved the right to offer amendments on the floor when the bill was up for consideration, and I am frank to say that my vote was cast to report the bill to the House with the understanding that I reserved the right to offer certain amendments to which I will refer later.

The first source of revenue agreed upon was the income tax. As the bill has been written the exemption for a single person is $1,000 and $2,500 for married men, with $400 exemption for dependents. This, it is estimated, will bring in an additional $39,000,000 over the present law.

The normal tax on individuals as proposed by the committee will be 2 per cent of the first $4,000. Four per cent of the next $4,000, and 6 per cent of the remainder of the net incomes.

In the case of individuals whose income is derived from salaries and personal endeavor, called earned income, the bill gives relief similar to present law up to $12,000. The present law gives relief up to $30,000. As a simplification measure the 25 per cent tax credit has been changed to a 121/2 per cent deduction from net income subject to normal tax. This latter change makes no substantial change in the amount of the allowance. The change in the limitation from $30,000 to $12,000, however, will give in excess of $10,000,000 additional revenue.

The effect of the proposed change recommended on various incomes is shown in the following table.

Mr. Chairman. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and to include therein a certain table.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The table referred to follows:

Comparative tax table on earned incomes

[Basis, married man with no dependents. Earned incomes recognized as earned only up to $12,000]

Net income	Total tax under 12½ per cent deduction from nor- mal tax provided by the bill	Total tax if 25 per cent tax credit method provided by present law were retained

Mr. CANFIELD. To show how this will work out I submit the following example for report of a married man without dependents:

Present method
Net incomeExemption	$5,000.00 2,500.00
Taxable net income	2, 500.00 .02
Tax25 per cent earned income credit	50. 00 12. 50
Net tax	37.50
Proposed method
Net income $2,500.00	5, 000. 00
12½ per cent deduction from net income 625.00	3, 125.00
Taxable net income	1, 875.00 .02
Net tax	37.50

While on a $5,000 earned income the tax figures out the same, it will not do so in every instance. The difference in the tax will be small, as shown by the above comparative tax table, and it will be very helpful to the taxpayer when he makes out his income-tax report.

The Treasury Department and tax experts tell us the present method has always been very much misunderstood by the average taxpayer and has been the cause of their making many mistakes in filing their income-tax reports.

The surtax on individuals is as follows: On the first $10,000 there will be no surtax. On incomes in excess of $10,000 there is a graduated tax of from 1 per cent up to 40 per cent on incomes over $100,000. This together with the normal tax will make the tax on incomes over $100,000 46 per cent. When the proper time comes, if I can get recognition, I expect to move to amend the bill to make the surtax 43 per cent of incomes over $200,000, 46 per cent of incomes over $300,000, 48 per cent of incomes over $400,000, and 50 per cent of incomes over $500,000. I realize this is a high tax and that with the normal tax it will make the tax on incomes over $500,000 56 per cent, but, ladies and gentlemen, with conditions the way they are to-day no man should object to paying this amount of tax to help support the Government, for if it were not for the Government back of him he could not make that amount and if the deficit in the Treasury is not taken care of, and that without delay, in my opinion there will be no incomes of over $500,000, or anything like that amount in this country.

The next thing the committee agreed to was to increase the corporation tax from 12 to 13 per cent, with an exemption of $2,000 allowed to those whose income is less than $10,000. The present law, as you know, allows an exemption of $3,000 to corporations with an income of $25,000.

We then agreed to double the estate tax, which will make it 40 per cent on estates of over $10,000,000, and the additional 20 per cent is to be considered as a supertax and all be paid to the Federal Government.

A gift tax with a maximum rate of 30 per cent on gifts of $10,000,000 or over was agreed upon; not that it will produce any large amount of revenue but to protect the estate tax, and the rate was made lower than the estate tax with the expressed hope that it would persuade owners of large estates to make gifts to their heirs as soon as possible and thereby lower their estate tax and increase the income to the Treasury while it is most needed.

We then agreed on an additional tax of 2 cents on the issue of and the transfer of stock. A tax of 4 cents per gallon on lubricating oil. A tax of 5 cents per gallon on wort. A tax of 40 per cent on grape sirup, grape concentrate, and evaporated grape juice, if containing more than 35 per cent of sugar by weight. A tax of 5 cents on telegraph, telephone, and radio messages costing over 30 cents and less than 50 cents, and 10 cents on messages costing 50 cents or more. A tax of 1 cent a gallon on imported crude oil, fuel oil, and gasoline.

The committee then voted to place a tax of 10 per cent on admissions of 25 cents or more. To this I did not agree in the committee, and at the proper time, if I can get recognition, I expect to move to amend the bill by moving to strike out the words "less than 25 cents" and inserting "more than 50 cents." This will mean there will be no admission tax on admissions of 50 cents or less and will not impose an admission tax on the average man and woman who is only privileged to take the members of their family to an entertainment of some kind possibly once or twice a month, and it will also take care of the picture-show houses in our smaller towns and cities, who are hardly able to make enough to keep open with conditions as they are at the present time.

A number of administrative changes have been made in the bill; in other words, we have attempted to plug up the gaps in the administration measures where the wealthy taxpayers have been able to dodge a large amount of income tax, and it is estimated that through these changes the Government will save at least $100,000,000 in taxes paid in 1933 for 1932, and a much larger amount for 1933, which will be paid in 1934. Much of this, I am frank to say, was accomplished through the advice and counsel of the experts who worked with us on the bill, namely, Mr. Beaman, of the Drafting Board; Mr. Parker, of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation; Mr. Tuerney and Mr. Bartholow, of the Treasury Department; Mr. Collins, of the Federal Trade Commission; Doctor Jager and other employees of the Department of Commerce; Mr. Alvord and Mr. Gregg, two very able practicing attorneys, who reside here in Washington, and who are experts on the income tax law.

The chairman of the Appropriations Committee has stated that the Appropriations Committee expects to cut appropriations $125,000,000 or more, and the chairman of the Post Office Committee has stated that the Post Office Committee expects to recommend legislation that will increase the postal revenue $25,000,000 or more. The reductions that will be made by the Appropriations Committee and the increases that will be made by the Post Office Committee, together with all the proposed changes recommended by the Ways and Means Committee, left us approximately $600,000,000 short of balancing the Budget July 1, 1933.

The question, then, was what to do, how and where to get the additional $600,000,000 to balance the Budget, which I believe every business man, yes, every thinking man, in the United States feels should be done as quickly as possible. The recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury to place high excise taxes on a number of manufactured articles was given consideration. This, as I previously stated, was seriously objected to by every industry in the country upon whom these taxes would fall. They then gave consideration to a general manufacturers' excise tax, and, after due consideration, it was found that a large majority of the members of the committee felt that this was the most equitable way to raise the additional amount needed to balance the Budget.

In this connection I want to say there is no man in this House, yes, there is no man in the entire country that is any more against a general sales tax than I am, and to be frank with you I voted against the manufacturers' excise tax in the committee, but the majority of the committee felt that this was the best way to raise the additional amount to balance the Budget and as this is emergency legislation and is to end July 1, 1934, I expect to go along with the committee, except that I feel that a manufacturers' excise tax of 2 per cent will balance the Budget, and if I can get recognition I expect to move to make the excise tax 2 per cent instead of 2½ per cent, as I am satisfied that the estimates that have been given to us by the Treasury Department are at least $100,000,000 under what will be produced by the changes recommended by our committee.

When I listen to the debate here on the floor I can not but feel that some of the statements that have been made were made before the Member that made them took time to reach the manufacturers' excise tax that has been proposed by the Ways and Means Committee. One would be led to believe that the committee had recommended a general sales tax, which is far from the fact.

Let us take a few minutes to see what this much-discussed excise tax really is.

First, it is a low tax; second, it is enacted as a temporary emergency measure; third, it exempts practically all farm and staple food products; fourth, it exempts small manufacturers that do less than $20,000 business; fifth, it prevents pyramiding and places the excise tax on the manufacturers' price and not on the retail price; sixth, it is imposed uniformly and without discrimination; seventh, it reaches the wealthy who have all their wealth in tax-exempt securities to avoid paying a tax; eighth, where a special excise tax is being paid under the present law the manufacturers excise tax will not apply; ninth, it gives an advantage to the small manufacturers; and tenth, it will raise the amount necessary to balance the Budget and not impose an unbearable tax burden on anyone.

One of the outstanding features of the manufacturers' excise tax is that it prevents pyramiding; only one tax is to be paid on any article. This is eliminated under the bill by a system of licensing. All manufacturers and producers whose gross receipts are over $20,000 must be licensed. This permits the sale of articles tax free from one licensed manufacturer to another. By this system the product of one licensed manufacturer which is to be used as material by a second licensed manufacturer is passed on without a tax until the finished article is sold by the manufacturer to the trade and then the tax is imposed on the manufacturers' wholesale price.

Should a licensed manufacturer sell an article that has been processed in any way to an unlicensed manufacturer to be further processed, then the tax is imposed on the processed article or material that is sold by the licensed manufacturer to the unlicensed manufacturer to be further processed, but should an unlicensed manufacturer sell processed material to another unlicensed manufacturer there will be no tax, thereby giving an advantage to small manufacturers in all classes of business.

Much has been said about the articles that are exempt from tax. The committee recommends that all farm or garden products, fertilizer, and such grades of articles as are used chiefly for fertilizer and the ingredients used in the manufacture of fertilizers; garden or field seeds; bran, shorts, and feeds for animals or fowls; meat, fish, including shell-fish; poultry, bacon, hams, pig shoulders, pig jowls; butter, oleomargarine, and other substitutes for butter; cheese, milk, and cream in any form; eggs in shell; bread, flour, and meal made of grain and semolina; sugar, tea, coffee, salt; any article with respect to which an internal-revenue tax is imposed under existing law; water not in closed containers; newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals, books, pamphlets, and music in raised print used exclusively by or for the blind; textbooks for use in private or public schools or other institutions of learning; Bibles comprising the books of the Old or New Testament, or both; rosaries, chaplets, medals, and similar articles of religious devotion; hymn books, prayer books, and manuals of religious devotion; books of religious reading, thought, or action; books of religious statistics and altars, pulpits, communion tables, baptismal fonts, and shrines, parts thereof; religious statuary and pictures; collection envelopes, plates, and baskets; stationery and record books; cassocks, banners, and articles of regalia worn on the person or carried in the hand; tapers, lights, and candles; sanctuary oil; all the foregoing when manufactured exclusively for use in houses of worship.

The facts are, ladies and gentlemen of the House, the more you study the manufacturers' excise tax and the better you understand it the more you will be impressed with it and the less objectionable it will be to you. As I stated in the beginning, many statements have been made here on the floor by Members who, it seems, do not understand the bill, and I firmly believe after you have had time to study it you will feel as the committee did—that as an emergency measure it is the best way that can be devised to raise the required amount of money to balance the Budget.

As our acting chairman has said, in the House we have two schools of thought; there are those who feel that we should not attempt to raise taxes to balance the Budget at this time, but should continue to sell bonds and increase the indebtedness of the country, and there are those who feel that it is imperative that the Budget be balanced as quickly as possible and that it is not good policy to continue to increase the public debt during peace times.

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, I am frank to say that I am one of those who feel that the Budget should be balanced as quickly as possible and that everything should be done to cut down appropriations in every way possible, and that all Government expenses should be cut; in fact, Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who feel that the expenses of running this Government can and should be cut at the very least 25 per cent to 331/3 per cent. All classes of business have been forced to reduce salaries and expenses of all kinds, and there is no reason why Government salaries and all Government expenses should not be reduced. especially when we are called upon to increase taxes to make it possible to collect an additional billion dollars over what can be collected under the present law. Not only should we reduce salaries from the highest to the lowest, but the general survey that is being made should make it possible to eliminate many useless bureaus and boards and thereby make a big reduction in the expense of running the Government. [Applause.]

In conclusion I want to say this: Our Government may be able to get by for a year or two by issuing bonds and not balancing the Budget, but, gentlemen, if Congress does not face this responsibility and see that the Budget is balanced by July 1, 1933, in my opinion the stability of our credit will be questioned, for no country can go on during peace times spending more money than it receives in taxes without impairing its credit. This will cause our bonds to further depreciate, and when United States bonds depreciate all other classes of securities depreciate, as well as lands, business, and everything else.

Now, gentlemen, I must close, but before doing so I want to say this to my Democratic colleagues who have spoken against this bill: We are responsible for the action of this House. We asked for that responsibility, and it has been given to us. We are now faced with the responsibility of balancing the Budget. Are we going to do our duty and hold the confidence of the people of the country by measuring up to the full responsibility they have placed on us?

I will agree with you that this deficit baby is a Republican child; but, gentlemen, we are now, as Democrats and as majority Members of this House, charged with the responsibility of helping take care of the child, so let us not fall down on the job but measure up to our full responsibility and see that the Budget is balanced and the credit of the Nation saved.

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentleman, as I previously stated, this bill is not satisfactory to me in every way, and I am sure every member of the Ways and Means Committee would like to see many changes in it, but no one member of a committee can write a tax bill when there are 24 other members that have convictions of their own as to the way it should be written. This bill is the recommendation of the majority of the committee that you charged with the responsibility of devising ways and means as to how the additional tax should be raised.

I feel that it is imperative that the Budget be balanced not later than July 1, 1933. In fact, I fear for what may happen if it is not balanced, and I trust that the membership of this House will do their duty—yes, face this great responsibility—by voting for a tax bill that will balance the Budget and save the credit of the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Swing].

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I appreciate the responsibility which rested upon the Ways and Means Committee in preparing a bill that would balance the Budget, because that is, of course, desirable, and I give my complete accord to that object. I desire nothing I say here to be construed as reflecting on the committee except that I differ sharply with them in the matter of policy.

This bill raises the money, if that is the sole and only purpose a revenue bill has to perform. If it be that social justice is a matter of no concern, then this bill will fulfill the purpose expected of it.

In the statement of Mr. Mellon before the committee he made quite clear his long-held view, that the present revenue structure of the Government was weak, as he called it, because it rested on too narrow a basis, and he urged the committee to broaden the basis, and I think the committee must have been convinced, because they have certainly broadened it to the point where they are going to tax everybody and almost everything.

On that general principle a poll tax levied on every person would be the broadest basis you could have for a revenue bill. And yet, of course, you recognize that that is ridiculous, because taxes are not paid by the head or out of the mind but out of the pocketbook, and the soundest basis for a revenue bill is not the human beings but it is the dollars, the wealth, and the property of the country.

I can not give my support or my vote to the bill as it is written, because a careful consideration of its provisions convinces me that 75 per cent of the tax is going to be paid by people who have less than 25 per cent of the means to pay the tax.

Mr. KVALE. That is too conservative.

Mr. SWING. The gentleman says that is too conservative. I have heard the statement made, and it is in the hearings, that 10 per cent of the people possess 90 per cent of the wealth. A sales tax is wrong fundamentally in principle, because it ignores the fundamental basis of taxation, which is the ability to pay.

When the war was being conducted we had no hesitancy about providing man power according to ability to fight, and now when we are facing another great national crisis regarding the revenue, and we must have dollar power, there is only one yardstick to measure by and that is ability to pay.

A sales tax is wrong again because it is a penalty upon consumption at a time when we need, not restriction on consumption but a stimulus to consumption.

A sales tax is wrong because it is the very opposite of an income tax, which is the most just tax ever devised. It is the opposite of an income tax because in an income tax you pay for your prosperity, while here you pay according to your exigencies, your needs, and your misfortunes. A man who is the most hungry pays the most tax because he eats the most. A man who is so unfortunate as to have the most sickness must pay the most tax because he has to pay for the most medicine. The man who has property destroyed and must replace it, if he has the means to do so, is the one upon whom the tax falls the heaviest when he is least able to bear it.

So I am not in favor of a sales tax, and I shall vote, if the opportunity is afforded me, to strike out the sales tax.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWING. I yield.

Mr. GLOVER. I understand that this bill will raise $1,246,000,000, and that $595,000,000 of that is to be raised by a sales tax, leaving—

Mr. SWING. Six hundred million dollars.

Mr. GLOVER. And $651,000,000 would be raised by the bill, with the sales tax stricken out. What does the gentleman say about not attempting to balance the Budget within two years, but striking out the sales tax and extending the provisions of the bill to four years instead of two?

Mr. SWING. Of course, there is not going to be a miracle performed of restoring the country to prosperity merely by balancing the Budget; still I favor balancing the Budget.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWING. I can not yield any farther until I have completed some thoughts that I have in mind. The taking away of the exemptions which in 1926 we gave to the people in the lower brackets who were barely making a living is not justified. The distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] in explaining his bill admitted that the 1,700,000 taxpayers who were going to be put back on the tax roll by dropping the exemptions down to $1,000 for a single person and to $2,500 for a married man, were not going to produce any considerable sum of money. Probably it will cost as much money to collect as we take in from them. At least that is the statement that was made in 1926, when we granted the exemptions. Why should a man who receives his salary on the first of the month and immediately passes it on to others on the second of the month be charged a tax simply as a go-between? There is just one reason why the 1,700,000 little fellows who receive a bare living are in this bill, and that is they are put there to be hostages for the big fellows in the higher brackets, so that at the earliest possible moment the big fellows will have the assistance of the little fellows in getting out of these increased taxes.

I am opposed to taxing the motion-picture shows. They are the poor man's club. They are his only recreation. They are a necessary part of the normal life of every American family. Certainly tickets up to 50 cents should be exempt.

I favor increasing the income surtaxes, particularly in the upper brackets. We have a graduated surtax from $10,000 to $100,000, and every one here justifies it and says that it is meritorious and good public policy. What is there so sacred about the incomes in excess of $100,000 that suddenly at that point the graduation should stop. One hundred thousand is a paltry sum compared with the 5,800 taxpayers whose income every year is in excess of $100,000, and on up to $5,000,000 or more. If there is justification for graduating the income tax based on ability to pay from $10,000 up to $100,000, there is every reason in the world why that graduation should continue from the $100,000 up to at least $1,000,000 a year income. [Applause.] They say that $100,000 is as far as we can go, that after that suddenly the taxpayers who will be honest with a graduated tax up to $100,000 will suddenly become dishonest, and the Government will be unable to cope with those who have incomes from $100,000 to $1,000,000. I do not believe it.

In 1918 we had a graduated income tax up to 65 per cent, not 65 per cent upon the total income, but 65 per cent only on that portion of the income which was in excess of $1,000,000. I favor returning to the war rates because we are to-day confronted with a crisis equal to that of the World War; a crisis that has caused the American people more suffering, more in loss of property than the World War. I favor raising the taxes on estates to correspond with what I have indicated on incomes, and those taxes ought to I be permanent, although I admit that the income rate should be temporary in these higher brackets during only the present depression. After allowing the big boys to play with their money during their lifetime and after allowing them the pleasure and pride of piling up dollar on dollar, while living, a generous estate tax should be levied on their death. There is no natural law, there is only the law of man, which gives individuals the right to name to whom their property shall go at death. It is the protection of organized society that enables them to pile up these great fortunes which to-day are a menace to the security and continuation of American institutions, economic, social, and political. This tax law, in addition to raising revenue, ought to have for its purpose the redistribution of a part of these tremendously large private fortunes.

In this bill we should not tax the necessities of life. Reference has been made to the Canadian law, and yet they have thousands of specific exemptions where we have merely dozens. Why should the crutches of a cripple be taxed? Why should medicine that goes to the sick be taxed? When raw fruits and vegetables are not taxed in the summer, why should those same necessities of life be taxed in winter, merely because they have been put in cans to be preserved and kept until winter? Why should fuel to warm the little home in winter be taxed, and why should ice to preserve food in summer be taxed? Why should shoes and ordinary clothing be taxed? We can not afford, much as we desire, to balance the Budget with taxes that from those that have not are taken while from those who have little is taken. That is what we are saying with reference to those with incomes in excess of $100,000 a year. It is no answer to say you are seeking to soak the rich. I say that the basis for the collection of revenue during the present crisis should be the same yardstick that was used during the World War, and that is take the money according to the ability to pay. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Andrew].

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, there are three considerations of a general character that I should like to offer in relation to this bill.

First, there is the experience of other countries with the problem which we face to-day. The problem of balancing the Budget is one that has confronted every government in the world during the recent years of economic depression, and it is well for us to bear in mind the experience that other countries have had in dealing with it. In whatever direction we look, whether across the Atlantic or across the Pacific, whether to the south of us or to the north, we see governments that have failed to deal in time with situations not unlike our own. They have seen their receipts from taxes wither and dwindle and fall far behind their expenditures. They have delayed in providing other sources of revenue and have sunk into the mire of debt. Then, suddenly, before the legislators fully realized what was happening, their people and the world at large have lost confidence, have sold their government securities, secluded what gold they could lay their hands on, and the governments have passed into virtual bankruptcy. This experience has now become so familiar that we have almost ceased to notice it, and we run the risk of not reflecting upon its gravity.

A year ago who would have considered it possible that a proud government like that of Great Britain was on the verge of insolvency or in danger of default? Yet that seemingly incredible thing happened, and by the end of last December the credit of Great Britain was so impaired that the British pound sterling, hitherto the world's accepted standard of value, was selling on our market at 66 cents on the dollar. In less than three months it lost a third of its value and fell from a par equivalent of $4.86 to $3.25, while the value of all British notes and bonds and promises to pay inevitably tumbled with it. The same thing to a greater or less degree has occurred during the last six posals of similar character before the session ends.

months in other great countries of Europe. In Norway and Sweden and Denmark, in Finland, and in Portugal, to single out notable examples, when governments had failed to balance their budgets, or had tried to balance them by resort to postponed payments, their people in turn lost faith in their government's promises to pay, withdrew coin from circulation, and hoarded it, and the currency of these countries also was plunged into chaos. Much the same thing has happened in recent years in Brazil, Argentina, Venezuela and, in fact, throughout most of South America. It has also happened in varying degrees in the countries that border our frontiers, in Mexico and in Canada. I shall insert in the RECORD at this point a list of countries which during the last three years have experienced this misfortune.

With such lessons everywhere before our eyes, we should be criminally negligent if we did not promptly give our most earnest attention to the financial situation of our own Government.

The second consideration to which I invite your attention is that of our own Treasury, which, far stronger than that of any other government treasury in the world, with perhaps one exception, is to-day not altogether free from possible danger. The vast estimated deficit of $2,240,000,000 which has been repeatedly stated is to be expected for the present fiscal year, ominous though it is, does not by any means tell the whole story. It, of course, takes no account of the $412,000,000 required by law for sinking-fund and other debt retirement. But that is not serious as compared with the fact that in the past two years instead of reducing the debt we have increased it by more than $3,000,000,000. estimated deficit of $2.240,000,000 also takes no account of numerous loans and advances which the Treasury has been called upon to make on behalf of measures of emergency relief. It takes no account of hundreds of millions advanced to veterans as loans on their so-called bonus certificates. It takes no account of the $125,000,000 being advanced to the Federal land banks. It takes no account of the $500,000,000 being advanced to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. If these various items were included in the reckoning, the total of this year's drain on the Treasury would be half again as large as the $2,240,000,000 estimated for the Treasury deficit.

Far more serious than this, the estimated deficit makes no allowance for additional expenditures that may still be authorized before Congress adjourns. It includes, for example, no allowance for any part of the $132,500,000 increase in appropriations for road building so hastily rushed through the House a fortnight ago. That appropriation, fortunately, may never become law. But if one can judge the financial notions of the present leaders of the House by their sponsorship of that bill, remembering that not a single Democratic member of the Ways and Means Committee, or even of the Economy Committee, both of which are supposedly interested in balancing the Budget, spoke a word or cast a vote against it, one may well anticipate other lavish proIf the announced deficit for the current year of $2,240,-000,000 does not begin to cover this year's Treasury expenditures, there is little reason to believe that the guess made for next year of a deficit of about half that sum conforms any more closely with what will eventually occur. In my humble judgment, the revenue to be produced by the bill now under consideration, if adopted in its entirety, is not likely to come near meeting the expenditures of the next fiscal year. The proposed taxes, onerous and irritating as they are, will not by any means balance next year's Budget. In the face of such a situation, with the examples of government bankruptcy everywhere in the world to warn us, there is abundant and compelling reason why we should take serious thought as to what can be done.

That brings me to the third consideration. The Ways and Means Committee has made a most painstaking and conscientious effort to deal with our grave financial situation. They have proposed taxes which will bear heavily on every business and upon every citizen. Yet it is more than doubtful whether they have provided for enough revenue to meet the requirements of a balanced Budget, and it is certain that they have brought upon themselves a storm of criticism from all sections of the country. Nevertheless the committee, as a whole, has studiously avoided any reference to one of the greatest sources of revenue of virtually every other government in the world. They have made no mention of the only tax which those upon whom it is levied would be willing and glad to pay, and which throughout most of our history has been a principal resource of our American fiscal system.

The Canadian Provinces to-day collect more than 32 per cent of all their revenue from customs and excise duties on alcoholic beverages, and the Dominion Government in addition obtains nearly 13 per cent of its income from the same source. Great Britain collects about 20 per cent of its revenue from these taxes, Sweden 19 per cent, Denmark 17 per cent. It may be well to remind you at the same time that in these four countries just named conditions with respect to lawlessness and drinking show a strikingly favorable contrast to our own. I shall place in the Record at this point a table showing the revenue obtained by the governments of these and other countries from their liquor taxes.

Income from customs duties and excise taxes on alcoholic liquors

Country	Year	Income from liquor taxes	Per cent of total taxation

Great Britain received in 1930 from this source alone $629,373,000, which was equivalent to a tax of $14 per capita. A similar tax in the United States would yield in excess of $1,700,000,000, or seven hundred millions more than all of the taxes provided for in this bill. [Applause.] In other words, if we could have in the United States a system of excise and customs taxes on liquors like that of Great Britain, we should not need the manufacturers' sales tax provided in this bill. We should not need the taxes on moving pictures and theaters. We should not need the taxes on gasoline and oil. We should not need the increased taxes on incomes, corporations, gifts, and estates. We should not need a single one of the taxes provided for in this bill, but nevertheless our Treasury would gain 70 per cent more revenue than the whole present bill is expected to yield. [Applause.]

I call these facts to the attention of the House, having full knowledge that no such tax is possible under present laws, and with no desire to precipitate a discussion of prohibition in its other aspects. Some of you doubtless believe that the eighteenth amendment abolished the liquor traffic and contend that we do not want it back again, no matter what it costs. Others may believe as I do, that while the eighteenth amendment was intended to abolish the liquor traffic, it has really accomplished little else in most places than "to free that traffic from taxation and control." Whichever of us is right, the fact remains and is not open to dispute that but for that amendment we could to-day provide all of the revenue necessary for our Treasury without the slightest increase in or addition to our other taxes. And if we are ever to get rid of some of the burdensome taxes now on the statute books or which we are about to impose, it can be done. It can be done partly through a change in the Volstead law. It can be done wholly through a change in the eighteenth amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Beam].

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Chairman, we are considering a measure to-day of indeed great importance to the people of our country, one which is far-reaching in its scope and affects every citizen of our land in its operation.

The cost of government is a problem which has confronted every nation from the earliest dawn of history until the present time.

The history of civilization discloses a picture and portrays a warning which it behooves us as Members of the House to take heed and caution before we place upon the taxpayers of this country a burden greatly in excess of their power to endure or their willingness to bear.

"Thus the power to tax," says Chief Justice Marshall in giving the opinion of the Supreme Court denying the right of the State of Maryland to tax the bank of the United States, "involves the power to destroy."

These are unusual times in the history of our Government—times in which the temper of our people are strained, and that usual calm and forbearance which generally prevails throughout our land has now been supplanted by a feeling of uncertainty, of unrest, and of apprehension. It therefore becomes us to pause and consider the consequences before we impose greater obligations and heavier taxation upon the citizens of the United States at this particular time.

The people of America have been patient, even to the extreme, during this period of depression. Never before in the history of our country was a greater manifestation of love and devotion to the principles and ideals of Americanism than that displayed by our citizens during these dark and trying days. To trespass further upon their indulgent spirit, in the light of conditions now prevailing throughout the Nation, would be, in my humble opinion, an unwise and injudicious movement.

The people of America are in no frame of mind for increased taxation. If these were prosperous times, I venture to say that the average American citizen, realizing his responsibilities to his Government and in a true spirit of citizenship, would be willing and desirous of meeting his obligations in that respect.

But, Mr. Chairman, a different condition exists to-day; and, in view of these present circumstances, our course of procedure must be determined.

Is there a man in this Chamber to-day who can say that agriculture can stand further taxation?

Is there a person present who can say that the laboring classes of America can stand to be taxed to a greater extent?

Is there any within the hearing of my voice who can say that business should be further complicated and harassed with vexatious taxation, which in the ultimate will only retard and impede the return to normalcy, and in the final analysis will eventually be placed upon the consuming public or result in further reduction of wages for the laboring man?

If the proponents of this bill can answer this question satisfactorily, then I will vote for this measure.

If they can demonstrate that the great agricultural States of this country are in a flourishing condition and that the testimony before the Agriculture Committee as to their present plight and dilemma is mythical and unfounded, and if they can show that the great number of farm fore-closures have not actually occurred and that the inability of the farmer to pay his taxes in reality does not exist and that this great appropriation of 40,000,000 bushels of wheat, voted only last week by the membership of this House by practically a unanimous vote, to feed the hungry people of America and their livestock is unnecessary and nonessential, I will support this measure. [Applause.]

If the advocates of this bill can prove that the vast number of unemployed men in our cities and municipalities is merely a creature of the imagination, a figment of the mind, which does not exist, and that 8,300,000 idle men, with their dependent families, a great many in dire necessity and want, evicted from their homes and forming bread lines and soup lines from one end of our land to the other, can endure at this time to have placed upon their backs and shoulders further burdens of taxation, I will vote for and support this proposed bill. [Applause.]

If the sponsors of this measure can show that to further hamper and tax business while it is struggling to increase production, to stimulate trade, and thereby increase employment will have a beneficent and salutary effect upon its recovery, then I will certainly follow their recommendation and vote accordingly for this legislation.

But, gentlemen, we are face to face with facts and present realities which can not be denied; and no matter what language we may use, what theories we may adopt, what palliatives we may employ, we are confronted with the fact that agriculture is prostrate, business is paralyzed, and 8,300,000 American citizens are unable to find lucrative employment in our country to-day.

In the face of these conditions, confronted with such undeniable circumstances, are we going to be blind to these actualities and place new burdens of taxation upon the overwhelming load the American people are now enduring?

Colbert, the celebrated Finance Minister of Louis XIV, is reported to have said: "That the act of taxation consists in so plucking the goose [the people] as to procure the largest quantity of feathers with the least possible amount of squealing." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the people of America have already greatly exceeded that point in their patience; they can endure it no longer.

I appreciate the noble aspirations and desires which have prompted the Ways and Means Committee in their attempt to balance the Budget. I share with them that hope and expectation. But, Mr. Chairman, we have reached a situation in America to-day which can well be classed as a national emergency. If this be the case, extraordinary measures must be adopted and enacted to adequately meet these unusual demands.

It is therefore in the light of present economic conditions, in a desire to see the National Budget balanced, in the hope and expectation that revenue will be raised for the maintenance of the National Government without imposing hardships or unnecessary burdens upon the commercial, the industrial, and agricultural interests of the Nation, that I respectfully submit, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, that the only logical, sensible, and statesmanlike course to pursue is to legalize the production of beer and to levy an adequate and legitimate tax upon its consumption. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLY of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEAM. I yield.

Mr. KELLY of Illinois. Is it not a fact that through the illegal manufacture of beer as carried on in this country to-day millions upon millions of dollars are going into the hands of bootleggers that would otherwise go into the Treasury of the United States, provided the manufacture of beer was legalized?

Mr. BEAM. That is the undisputed evidence. What more proof could you have than the speech of the gentleman who just preceded me?

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEAM. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. Is it not a fact that the present bill now before us contains a tax on beer, which can not be used for anything else except beer, and this is an extortionate tax on bootleggers?

Mr. BEAM. I will come to that in a minute.

It is not my desire to engage in any discourse on prohibition. I realize fully you gentlemen have heard it discussed so frequently that its merits and demerits are clearly known to you all; but it is in the view of alleviating the taxing situation, in meeting this emergency of balancing the national Budget, and lifting from the backs of the laboring man and the farmers of the Nation additional burdens of increased taxation I desire to challenge your attention.

It is estimated conservatively that the amount of revenue which could be annually collected from a legitimate tax on beer would be between $350,000,000 and $450,000,000. This tremendous sum spread over a period of five years would net the Government a sufficient amount to meet the present deficit without any additional tax burdens to the people of our country.

Prohibition was a creature of the war. It was presented to the American people as a war measure, and with that acclaim and in that spirit it was so accepted.

But, Mr. Chairman, has its operation and enactment added to or decreased the cost of governmental expenditures, and have the results obtained added to the luster and fame of our country as would warrant such an enormous amount of governmental expense?

Has this prohibition enactment become an obsession with us to such an extent that in the great cry to reduce governmental expenditures the pruning knife of economy can not pierce its sacred precincts?

Prohibition can not be enforced, because it lacks the sentiment of the American people.

It is repugnant to our institutions and ideals of free government.

It is sumptuary in its aspects and has resulted in some of the most drastic un-American and unconscionable legislative enactments—as the infamous Jones 5-and-10 law—that ever desecrated the statutes of a republic or insulted the intelligence of a free and liberty-loving people.

How long, Members of the Congress, are we going to stand by and see its ravenous effect upon the citizens of our country?

How long are we going to permit ourselves to be engulfed with this hysteria of reform and reactionary policies which have made America the laughingstock of the world?

How long are we going to permit that unfortunate spectacle of honest and upright American citizens to be brought before a Federal court of the United States and there summarily fined and imprisoned—criminally stigmatized—because they, perchance, have in their possession a bottle of beer or a glass of liquor? [Applause.]

What a sad commentary such a sight reflects upon American justice and "American liberty."

I sometimes wonder what posterity will say of our present generation.

But the history of nations reveals the fact that abuses may be corrected—and are rectified—when the conscience of an enlightened people become fully awakened and thoroughly aroused to prevailing conditions.

The distinguished gentleman from Georgia in a statesmanlike manner recognized the fact that an amendment legalizing the production of beer would be germane to the bill.

"Therein, Members of the House, lies the solution of this tax problem."

Let us meet it as men, let us recognize it as the logical and sensible solution of this involved and complicated situation.

The people of America can not stand to be further taxed: that is obvious. They can not endure increased burdens. They are ready now to succumb under the weight of local, State, and Federal impositions. And to attempt as you are endeavoring by this bill to impose a tax upon lard and processed meat—such as boiled ham, sausage, and frankfurters, the food upon which the poor people depend for their sustenance—is one of the greatest tragedies of this proposed bill.

Now, I most respectfully call the attention of the committee to the provision on page 241 of the bill which was referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Schafer], starting at line 24, which is as follows:

(2) Brewers' wort, liquid malt, malt sirup, and malt extract, fluid, solid, or condensed, if containing less than 15 per cent of solids by weight, 5 cents a gallon; if containing 15 per cent or more of solids by weight, 35 cents a gallon.

What does this language mean? What imputation does it carry?

Does it not proclaim the fact—which everybody in America knows—that beer will be manufactured and sold illegally?

Is it not an attempt to tax indirectly that product which, if we had the courage, the statesmanship, vision, and the intestinal fortitude, we could tax legally, and by the revenue received therefrom balance the Budget of the United States instead of foisting unbearable taxes upon the people of our country in this period of economic depression?

To legalize beer at this time, members of the committee, under a pertinent amendment to this bill would not only be beneficial to the farmers of this country by enabling them to dispose of a large amount of their surplus grain but it would serve as an impetus for the return of prosperity to our people.

It would cause the wheels of commerce and industry once more to revolve. Workmen would again return to their employment. It would be an inspiring call to the citizens of our Nation to awaken from the lethargy in which we are engulfed and hail the advent of a new day on the broad horizon of American opportunity.

It would restore the birthright of liberty to our land and rededicate anew in the hearts and breasts of our people an abiding faith and a firm conviction in the integrity of her institutions and the nobility of her ideals.

Truth crushed to earth will rise again, The eternal years of God are hers.

[Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Crosser].

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, in the few minutes at my disposal I shall endeavor to avoid either hysteria or pseudohysteria. [Laughter and applause.]

The purpose of government is to assure justice among all human beings subject to that government. When it fails to do that, it fails in its true function and does not serve its real end. Tested by this standard I hesitate not a moment to say that the pending tax bill is not only an unjust but an unwise measure.

First, I lay down this fundamental proposition that we should be more concerned at the present moment about reviving business and not prate so much about balancing the Budget. I am, of course, in favor of providing the Government with sufficient money to pay our expenses. So is every other sensible person here, but I am here to tell you, my friends, that this obnoxious, iniquitous sales tax is calculated to make it more and more impossible to revive business so that it will be in a position to pay a substantial tax.

What is necessary to good business? The answer is: Demand. What is demand? It is evidence of a desire to consume. Every time you add a tax, or in other words, whenever you add to the cost of the things that the people must consume for their comfort, you thereby tend to decrease the demand for those goods. The more people must pay for goods the more they will hesitate to buy them. To a greater or lesser extent, depending upon the amount of tax you place upon those goods, just to that extent you discourage people from making demands for goods in general, manufactured or otherwise, you have slackened the movements of commerce. When you lessen the demand for goods, you make it unwise for manufacturers to produce the amount of goods they would otherwise manufacture. When you make it unwise and foolish for them to produce those goods, there are, of course, fewer men employed by those factories. Is that not as plain as a pikestaff, as plain as that two and two make four?

You know that it has been whispered around, this obnoxious tax, this tax upon consumers, must not be called consumers' tax, but rather a manufacturers' excise tax, thereby making its meaning a little more obscure in the popular mind.

When pressed to the wall for an explanation for its inclusion in this bill, what justification do they give you for this consumers' tax? Offer as a so-called reason the explanation that it is the one way you can get more money, more taxes than in any other without the people finding it out. Oh, my friends, what a motive to actuate the sponsors of a measure; what a lamentable reason to give as a justification for the adoption of any kind of governmental measure. [Applause.] Because, forsooth, they know full well that the ordinary man on the street will not understand this process of pillage, they say, "Ah, that is the plan we must seize upon."

They have not the hardihood, they have not the valor, the courage to struggle against those in high places; they have not the hardihood and the courage to say to them, "We insist that you pay your just share of the cost of government."

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Can the gentleman give any sound reason for the failure of the committee to graduate the income tax so it would hit the people he is talking about, above the $100,000 mark?

Mr. CROSSER. Of course not. I see no reason

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is not that discrimination against the man who conducts a business?

Mr. CROSSER. When we consider economic and sociological phases of the subject most of the taxes we levy have no foundation in justice.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. A railroad president or a noted surgeon, for instance, with an income of $101,000 pays the same rate of tax as Rockefeller, Mellon, and Ford, who have incomes of $10,000,000 each. Is there any justice in that?

Mr. CROSSER. Of course the gentleman knows my answer to that.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I do not see why they did not extend the graduated tax to the $5,000,000 mark.

Mr. CROSSER. The gentleman knows my position on that, of course. My friends, the conduct of those promoting this infamous proposition is not like that of the valorous knights of old; their conduct has not even the merit of the code of the freebooter of old, who boldly said, "Let him take who has the power and let him keep who can." We do not subscribe to that doctrine, of course; and yet, my friends, we have more respect for the man who is willing to give open battle, who is willing to challenge to open combat those who have what he wants, and who is willing to risk his own safety and his own life at times-we have more respect for that man than we have for the man who urges a system which permits him to come up behind the everyday fellow and to pick his pockets without his knowing it. Yet that is said to be one of the great virtues of the bill, that you can collect the tribute without the victim's knowing it. If that be virtue, give me none of it.

Why is it, my friends, that these so-called experts always go into a flutter, as was illustrated a little while ago, about balancing the Budget and say that we are in a terrible state and then always pick on the disinherited and the impoverished as the proper ones to carry the load necessary to balance the Budget? It is just for the reason that they know that they can with less opposition impose the burden on the ordinary people than is the case when they try to put the load upon those who can defend their position cleverly.

The unorganized, those who are untrained, must always suffer and bear more than their share of the burden simply because they have not the training to enable them to cope with those who would impose upon them.

The hysteria which some gentlemen exhibit with reference to balancing the Budget interests me, not to say amuses me.

The Secretary of the Treasury last December said to a group of bankers whom he was addressing: "Do not be worried." He told them not to become excited, that we can issue $4,000,000,000 or more bonds and get along nicely. Well, my friends, while I prefer to pay our bills out of revenues derived from taxation as we go along, yet rather than be a party to the imposition of an unjust burden on those who are now overburdened and in many cases overwhelmed, I would say let us issue the bonds necessary to meet the situation. [Applause.] My friends, this would not only be in the interest of the everyday man, but, as is always the case where justice is done, it will be in the interest of the so-called business man, much more in his interest than it would be to impose an unwise, silly, consumption tax, which will decrease business and cause more unemployment.

Another interesting aspect of the proposal is this: At the present time it is generally calculated that there are from 8,000,000 to 10,000,000 unemployed in the United States, 8,000,000 probably totally unemployed, and adding those partly employed, it makes about 10,000,000. Now, statisticians generally say that we should count five people for every head of a family. That would make between 40,000,000 and 50,000,000 people who are out of employment, without the means of earning their daily bread; yet this tax which they propose under the euphonious name of a manufacturers' excise tax is to be placed on the backs of such people, on the shoes they wear, on much of their food, on the utensils they must have to cook their meals, and things of that kind. So the burden falls with greater weight upon the forty or fifty million people who are already undersupplied and who have no means with which to earn their daily bread

Those who are in favor of this bill would have us believe that it is their sense of duty to the country that causes them to be willing to tax, unjustly and excessively, forty or fifty million people who are already in distress. It is like the old fellow who, when the war broke out, was asked what he would be willing to do. He said he would be willing to sacrifice all of his wife's relations. That is about the way with these folks. They are perfectly willing to sacrifice all of those who are not of great consequence to them. [Applause.]

I can not understand how they have been able to get anybody on the Democratic side of the House to favor this proposition. That is beyond my comprehension. The only way I can possibly explain it is that they are like sweet Alice Ben Bolt of whom you remember it was said that "she smiled with delight when you gave her a smile and trembled with fear at your frown."

I wonder if that is what has taken us off on these byways, away off from the plain road of Democratic duty. I am afraid so. I hope there will not be many of us cajoled by the attentions and approving smile of the Secretary of the Treasury into voting such an abomination as this upon the backs of the American people.

But pleasantry aside, my friends, for this is a very serious matter. Not only will this tax seriously retard a revival of business, not only will it increase the unjust burden that now rests upon the backs of more than 90 per cent of our American people, but in addition to that, when you shall have made it a part of our fiscal system, I predict that you will have almost an eternal struggle to rid the country of this consumption tax. [Applause.]

Tell me, you men sitting on this side, how you can denounce prohibitive tariffs on the ground that they place the tax burden on the backs of those least able to bear it, and then turn around and in another breath tell us you are for a consumption tax, slipped through, designated as the boys of to-day would say of new terms by "2-dollar words," under the newfangled term "manufacturers' excise tax"?

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman speaks about prohibitive tariff rates; it occurs to me the gentleman might like to develop the thought in that connection that the present tariff rates call for an ad valorem average rate of 41 per cent, in theory; and if you add to that a flat increase of  $2\frac{1}{4}$  per cent, it makes an increase of over  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent in the average rate.

Mr. CROSSER. Oh, yes; the gentleman is perfectly right. We keep adding and adding and adding. The dray horse must always bear the burden. He can not help himself. There are few to speak for him, and yet we see some who urge the increase of his burden, standing around in an unctuous way speaking with tearful voices about demagogues. Oh, ye gods.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. CROSSER. I say it is enough to make the angels laugh to hear some men who are supporting this proposition, talking about demagoguery.

No; my friends, this proposition would not be seriously proposed if the under dog, if the everyday man had the great influence to oppose it that the other folks have to push it; not for one minute. This is the explanation of the whole matter. Can we, who are of a later generation of that great movement founded by Thomas Jefferson, which is democracy in the fundamental sense—under the doctrine of equal rights for all and special privilege for none can we justify this iniquitous tax bill? Have we ceased to believe that taxes should not be levied according to the dire needs of the people, but rather according to the privilege men enjoy at the hands of society? [Applause.]

I have heard a lot of talk as to the right rule of taxation. After a man has once paid to the Government the just amount for the privilege of utilizing that part of the earth or the earth's resources placed under his control, I am not for penalizing him and having him pay more. If, however, we were to compel every man and woman in this country to pay for the advantage they have by virtue of the control of natural resources, which, according to God's law, belong to all the people, I tell you that you would not be splitting hairs here to-day about a lot of superficial claptrap as to the correct manner of getting revenue for this Government. [Applause.]

My friends, let us do out part in behalf of the everyday man, the man who is now almost overwhelmed by his load and can not defend himself. You may not receive the smiles of approval from high places, but you will get in return, through the heart throbs of a thankful populace, something that is far more satisfying than either the filthy lucre of the powers of pelf, or their condescending smile.

He is a slave who will not speak for the fallen and the weak; He is a slave who will not choose hatred, scoffing, and abuse Rather than in silence shrink from truth he needs but think; He is a slave who dare not be in the right with two or three.

[Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I am going to support this bill, because I believe that the honest, patriotic thing for this Congress to do is to balance the Budget. Unless we pass this bill or a substitute for it which will balance the Budget, this country is going to end up a third successive year with a deficit.

I believe that the people of this country expect Congress to do its duty and balance the Budget, just as the business institutions and individuals of this country are balancing their budgets. Now, it is probably true that it would be much more satisfactory to the taxpayers if we would balance the Budget by reducing expenses and expenditures rather than by increasing taxes, but every Member of this House knows that it is absolutely impossible to reduce expenditures in anything like the sum which would be necessary in order to finish the year 1933 with a balanced Budget. We know that at least three-quarters of the expenditures of this country for the year 1933 are going to be of such a nature that it is impossible for this Congress to make any cuts in them. We have an expenditure area of, perhaps, $1,000-000,000 within which cuts must be made. Nevertheless, I feel that even within these limits we can do a great deal more than has been done in the way of reducing expenditures.

I think that before Congress adjourns, before we let the people of the country feel the burden of a tax increase, we should make some cuts in salaries. I am not in favor of taking something away from the lower-paid employees, but I am ready to cut the salaries of employees who are receiving more than $2,000.

Mr. HARLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. HARLAN. Does the gentleman know the scientists who are employed by the Government in the Bureau of Standards and in the hospitals, who are getting four and five and six thousand dollars, and compare that with what they would earn outside?

Mr. HOPE. I am acquainted with some of the gentlemen. Mr. HARLAN. Then the gentleman knows that at present this Government is certainly getting the most for a lower salary than in any other part of the Government service?

Mr. HOPE. I agree with the gentleman that these men are not overpaid. I am not saying that these salaries are too high, but I do say the employees of the Federal Government in this time of stress ought to be willing to make the same sacrifices that other people in the country are making; and on that basis I justify cuts in Federal salaries at this time. Likewise, it must not be overlooked that the reduced cost of living makes it possible to decrease salaries at least 20 per cent without making any reduction in real wages as compared with 1927.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman say now, with such a tax as it is now proposed to force on the masses of the people, that he would still cut their salaries?

Mr. HOPE. I say I would prefer to cut their salaries rather than impose additional taxes on the common people of this country. Federal employees to-day, compared with the farmers and the wage earners of this country, are a privileged class, and I think they should bear a part of the burden of this depression. I further believe that they are patriotic enough to be perfectly willing to do so. However, I did not get up here to discuss Federal salaries. I merely wanted to state that I believe there are some taxes which we might eliminate in this bill if our Expenditures Committee or other appropriate committees in this Congress would reduce Federal salaries in the higher brackets.

Getting back to the bill that is before us. I say frankly I do not like a sales tax. I do not think that any of us like a sales tax. There is an instinctive feeling against it. Yet when we contemplate the taxes it is proposed to substitute for a sales tax, I think almost all of us will agree that the manufacturers' tax-or sales tax; whatever you want to call it-will be more satisfactory. What has been proposed in the place of a sales tax? A tax on gasoline, for one thing. Members of this House know how popular that would be throughout the country. Every one of you has been receiving letters and telegrams protesting against a tax on gasoline. We know that is a field which has already been preempted by the States as far as taxation is concerned. We know that in a great many States they are overdoing it, with the result that they have reached the point of diminishing returns already. We have a problem on our hands in the matter of bootlegging of gasoline at the present time, and it would intensify this problem as well as be unfair to the States to place a Federal tax of 1 cent a gallon on gaso-

It has been proposed that we increase the postage rates 1 cent on first-class matter. If you want an unpopular tax, I suggest that you adopt that. If there is going to be any unpopularity so far as a manufacturers' tax is concerned, you are going to have that multiplied ten times the moment you increase postage rates.

An automobile tax has been proposed. You know the protest that would come regarding that. You know and I know that such a tax is discriminatory, and it would be putting a tax on an industry which is already bearing more than its proper share of taxation.

Then there has been a proposal to put a tax on bank checks, which in my opinion would be the worst nuisance tax which could be devised. You Members here from rural districts, how do you think your farmer constituents will appreciate having this tax deducted from their meager cream checks?

What about the proposal to tax the capital stock of corporations? Talk about a tax being passed on to the consumer. This is the easiest possible tax to pass on. Every corporation will know at the beginning of the year just what its tax is going to be and will fix its prices accordingly.

After studying all these proposals I am unable to see how any substitute which has been proposed for the sales tax would in any way be a more popular or equitable tax, or one which could be any more easily borne by the people of the country. There has been a good deal of talk that would indicate that many Members of the House think that we are adopting the sales tax as a permanent policy, that we are changing our method of taxation, that we are doing away with our past policy of depending largely upon income taxes for our revenue and are substituting therefor a sales tax. If these gentlemen will look at the bill, they will see that we are putting on income taxes with a vengeance. We are not getting away from income taxes, we are increasing income taxes. So far as I am concerned I would have no objection to going a little higher with the income taxes, but the figures which the committee has presented to the House show clearly that very little would be received as additional returns from that source.

By the terms of the bill the manufacturers' tax automatically goes out of existence on June 30, 1934, and I have no doubt that if conditions are normal then, that will be the last that we will hear of the manufacturers' tax in this country, unless, perchance, it should prove so satisfactory to the people that they would prefer to have it in place of some other tax. There seem to be some who perhaps are afraid that that is what will happen. They are afraid that the manufacturers' tax will prove satisfactory. I do not regard this tax as a bogy. If it is a good tax we will have a chance to demonstrate it during these two years, and if it is not, then it automatically goes out of effect.

While, as I have stated, I think the manufacturers' tax is the most satisfactory which has been proposed, yet I believe there are some further exemptions that might well be considered by this committee. Suggestions have been made that the exemptions as to food products should apply to canned foods. I agree with that. A further exemption which I think might well be made would be to exempt all food products. I am not going to stand up here and suggest taking anything away from this bill without putting something in its place. I offer the suggestion to the committee that in the interest of exempting all food products we might well consider raising the rate, as far as the manufacturers' tax is concerned, to 3 per cent upon the other products which are contained in that provision; or if this House will do the thing I think it ought to do, if it will do the thing which the people of the country think it ought to do, we will reduce Federal expenditures $250,000,000 more than we have already done, and the Budget can be balanced without a tax on food. We can not do that by appropriating money to build roads, by increasing salaries, or making loans to relieve holders of drainage-district bonds, but we can do it if this House will courageously face the proposition of putting Federal employees during this emergency on the same basis as the other workers in the country and cutting out all overlapping governmental functions.

Whether all food is exempted from the manufacturers' tax or not, I believe further consideration should be given to exempting all meats, both raw and processed.

Fresh meats and several forms of processed meats are exempted by the terms of this bill. As far as I am concerned, I have been unable to see the logic of those exemptions. What reason is there in exempting hams and bacon and hog jowls, when we do not exempt lard, sausage, frankfurters, or any of the other common meat products that are used in every home in the country? What is the logic in exempting fresh meat when we do not exempt canned meat?

This is a matter in which the livestock producers in this country are very greatly interested. It is of vital importance to them because this particular tax is going to be reflected back in the prices which they receive for their livestock. The meat-packing industry in this country is already operating at a loss. It can not absorb this tax. It is selling its products at present at as high a price as it can obtain from consumers so that the new tax can not be passed on to the public. Therefore, it must be borne by the producer.

It is not necessary for me to refer to the depressed condition of agriculture, but in no branch of the industry are conditions any more unfortunate than among the producers of livestock. Practically all livestock which is being marketed to-day is sold at a loss. This tax will be particularly hard upon the producers of hogs, as it will apply to lard, sausage, cooked hams, and many forms of canned meats in which pork is used. It will apply to a lesser extent to those engaged in the production of cattle, since much beef is sold in the form of canned meat and many kinds of sausage contain a large percentage of beef. It is conservatively estimated that this tax will mean a direct annual charge of from ten to fifteen millions of dollars upon the livestock industry.

That might not be felt so much in normal times, but at this particular time it is the proverbial straw which will break the camel's back. It is unfair to add this extra tax to agriculture because the industry to-day is suffering as much from overtaxation as from any other cause. The present purchasing power of the farm dollar as compared with the pre-war average is approximately 50 cents, while the index of farm property taxes is two and one-half times what it was in 1914.

The livestock producers of this country are not asking for any special favors. They do feel, however, that if it is proper and just to exempt some classes of food products that all livestock products, whether fresh or processed, should be exempted. I sincerely hope that upon reconsideration the committee may find it advisable to so broaden the exemptions.

I am most heartily in favor of that provision of this bill which provides for a tax on imported petroleum and its products. If we are looking for something to tax, what is more fair or just than to tax these products, the importation of which has demoralized one of the great industries of this country? In my opinion, this tax will bring in a great deal more revenue than is estimated by the Treasury Department, and not only will this add revenue but, indirectly, it will mean that the American petroleum industry will be able to pay a larger proportion of the running expenses of this Government than is possible under present conditions.

The opposition to this feature of the bill seems to be coming from a section of the country which heretofore has enjoyed a larger measure of protection from foreign competition than any other part of the country. Certainly, it is unfair that the highly protected industries along the Atlantic seaboard should object to protection being afforded a great domestic industry through the medium of this legislation.

In conclusion, permit me to say that I congratulate the Ways and Means Committee and its able acting chairman, upon its determination to bring out a bill which will balance the Budget and place the credit of this country upon a firm foundation. We may not all agree with every provision in the bill and it is not pleasant for any of us to vote for increased taxes. Yet, if we live up to the responsibility which our constituents have imposed upon us we can do nothing less than support this measure.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. White].

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I ask your indulgence for a few minutes while I make a number of observations with regard to the proposed tax bill now before this body. Appreciative of the difficulties of the Ways and Means Committee and for that reason rather reluctant to rise here, I feel forced to make these observations in the interests of justice and humanity.

There are included under this tax plan some items which I find it necessary to oppose. The levies upon canned foods mean that that vast army of destitute Americans which has its contingent in every city and every hamlet and township must add to the cost of a great portion of the foods they buy. I wish to call to your attention that through a large part of the year fresh fruits and vegetables sell at a prohibitive price, and these millions are unable to purchase them. There is a scarcity of refrigeration in the poor home. The tin can is the food reservoir of the most needy.

I do not believe all this tax would finally fall upon the consumer. I expect, too, it finds its initial incidence at that point, however. Eventually it probably would be spread between the raw-material producer, the farmer in this case, and the consumer.

It certainly is not intended to fall upon the manufacturer and any pretense to that effect is a pure subterfuge. The burden upon the manufacturer will be one of bookkeeping, one of annoyance, and the expense of that can be expected to be shifted to material, labor, and consumer. The only persons who expect competition to force absorption of this tax upon the manufacturer are those who fail to realize that this tax is not expected and can not be expected to be a competitive element, since it is a flat addition to the costs of all competitors after they have arrived at their selling prices. This is a sales tax, not a manufacturer's tax. This is a consumer's tax, primarily.

May I call to your attention that while this Congress has been providing financial help for virtually every other sector and strata of American society, it has not made one direct move to help these people who happen to live in the great urban centers, except the sole apologetic effort which was made with its principal motive that of feeding cattle. No heed was paid to the appeals of Members of this House who asked that Government-owned wheat be distributed to these suffering millions until the cattle in some sections of the Nation found their forage sealed up by an ice storm.

By what twist of logic, by what weird conscience can we possibly lay an additional burden upon these destitute people. Neither conscience nor logic justifies it. Neither the impulses of human brotherhood nor the sense of good statecraft will approve the further punishment of these people by a burden of a single cent. Hundreds of thousands of them have lost the homes in which they have expended every cent of their life savings and hundreds of thousands more are upon the charity rolls of American municipalities and other local subdivisions. Legislation has been offered to this Congress by which these subdivisions offered to pledge their resources as assurance of repayment of credit which might be advanced to these localities in order that they might prevent actual starvation. The depletion of their funds has brought about actual starvation, and this Congress now proposes to place a further burden, a further price, a penalty upon destitution by taxing the very necessities of life.

For the same reasons I oppose all taxation on lower-priced clothing and on fuel for consumption in the home.

I have heard a great deal in recent weeks about Moscow and policies here which point toward that city. I want to tell you in all seriousness that no policy can so definitely point or so certainly point toward the emulation of that political experiment like the further imposition upon these destitute citizens who suffer through, I insist, no fault of their own. This Government has permitted the concentration of the employing forces and the massing of the productive forces in such great units that the independent producer and employer can not compete with them. Corporations of various sizes produced 97 per cent of our industrial output, the experts tell us.

I have heard much here about America getting down to business, about going to work and digging out of this depression. I have sat silent in the face of this claptrap of a vanishing era. Whom will they work for? When the great demand for economy comes in the modern industrial organization, employment is reduced to the minimum. Those employees remaining, in the face of the most terrifying threat of life, speed up their activities to further reduce the cost per unit of output, while these obvious devices of industry under the direction of employee leaders who, to hold their jobs through the single achievement of dividends, drive still harder the workmen beneath them, reducing constantly the job demand, but increasing their competitive forces.

There was a time when the discharged employee could resort to independent enterprise. To-day his opportunities to do so are virtually nil, and those who scoff at the idle man's lack of resourcefulness either do not realize what his difficulties really are or have not the charity to see how trying they must be.

This bill, I find, not only taxes the cheapest clothing and the necessities of the unemployed cupboard but even lays a levy upon the medicine he scrapes together for his ailing wife or child Certainly medical supplies prescribed by the physician should not be taxed.

Some place, some way, some influence has prevented the rioting of the city destitute during the tragic months of the last two years. Whether it is a spiritual influence, some diversion, a combination of both, or whatever it may be, I hazard the opinion that the neighborhood or village amusement house has exerted a tremendous force for social quiescence. For that reason, I believe the exemptions on amusement should be increased at least to 50-cent admissions, and that so doing would be a material contribution to the Nation's tranquillity.

I regret the imposition of a manufacturer's excise tax, which in the end becomes a sales tax. It opens a vast pool in which to dip for public revenue. It invites further public expenditures. It opens a door to additional levies. It opens a way to vast expansion of governmental spending. It not only does these things but places the burden of government upon those who can least afford to bear it. The opinion that it is little felt does not satisfy my ideal of a tax. Expediency may be a convenient motive, but convenience does not make justice. That it fools those paying it is a subterfuge of deceit, a device of fraud.

I wonder, as the years pass, how much of the burden borne by the rich through the graduated income taxes will be shifted to the less fortunate through these devices. For this reason I approve the provision by which the period for which these taxes are levied should be limited to two years. It is unfortunate that it is levied at all. It unquestionably will act as a deterrent to economic recovery and will be a heavy burden upon many struggling industries. Only the extreme necessity of the Government in its present financial difficulties permits me to vote for a revenue bill containing such a tax.

Subdivisions 2 and 3 under paragraph D, section 601, are undoubtedly the most surprising provisions I ever expect to see in a tax measure. As one of those who oppose the Volstead law, I am in a quandary whether to laugh or weep. At first blush, here is a provision in what the drys claim is a dry House of Representatives for taxing the materials for making intoxicating beverages; in fact, a tax upon the homebrewer and home-vintner.

Not being trained in the arts of the law, may I ask whether or not it is legal to tax an illegal product? Is it reasonable to assume from the approval of this tax, if the House does approve it, and I expect it to, that this action declares these materials legitimate? I applaud if it does. It is a highly intelligent move if this surmise is correct.

Probably there is less deviltry in the making of a little home-brew or wine in one's own cellar than almost any other diversion the average citizen may find, but it is in line with the actions of the past that if anything that looked like diversion could be found, there a tax should be placed. It will return the Government some revenues, I assure you, and it will not deter the home-brewing in any great measure. I assume with the adoption of this measure the sniffer and the snooper will be outlawed.

But since you feel it within the province of this House to gather a tax from this source, why not do it right? Why not raise the restrictions in the Volstead Act so that real beer and genuine, well-made wine could again become articles of commerce? Those two products can be made to produce an amount of revenue which will compete in quantity with the income from this bill, if they are intelligently and properly managed. Let me assure you that it would not contribute in any sense to the delinquency of the Members of this House or their families any more than is contributed to-day by the illicit traffic in inferior and poisonous products of the same class. One of the largest industries in this Nation, it pays no revenue.

By this same measure you can also remove the financing source of the great rings of gangsters which commit every type of depredation upon legitimate citizenship. Let me predict for you that when the Lindbergh kidnaping is solved that a bootlegging ring for a gang originally financed by bootlegging will be found behind it. I hazard this prediction in the face of the announced findings of the experts in criminology that it was an amateur job.

If we must bow to the necessity of these unwelcome taxes. let us place a limit upon the period for which this legislation is passed as a safeguard against permanent levy, against shifting the burdens to the poor, a protection in the future for those who are least able to bear the burdens of taxation; but before we levy any tax, let us take the penalties off the sick and the destitute by removing the lower-priced clothing and fuels and foods necessary to warming the homes and hearts of the destitute wherever they may be found in this country. I understand fuels for factories are exempt. Why not for the home? I am fully cognizant of the necessity of keeping Government revenues near a level with expenditures. However, I do not believe that should be the sole thought dominating these deliberations. There should certainly be discriminations between methods of doing so. The burdens of that effort should not be cast upon the poor, the helpless, and the sick. It should not penalize poverty.

I believe this House is safe in assuming that not only those best able to pay will feel it least, but they get the most from their Government. I am unable to subscribe to the principle that vast fortunes are the product exclusively of abilities and worth. The opportunities presented by the peculiarities of our society take a large place in the gathering of great fortunes. This is a service these fortunates can well pay for.

I should like, also, to call attention to the fact that the Ways and Means Committee has in this bill indorsed the tariff law now in effect. Has Democracy deserted her old standards?

What would Jefferson do were his shade, perchance, among us here—and who knows but that it is in these scenes so familiar to his mundane life—and see his party, his Democracy, appealing for a sales tax? State rights—where has that doctrine fled? [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Coyle].

Mr. COYLE. Mr. Chairman, there are many items which have been written into this revenue bill which in themselves are a step in the right direction. Many people all over the United States have for many years favored the general idea of the sales tax. Some fear has been expressed, however, that a sales tax superimposed on our present income tax would eventually supersede that tax. As a consequence, I think people universally will rather acclaim the fact that this sales tax is made effective for two years only. The argument in favor of a temporary trial of the new idea of a general sales tax on manufactured or processed goods would seem to be sound. New, and in some measure radical, departures perhaps ought always carry with their original enactment the provision for their own extinguishment; then after the matter has been tried, after its workings have been better understood, all that is best of that idea may in the future be reenacted and chance mistake and error eliminated.

That part of this bill which makes provision for the taxing of inheritances and of gifts would seem to be a sound one. After all, this generation, which fought the war and which has paid in human sacrifice, should also be required to pay in dollars in so far as the individual has in any considerable measure profited in dollars, and at least he should not pass on his gain until his share of the debt is paid.

There is, I believe, adequate provision in this bill for the collection of added import duties on those foreign articles which would be taxed under this bill if produced in America.

There is, however, no provision in this bill, as at present written, to tax in any measure the importation of those raw materials or semiprocessed goods which would not in themselves be taxed under this excise tax bill but which do enter into the cost of all manufactures and of all transportation and are indirectly taxed in the tax placed on the sales price of the finished product.

I have in mind particularly that the growing importations of coal from Russia, and more recently from Indo-China, which have amounted in 1931 to nearly three-quarters of a million tons and which bid fair in 1932 to exceed a million tons, under this or some other bill should be taxed at least for revenue purposes.

In the original preparation of the Smoot-Hawley bill there was a very distinct feeling on the part of a large number of people engaged in the mining and selling of coal that any import tax placed upon coal would call for reprisals in the way of added taxes into Canada. As a consequence, and because of the importance of this Canadian market, the industry itself and those engaged in it thought it best not to ask for an import tariff. Since that time the Canadian Government has imposed a very considerable tax on imports of all coal into Canada, and that, coupled with the depreciated value of Canadian exchange, has caused us to lose over a half of our business with Canada. Those economists or others who argue that the high-tariff wall leads to reprisals can find little satisfaction in this situation. Here the reprisal has come without any tariff at all on our own imports, and we have seen, by force of circumstances, at least 10,000 men thrown out of work in America because of the falling off of this export trade, and at least another 5,000 men have lost a full year's work in mining and transportation on account of the importations from Russia, Indo-China, and more recently from Great Britain.

A very sincere attempt was made in the last Congress to provide by legislation for the exclusion from this country of the coal mined by the Soviet Government. In practice that attempted exclusion has not in any measure been effective. The difficulty of proving that any commodity is produced by forced or convict labor has been quite an insurmountable barrier. Accordingly, at the proper time there will be offered for the consideration of the committee an amendment putting a small tax on all kinds of coal imported from foreign countries. This is being proposed as a revenue measure and will not be high enough to exclude that coal; otherwise perhaps a point of order might lie against it.

I sincerely commend this phase of the problem to the consideration of the committee and the Congress. It is an opportunity to raise from one and one-quarter to two millions of revenue at absolutely no cost to the American people, except as it may eliminate some importers' profits. At 10 cents per 100 pounds the Russian coal can still come into this country and probably will come in in considerable quantities. This coal has been freely offered in the Atlantic seaboard markets at any price which was found to be necessary in order to undersell American coal by $1 per ton. With the imposing of this tax the importations will not cease, but the Treasury will have a continuing record of the amount of coal coming in and the prices at which it is offered for sale; matters which in the past have been somewhat difficult to determine.

Mr. Chairman, the patriotic and unselfish motives of the members of the Ways and Means Committee of both parties and of this Congress in general have been well set forth by the acting chairman of the committee, the gentle-of this bill, and yesterday by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]. It is apparent that in the framing of this bill patriotic instincts alone have motivated those charged with responsibility for raising the revenue. It is, I hope, Mr. Chairman, going to follow that every Member of this House and of another House, when they vote on this bill, are sincerely and earnestly going to vote their best judgment regarding the interest of the American people as a unit. If this be done, then will we see in the year that is just ahead of us that effective balancing of the National Budget, which is the foundation stone on which future national prosperity and success will be builded. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SEGER].

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I do not know whether my remarks will meet with the same enthusiasm as those made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Beam]. I want to say he made a good speech, and I am with him in sentiment as to a part of his remarks.

Yesterday afternoon the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH] made a speech in which he gave a very severe spanking to the critics of art and the drama. I always like to listen to the gentleman from New York because he has his speech well in hand and he has a good command of the English language. I am in sympathy with the theater, the drama, and the movies, but I question very much whether the fact that actors are out of employment and walking Broadway, and that there are rows upon rows of empty seats in theaters is due entirely to the critics. May it not be due somewhat to a lack of cooperation on the part of the theater owners with the public?

It has been my experience, and no doubt some of you have had the same experience, to go up to the window of a theater and ask for a ticket and be informed that the house is sold out for three weeks. You are met with a rather superior mien on the part of the ticket agent, and if you indulge in any question as to why that is so he makes you feel like a vandal appearing before a high priest in hobnailed shoes. Yet you can go about a block from the theater and buy a ticket for a seat in the seventh or eighth row if you are willing to pay $1 or more over the box-office price. I think that perhaps accounts for many of the empty seats in the theaters referred to by my colleague.

I want to address myself to the moving-picture theater particularly. There is in this bill a tax of 10 per cent on admissions of 25 cents and more. Many of us have watched the moving-picture industry grow from its infancy, when you put a nickel in the slot and turned a handle—to what it is to-day—the fifth or sixth industry in the world.

I believe it should be encouraged. I believe the man who can afford to pay only 25 cents when he takes his family to the theater should be encouraged to patronize the movingpicture theater. It provides a means of education, it provides a means of amusement, and it provides a great means of relaxation. When a man leaves his business and comes home at night, too tired to read a magazine or a paper, he can take his family to a moving picture and travel for 25 cents as far as many of us can travel for $2,500. He goes into India, Cairo, China, Japan, and other countries. He gets a great deal of news value that he would not get in any other way.

I think the actors and musicians about whom the gentleman from New York spoke represent some of the finest people in the world. During the war some of our professional people kept up the morale of the soldiers in the trenches, and to-day they are all willing and anxious to help a charitable purpose whenever an opportunity presents itself.

In my own city a very short time ago, when the call came to raise money for the unemployed, there were 22 of the very finest vaudeville, radio, and stage stars who appeared gratis at a midnight show. The total amount taken in that night was $5,000-all for the relief fund. These people came from far and wide and volunteered their services. I believe that we will not get these unemployed people of the stage man from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], in his original presentation who are walking the street, these hundreds of musicians who are not in any orchestra, back among the employed until there is a real spirit of cooperation between the theater owner and the public at large.

I want to express appreciation of the fact that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack] stated yesterday that he is going to propose an amendment to eliminate the tax on 25-cent admissions to moving pictures. I hope the amendment gets the hearty support of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, it is now 5 o'clock and Saturday afternoon. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaking having resumed the chair, Mr. Bankhead, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

WAR POLICIES COMMITTEE (H. DOC. NO. 271)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress:

I am transmitting herewith a communication from the Secretary of War, chairman of the War Policies Commission, submitting additional documents in connection with the study made by the commission, as required by the provisions of the public resolution creating the commission.

HERBERT HOOVER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 12, 1932.

RESUBMISSION OF THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Speaker, about 12 years ago the United States, as a result of the adoption of the eighteenth amendment and the passage of the Volstead Act, adopted the plan or policy of attempting to make our citizens temperant by the flat of law.

For more than 100 years prior to the writing into the Constitution of the eighteenth amendment our country through educational means had made very satisfactory and remarkable progress in the march of her citizens toward the goal of temperance.

In my own State of Wisconsin, classed as a very wet State at the present time, the people through local-option privileges had voted the saloon out in more than half of the State from a territorial standpoint, and I dare say that the same situation as marking the advance of temperance existed in almost every State of this Union.

Since the adoption of the eighteenth amendment the liquor question has become more of a life issue in our country than ever. In the public press, in the Halls of Congress, and in many of our State legislatures it has become not simply one of the leading issues of the day but the leading issue of the day.

The fact of the matter is the eighteenth amendment has divided our people into warring camps as no other question since the days of slavery.

In 1929, after almost 10 years of trial, the contest between the so-called wets and the so-called drys became so intense that Congress was obliged and did take cognizance of the controversy by passing a law providing for an inquiry into the problem of the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment, the said inquiry to be made by a commission to be appointed by the President of the United States.

Pursuant to this law President Hoover selected 10 men and 1 woman to conduct this inquiry. The commission was constituted as follows: George Wickersham, former Attorney General of the United States; Newton Baker, former Secretary of War; William Kenyon, Paul McCormick, William Grubb, Federal judges; Kenneth Macintosh, former justice of the Supreme Court of the State of Washington; Roscoe Pound, dean of Harvard Law School; Henry W. Anderson, a distinguished citizen of Virginia; Monte Lemann, a distinguished lawyer and citizen of New Orleans; Frank J. Loesch, a leading attorney and reformer of Chicago; and Miss Ada L. Comstock, of Massachusetts, a leading educator and president of Radcliffe College.

These 10 men and 1 woman constituted a distinguished commission, of whom President Hoover, in his letter transmitting its report to Congress, says:

The commission comprised an able group of distinguished citizens of character and intelligence of thought representative of different sections of the country.

There can be no doubt but that this commission was carefully selected and no so-called pro-wets were permitted to become members of this commission, and undoubtedly every man and woman that was named to this commission had received the O. K. of the Anti-Saloon League.

This commission, now known as the Wickersham Commission, named after its chairman, George W. Wickersham, labored for 18 months. It had at its command a large appropriation and every possible facility for a thorough investigation of the workings and workability of the eighteenth amendment.

The fact of the matter is the work of this commission constitutes the only real, thorough, comprehensive, and impartial investigation of national prohibition that this country has had since the amendment went into effect.

It is now known that the proceedings of the commission were marked by many bitter controversies, and from newspaper reports and magazine articles and from the attempts made by some one to conceal from the public the true findings of the report there can be no doubt at all but that a tremendous pressure was brought to bear upon this commission to make a different report than it saw fit to write.

President Hoover gave the commission no instructions to concern itself specifically with the prohibition question. The commission was directed to investigate all phases of crime, court congestions, law enforcement, but was not specifically instructed to make any specific finding as to national prohibition.

However, there can be no question at all but that Congress, in authorizing the appointment of this commission and in providing the funds to carry on its work, did so with the understanding that the investigation would cover the prohibition situation in this country from every angle.

The first question then that this commission had to decide was as to the character of its investigation regarding prohibition.

While some of the members of the commission were opposed to making any special report or investigation of prohibition, the commission finally decided to specifically investigate the prohibition question first and to make a separate report on such investigation to the President of the United States.

The commission had open hearings and closed hearings. It had a small army of investigators at its command.

On January 7, 1931, the commission made its report to the President of the United States. The report is made up of two parts, the report of the commission itself as a body and the findings and conclusions of the individual members of the commission. In other words, each individual commissioner, in addition to signing a general report, gave his own individual written report or conclusions, which are all made a part of the report as filed with the President.

The report made a pamphlet containing 161 pages, 12 pages of which is devoted by the commission in setting forth the "bad features of the present situation and the difficulties in the way of enforcement" and 2½ pages in telling what the "benefits of prohibition" were.

The report of the Wickersham Commission has been

The report of the Wickersham Commission has been severely criticized because the individual opinions of the different commissioners did not agree with the published conclusions of the whole commission, or, in other words, a majority of the individual commissioners in their opinions agreed upon a vital conclusion as to national prohibition that is not contained in the report as given to the public.

The important conclusions of the Wickersham Commission, as given to the public, are as follows:

Opposed to the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

Opposed to the restoration in any manner of the legalized

Opposed to the Federal or State governments, as such, going into the liquor business.

Opposed to modifying the national prohibition act so as to permit the manufacture and sale of light wines and beer.

There is nothing in the individual opinions of the commissioners to justify the including in the report of a finding that a majority of the commissioners were opposed to the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. This finding must have been written into the report after the report was signed and after the individual commissioners had written and signed their personal reports.

This alleged finding of the commission was undoubtedly put into the report for the purpose of lessening the blow dealt by a majority of the commissioners to national prohibition.

While a majority of the commissioners did not specifically recommend the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, they did recommend the immediate amendment-not next year or after a further trial-but immediately in such a way as to practically amount to a repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

The eighteenth amendment stands for the absolute prohibition in the United States of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor. The amendment recommended thereby submitted to the American people by a majority of the commissioners, submitted as I have stated, immediately provided for the changing of the liquor situation so as to give to the States that desired to have traffic in the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor the right to have it under congressional control.

The commission held that the cooperation of the States was essential to the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment; that to date there has been no adequate observance or enforcement of prohibition; that the present prohibition organization is inadequate to enforce prohibition and that if the eighteenth amendment is to be revised, and the majority of the commissioners recommend in their individual reports its immediate revision, the amendment should be made to read substantially as follows:

Section 1. Congress shall have power to regulate or permit the manufacture, traffic in, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, and the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes.

The commission also recommended certain improvements in the present enforcement law, so as to remove causes for irritation, and so forth. These conclusions and recommendations were only signed by 10 members of the commission. Commissioner Lemann, of New Orleans, refused to sign the said conclusions and recommendations.

The amendment proposed by the commission would simply provide that States that desired to have traffic in the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors could have it under congressional control.

In the body of its report the commission discusses the bad features of prohibition and the benefits resulting from prohibition. Among the bad features it cites the increase in corruption, congestion of courts, undermining of respect for law, the increase of the illicit distilling industry, and the wildcat and home-brewing industry.

The commission cites three benefits resulting from prohibition: The doing away with the legalized open saloon; the improvement in the efficiency of labor, especially in mechanical industries, although the commission admits that many able and conscientious leaders of organized labor appeared before it and argued that the increased efficiency of labor was attributable rather to the efforts of unions in bringing about better conditions of employment, better hours, and and their honor as members of the commission.

better wages, and not to prohibition. The commission also holds that certain social benefits have resulted from prohibition-that is, that a certain class of our citizens, social workers report, are living in better conditions now than before national prohibition.

Between the time the Wickersham report and the individual opinions of the commissioners on the facts as presented to them regarding the prohibition enforcement was signed on January 7, 1931, and the time of its publication, January 20, 1931, something happened to the report that resulted in the mutilation of a vital, the most vital finding made by the majority of the commissioners.

To have it appear that one of the conclusions in the findings of the committee was that the majority of the commissioners demanded the immediate amendment of the eighteenth amendment, so as to destroy the whole national prohibition idea, apparently was something the prohibition advocates could not and would not stand for.

As the findings appear in the report and afterwards as they appeared in the headlines of the newspapers it would appear that the commissioners were all in favor of a further trial of national prohibition, while a reading of the individual opinions-which one would have to do to get the true findings of the commission-would indicate that a majority of the commissioners were not satisfied with the workings of the eighteenth amendment, that they were not in favor of a further trial, and that they demand a submission immediately of a vital amendment to the eighteenth amendment, permitting States that desired the traffic in the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor to have it under congressional control.

The charge that the report of the Wickersham Commission as it was signed by the commissioners must have been mutilated or tampered with before its publication is fully justified by statements in the individual opinions of three of the commissioners.

On page 99 of the report of Commissioner Anderson we find the following:

I concur in the recommendation of the report that the eighteenth amendment be modified as herein stated.

On page 115 of the report of Commissioner Grubb we

I join in the findings of fact and all the ultimate conclusions of the general report of the commission (except that recommending that the amendment be revised immediately without waiting a further trial), but not in all of the general observations.

On page 157 Commissioner McCormick says:

I am in accord with all the conclusions and recommendations. except that in which a revision of the eighteenth amendment is suggested immediately.

In the published findings of the commission there is no finding or recommendation for the immediate revision of the eighteenth amendment. There must have been such a finding when the report was signed, or these three commissioners, two of them Grubb and McCormick, favorable to a further trial of the eighteenth amendment, would not be talking about such a finding in their individual report. What became of this important finding? Why was it taken out of the report?

The answer is that somebody, in order to bolster up the national prohibition cause, was powerful enough to make the report of the Wickersham Commission ridiculous in the eyes of the thinking people by setting forth a definite and important conclusion not justified in the individual findings and conclusions of a majority of the commissioners.

No person can read the Wickersham report from cover to cover without being impressed with the powerful case that it makes against a further trial of the eighteenth amendment. There can be no doubt but that the majority of the members of this commission were favorably inclined to a further trial of the eighteenth amendment at the time of their appointment and that they would have been pleased to have been able to write a different report, but to do so undoubtedly would have done violence to their conscience

The Wickersham report not only constitutes a scathing denunciation of national prohibition, but it also constitutes a powerful argument in favor of the resubmission immediately to the American people of the whole questions involved in the policy of national prohibition.

Two members of the commission recommended the immediate repeal of the eighteenth amendment, and five other members recommended the immediate amendment of the eighteenth amendment as I have herein set forth, but let it not be forgotten or overlooked that three other members of this commission, three of the militant advocates of a further trial of the eighteenth amendment, recommend the immediate submission to the people of this country of an amendment providing for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, so that we can find out and know where the American people stand on the question of national prohibition.

In proposing an amendment to the Constitution, which is to be voted on in this House shortly, its proponents are following suggestions made in this Wickersham report by militant drys.

Commissioner Wickersham says:

I think that if a proposed amendment to the Constitution simply repealing the eighteenth amendment were to be passed by the requisite majorities in both Houses of Congress and submitted to the States, to be considered by conventions called for the pur-pose in each State, the delegates to be chosen in an off year and the conventions to be held in a year when there is no presidential election, we should have intelligent discussions of the question and a result which would reflect the sober informed and deliberate opinion of the people.

Commissioner McCormick says:

It is my belief that a solution of this vexatious problem would be accelerated by ascertaining the majority sentiment of our citizenry upon the desirability of prohibition as a national policy. It could be learned by direct submission of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment through State conventions and under Article V of the Constitution. I favor and recommend such action.

Commissioner Kenvon says:

In view of growing opposition to the prohibition laws and the prevalence of this sentiment, it seems to me there should be, if possible, a referendum which would settle the proposition of whether the majority of the American people favor prohibition as a national policy. There is no provision of the Constitution for a referendum, and a mere straw-vote referendum by States or magazines is unsatisfactory. There could be an expression by the people under Article V of the Constitution. An amendment could be proposed to the Constitution to repeal the eighteenth amendment, and the Congress could provide that the ratification should be by conventions in the various States, delegates to be elected by be by conventions in the various States, delegates to be elected by the people. That would present as clear cut an issue on the sub-ject as is possible under the Constitution.

These three commissioners are militant dry advocates and friends of national prohibition, yet their study of the prohibition and the liquor situation in our country has led them to take the stand in favor of the resubmission to the people of our country immediately of an amendment to repeal the eighteenth amendment so that we can find out how the American people stand on this question after a 12-year trial.

I have been getting a great many letters from my constituents protesting against the provision contained in the constitutional amendment that will come before this House on next Monday providing for a ratification of the amendment by State convention instead of State legislatures.

It will be noted that these three dry advocates that I have just quoted from favor the convention method instead of the legislature method of ratifying the amendment.

It would appear that the friends of national prohibition who desire an honest expression of the views of our people on the general policy of national prohibition would not oppose the convention method of finding out those views. By the convention method the delegates will be elected for one definite purpose, and there will be only one issue before the people. That situation does not exist when you elect people to the State legislatures.

This attitude on the part of certain militant advocates of national prohibition in opposing the convention system for ratifying a constitutional convention indicates that they are afraid to submit to the people the prohibition question.

No Member of this House needs any better argument for a vote on next Monday in favor of the discharging of the Judiciary Committee from further consideration of an amendment to amend the eighteenth amendment than the findings and conclusions of the members of the Wickersham Commission.

Next Monday will be the first time since the adoption of the eighteenth amendment that the people of this country will have a chance in this great legislative Chamber, through their representatives, to voice their approval or disapproval of the eighteenth amendment and all its works.

A year ago there were many Members on the floor of this House who will not be here on next Monday, and their absence from this Chamber will be due to the fact that they failed to heed the rising tide of the people's wrath against the eighteenth amendment.

Millions of American people who were at one time in favor of national prohibition are now working to bring about the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. Let me say to the Members of this House that that tide of public wrath against the attempt to make our people sober by the flat of law is still rising, as plainly indicated by the Literary Digest's last poll, still going on, of public sentiment on the prohibition question in this country.

One year ago there were only 70 Members on this floor who were said to be opposed to the eighteenth amendment. The vote on next Monday, it is prophesied, will indicate a tremendous increase in one year of the representatives of the people in this House who believe that the eighteenth amendment has brought about in this country a situation infinitely worse than existed before the coming of the eighteenth amendment.

I can see no reason why any friend or foe of national prohibition should oppose the resubmission to our people of a proposed amendment to the eighteenth amendment. Such a resubmission will clarify the prohibition situation in this country as nothing else can do.

The so-called wets and the so-called drys have had a great deal of discussion. The jury has not had a chance to vote. Now, let us give the wets and the drys an opportunity after 10 years of discussion to learn the verdict of the people by voting to resubmit to the States, through conventions, our liquor problem for directions as to what our future course in the handling of the liquor question should be.

It may be that a majority of the American people still believe in national prohibition. If that fact should be developed it will be a wonderful help in enforcing a law that is objectionable to many of our people.

If, on the other hand, it should develop that the great majority of our people are opposed to the eighteenth amendment, then it is, of course, respectfully submitted that a change in our present method for handling the liquor problem should be made. It is not a question whether a Member of this House belongs to a so-called wet bloc or a so-called dry bloc, it is a question of giving the American people the right to exercise their constitutional privilege after a 12-year trial to pass upon the fruits of the eighteenth amendment.

THE FINANCIAL CONDITION IN THE MIDDLE WEST

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, there may be a difference of opinion as to just where the Middle West is. The tourist from Missouri, when he arrives in California, is considered from the East. The livestock man from Missouri, when he reaches Boston on a business mission, is regarded as from the West. The great Middle West may be considered as that group of States in the central portion of the Mississippi Valley and to the west adjoining and clustering around the imperial State of Missouri. It is said that for centuries the nomadic tribes of Arabia sought to establish themselves in that little crescent-shaped territory extending from the Arabian Sea to the Persian Gulf. To them that was the promised land, the land flowing with milk and honey, the land of Canaan.

the world. Here may be found broad prairies and pasture lands, upon which graze millions of the best and finest thoroughbred livestock of any country. Here may be seen the great expanse of fertile fields and fruitful valleys filled with the luxuriant growth of all the major staple agricultural products-grain, fruits, and vegetables-known to man. Here have been discovered and developed the greatest, the best, and the richest lead, zinc, and barite mines and mills to be found on this globe. Here have been established some of the great industrial enterprises of the Nation, and here some of the greatest market centers have grown and prospered. Here the facilities for transportation and for the development of commerce are unsurpassed; all the great transcontinental railroad lines pass through this territory. Here exists the greatest potential inland waterway system of any land. Federal, State, and local highways in an interlacing network are thrown over this region, and here have been located many airports and air lines. All the known means of travel-by land, water, or air-are here available. Thousands of growing, progressive, beautiful cities dot this fair land. Some of the greatest colleges and universities have been builded here; and with a schoolhouse and a church in every hamlet and on almost every hilltop and in every valley the opportunity is offered for all to worship and the educational facilities are unlimited. Stretching through the southern portion of this vast area are the Ozark Mountains, from the summits and slopes of which may be enjoyed the most beautiful and inspiring scenery in all the world. This particular region, by reason of its healthful and invigorating climate, its pure air and its bright sunshine, its great springs with their cool, refreshing waters, with its placid streams and hunting and fishing, camping and playground facilities, is fast becoming the recreational center of the country, where all who desire to get away from the noise and jostle, the smoke and grime of the city may go for enjoyment and rest.

But over beyond the best of all there dwells in the great Middle West the descendants of those sturdy pioneers from Virginia, the Carolinas, Kentucky, and elsewhere, who in the long ago, facing the dangers without flinching and enduring the hardships without complaint, blazed the trails and established their homes in that new land. And to-day nowhere on this earth can be found a more energetic, intelligent, thrifty, hospitable, liberty-loving, and God-fearing people than those who inhabit this great region. This land of promise, blessed as it is with unbounded natural resources, with varied and diversified industries, with efficient transportation facilities, with great educational opportunities, with its inviting climate and its alluring scenery, with its industrious, sturdy, and courageous citizenry—this land of sunshine and plenty has had visited upon it a most cruel, hateful, and devastating plague—this heartless and ruinous panic. Farm products are selling below the cost of production. The wheels of industry have slowed down or stopped altogether. Mines and mills are shut down or running with reduced force on part time. Commerce has sickened and died. Business houses have become bankrupt. Banks have closed their doors. Millions have lost their farms, their homes, or their jobs, and have been turned out to march down the long, disconsolate, and congested highway of unemployment looking for food and shelter. Men have seen their loved ones grow pale and haggard. In the midst of these desperate conditions, surrounded by the wrecks of failed and ruined business enterprises, with the memory of lost homes still lingering, with the dark clouds of fear and despair growing blacker and thicker, the Middle West has had and still has its great financial burdens and problems.

I am unable to say that its financial situation is materially different from the rest of the country at this time. Due to the fact that agriculture is the predominant activity of this territory, its condition may be much worse than the average. The great stagnant and depressing condition into which industry and commerce have been thrown in recent months has existed among the farmers for a decade and

The Middle West of our country is the "promised land" of | have known its blighting and withering effects for years, while those in the centers of trade and industry have only recently felt the weight of its leaden hand.

Statistics are dry and unattractive and can seldom be used to advantage to picture the true situation. Few people listen to, or study them, or attempt to apply them to the matter in hand. At the expense of being tedious and tiresome it may be useful to employ a few figures. From 1920 to 1931, inclusive, there were 9,285 bank failures in the United States. To indicate how this financial storm had been gathering and how it finally burst with all its fury, it may be noted that of this total number of failures 1,345 came in 1930 and 2,298 were thrust upon us in 1931. The deposits in failed banks for last year alone reached the staggering total of over $1,691,000,000.

What part of the picture does the great Middle West occupy? It has been said that the bank failures for this period and for this region may be likened to a fan starting in Arkansas and spreading to the North and West. Without seeking to circumscribe the Middle West or confine it to certain States, it may indicate the trend of financial conditions in that part of our country to call attention to the fact that last year the four States—Missouri, Iowa, Kansas, and Nebraska-had bank failures to the total of 477, or over 20 per cent of the entire country.

In 1913 the Federal reserve bank law was passed. This act created a central national banking system designed to distribute, in a measure at least, the money power of the country and to provide more elastic currency and credit. This act was passed in the interest of agriculture, industry, and commerce alike, every form of business activity coming within its scope and all enjoying the benefits of its constructive provisions.

In 1916 the Federal land banks were provided for by an act of Congress, and the capital stock subscribed by the Federal Government, practically all of which has been repaid to the Government. This Congress has just authorized the expenditure of $125,000,000 to help the Federal land banks of the Nation. This act provided for the establishment of 12 banks, which can make long-term loans to farmers upon land mortgages, and there are now over $1,162,000,000 of such loans outstanding. Three of these banks are located in the territory under consideration, one at St. Louis, one at Wichita, and one at Omaha. By the same act which created the Federal land banks, joint-stock land banks were authorized, and a number have been organized throughout the country. They are given the right to issue tax-exempt bonds and are empowered to make loans only upon farm mortgages, and there are now outstanding over $536,000,000 of such loans.

In 1923, 12 Federal intermediate credit banks were provided for by Congress with an authorized capital of $60,000,000 to be subscribed by the Government. Their function is to make loans to cooperative marketing associations and discount notes of agricultural credit corporations and live-stock loan companies, and the amount of such loans and discounts now outstanding is over $119,000,000.

By a recent act Congress authorized the use of $10,000,000 for the organization of agricultural credit corporations and livestock companies, whose purpose is to grant loans to the farmers and livestock producers of the country and discount their securities at the intermediate credit banks. This Congress also made immediately available the sum of $50,000,000 to be loaned the farmers for crop-production purposes for

In addition to the above, Congress in 1931 passed the farm marketing act and authorized the expenditure of $500,000,-000 to carry out the intent of that legislation. While this was not a banking measure, its purposes were to assist and encourage cooperative marketing and to stabilize farm products and thereby aid the farmers.

It is thus to be seen that in addition to the elastic currency and credit provisions of the Federal reserve laws Congress has provided four different systems of Federal banks and credit agencies for the avowed purpose of financing the has been accumulating during that time. The farmers farmers of the Nation and, in addition to all of that, set up a Federal Farm Board with a half billion dollars at its command to build up the cooperatives of the country and bring stability to farm-commodity prices. The operating expenses alone of this board last year were $1,900,000.

Still further, in addition to all these Federal financial institutions and agencies set up by the National Government and designed to help the farmer, he has available the State banks and trust companies, the insurance companies, mortgage-loan companies, and individual money lenders. It does seem that ample provision has been made, so far as national legislation is concerned, to furnish proper credit to the farmers of the country. If there is a place in the entire land that should have received material benefits from all this farm financial legislation, it is the great Middle West.

On the contrary, more banks have failed there than elsewhere, and to-day it seems to be more difficult for the farmer to obtain credit or to secure an extension of time for the payment of his indebtedness than for any other class of people. Notwithstanding all this national legislation in recent years, supposedly in the interest of agriculture, the farmer of the Middle West now finds himself in greater financial straits and his credit more contracted than ever before. Despite the claims of the proponents of all this farm legislation, the fact remains that it has not brought prosperity to the farmers, or even any considerable measure of relief. Farming is not only the basic industry of the Middle West but is the fundamental business of the country. No general progress can be made and no permanent and well-distributed prosperity can be enjoyed until the farmers of the country can sell their products at a profit over the cost of production.

One of two things is evident: Either the Government should get out of the agricultural finance activities or it should make those agencies more efficient and helpful. If the Government has made a mistake in entering upon these financial ventures, then it should retrace its steps. If the policy is to be maintained and continued and the laws are defective, then they should be strengthened and perfected. If the trouble is with the administration of the various institutions, then the responsible personnel should be made more sympathetic and efficient. Many thoughtful and conservative people are beginning to question the effectiveness and the benefits of all this farm financial legislation.

Repeated and persistent appeals are made to Congress by the governing officials of the Federal and joint-stock land banks for additional legislation to help and for additional funds to save those banks from receivership. In spite of the fact that these banks have cost the Government and the farmers of the country an enormous amount of money, and despite the further fact that these banks have had the special privilege granted them to issue tax-exempt bonds in order to raise money to carry on their activities-notwithstanding all these special favors and governmental subsidies, these banks to-day are carrying only 12 per cent of the farm loans of the country and at the present time are making few, if any, loans to the farmers. The commercial banks and others who are now weighed down by the 88 per cent of the farm loans of the land, these State and local institutions that are bearing the brunt of battle without any governmental favors or subsidies, are not looking with too much favor upon these Federal agencies, and they are asking the question whether the Government is giving them an equal chance and a fair show in their efforts to finance the farmers of the country.

There are many causes why so many banks have failed in recent years. In some sections of the Middle West for the first two decades of the present century many small banks were organized. They were established in small towns or in rural communities where the business activities and resources were not sufficient to support them and they were soon in difficulty. These banks were liquidated, consolidated with other larger ones, or finally passed into the hands of the finance authorities of the State.

However, in the more populous and active localities the small independent bank should not disappear. It is a necessity and a great convenience. It represents the great independent spirit of the people. It encourages local enterprises, knows the needs and the character of its people, and can better serve than an institution that is controlled by a central bank hundreds of miles away. Many of the best and safest banks are in small but active, conservative, and progressive communities. They should not be destroyed.

Other banks that had been established for years and had done an extensive business and had a strong published financial statement were robbed from the inside by embezzlement, forgery, gambling, and wild stock speculations and soon passed off the scene. Some banks went into bankruptcy, not because their officers and boards of directors were dishonest and criminal but because they were men without experience in the banking business and careless and indifferent to their duties and responsibilities. They sat silently and listlessly by and let their institutions drift to wreck and ruin.

The great majority of bank failures was due to the unprecedented business depression and the ghastly fear that seemed to possess the people. The farmers could not sell their products, the factory output was curtailed, the merchants' trade diminished, men were thrown out of employment, the purchasing power decreased, deposits were withdrawn-the bank failed. This condition was augmented in the Middle West, because there years ago many drainage, levee, and irrigation districts were formed to reclaim and protect thousands of acres of the most fertile and productive land and issued bonds to carry out this project. These bonds were considered the safest and soundest securities. They were purchased by the local banks to the amount of many millions. The panic came. The price of farm products dropped. Interest and taxes could not be paid. The bonds defaulted. By order of the finance department they were charged off the banks' assets—the bank

Numerous measures and divers laws have been advanced to minimize, if not to prevent, bank failures in the future. The claim is made that the standard measure of value is wrong; that there should be free and unlimited coinage of silver; that we should have bimetallism, but at no fixed ratio; that the Government should issue a larger volume of currency; that a system of branch banks should be established; that there should be a guaranty of bank deposits and that the people of the country should bring their money out of hiding and put it to some legitimate work. A strong, sound law further guarding and protecting all bank deposits will dispel all misgivings, allay all fears, and bring the money from the much-talked-of mattresses, socks, and tin cans.

How much money there is in hoarding I do not know. There should be none. But the person who has come through this wreck with a little money should not be criticized too severely for seeking a place of safety for it. He is asked to invest it in sound securities or deposit it in a safe bank. Upon the advice of his banker or broker he had already invested in so-called gilt-edged securities, only to see them fade and vanish. A short time ago he had money in one of the supposedly safe banks, but it failed. He very naturally comes back with the query, "Where is there a safe bank or a sound investment save only the United States securities?" Having had this experience, can he be blamed for his apprehension and fear? When he sees the local bank hoarding its reserves and denying loans to its patrons, for fear that an emergency may arise and the currency may be needed; when he is told that the big banks are piling up reserves and refusing to release paper eligible for rediscount, hoarding money and credit against the day when a run may be made; when he sees and knows these things, he becomes confused, a dull fear comes over him, and he does his best to preserve what he has left.

Recently this Congress passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act and the Glass-Steagall bill with the hope and with the expectation that these measures would point the way to recovery by stimulating industry and allaying fear, by expanding credit and increasing purchasing power, by bringing back employment and instilling confidence, and thereby alleviate distress and suffering. There is already some evidence that these hopes and expectations will be realized. It remains to provide some plan by which each bank depositor in the country may have the absolute assurance and guaranty that every dollar he has in the bank is safe and secure and will be returned to him. When that time comes the last vestige of fear will vanish, full confidence will be restored, and we will be well on the way to recovery.

Legislative acts, judicial decrees, or Executive proclamations in themselves can not bring success and happiness to a discouraged and a distressed people. The Government can only seek to help, to protect, to encourage. The ultimate triumph depends upon the people themselves. Through the intervening years from its organization to the present this Government has been called upon to face many serious problems. It has never wavered or faltered. We may have suffered reverses, but we have never surrendered. We may have been discouraged, but we have not despaired. In every great crisis of our history the loyal, splendid, courageous, and patriotic manhood of the Nation has answered the call to service. The people of this great Nation, with a fine spirit of cooperation, by an earnest and united effort, standing side by side, shoulder to shoulder, hand clasped in hand, and heart locked in heart, during this time of stress and strain will once again push back the clouds of gloom and despair and find the way to prosperity and happiness. They will not fail now.

RED TAPE AND CROP-REDUCTION LOANS

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein three short telegrams.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, there is entirely too much red tape, unnecessary delay, unreasonable restrictions, and unheard-of regulations in connection with the production loans which Congress said should be made to the farmers of the Nation. I am disgusted with the bureaucratic control that has been injected into this matter and am heartbroken over the treatment that the farmers are receiving. I do hope and pray that at least some of this money will get to the farmers of my district in time to be of some value. The amount authorized is entirely too small and the red tape and delay is outrageous in the extreme. Here is a telegram which I received late last Tuesday night:

MARCH 8, 1932.

Hon. W. C. LANKFORD.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C .:

Check with Agriculture Department as to necessity of farmers submitting with loan application State agriculture college farm living plan. This is being exacted. We urge its elimination on account the delay it occasions. We have no county agent and only very limited facilities to do this immense extra work. Telegraph us.

E. L. GRANTHAM. W. R. WILSON.

Early Wednesday morning I went to the Department of Agriculture and after several conferences I returned to my office and wired my friends at Douglas as follows:

MARCH 9, 1932.

Messrs. E. L. Grantham and W. R. Wilson, Douglas, Ga .:

Douglas, Ga.:

Department of Agriculture holds that it is absolutely unnecessary for agriculture college farm living plan to accompany applications for production loans. Take up no more time with these, as I am wiring Georgia State College of Agriculture to stop this unnecessary performance.

W. C. LANKFORD.

At the same time I also sent the following telegram:

MARCH 9, 1932.

Mr. J. PHIL. CAMPBELL and Prof. Andrew M. Soule,

State College Agriculture, Athens, Ga.:
Upon receiving numerous protests I went to the Department of Agriculture and have ruling that it is not at all necessary for Georgia State College of Agriculture cropping plan to accompany or be in any way connected with application of farmers for production loans. Help me in every way possible notify committees and farmers to ignore blanks in this respect and to speed up applications without this unnecessary and unusual handicap. W. C. LANKFORD.

I am glad this requirement was removed. It would require an expert an hour or two to fill out one of these cropping plans, and then he would not be sure he was right.

Mr. Speaker, the farmer has been regulated and reregulated, controlled and recontrolled, searched and re-searched until he has been practically destroyed. Can not we some day do something for him without all this unnecessary and uncalled-for red tape? Will Congress and others never learn that in destroying the farmer they are destroying the Nation? Let us truly help the farmer and his folks and we will save

EXTENSION OF REMARKS-PROHIBITION'S RECORD

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, any Member of Congress who to-day by his vote refuses to allow his constituents and mine to vote by constitutional methods on an amendment to the eighteenth amendment which would give the States of the Union the right to regulate their own beer and alcoholic traffic within their own borders will certainly stand in a sorry light when he appears before his people in the November elections asking for their vote for his return to Congress for another two years.

Professional drys are now exerting every effort to defeat any consideration of the prohibition question in the present Congress, because they are convinced of the almost complete failure of prohibition as a national experiment. Its repeal will and should relegate to the already large ranks of the unemployed, the professional, hypocritical reformer who would inflict his tastes and narrow desires upon the balance of the world.

National prohibition as a law has now been in existence since 1920-12 years. Its effect upon our economic, political, and social structures has brought a series of crimes, lawlessness, bribery, extortion, kidnaping, murder, and organized gangland that has made our "noble experiment" the ridicule of every other nation on earth, to say nothing of its insidious effect upon the boys and girls of our entire country.

The crying demand from all parts of our land for more and larger jails, for more space for the growing number of feeble-minded, the blind, and the poisoned, speaks louder than could any words of mine for relief from this costly legislative folly.

The loss of countless millions of dollars, aye, even billions, to the National Treasury is unimportant when compared with the actual loss of life, health, character, and respect for law throughout the United States, but I will later show the Members of the House by official figures that prohibition has cost the National Treasury more than ten thousand millions of dollars in the first 10 years of its ghastly existence.

The resolution now before the House would give Congress the right to regulate the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating beverages, but would restore to the States the right to determine whether they as individuals would have prchibition. The passage of this resolution would but submit the question to the States. To oppose the right and desire of millions to vote on an important issue is the lowest form of bigotry and intolerance.

In a speech against prohibition before the Committee on the Judiciary of the House on June 4, 1924-eight years ago-I said:

It is quite evident that a well-organized minority in and out of Congress is enforcing upon the people of the country something which is unnatural and undesirable, and which is costing the country hundreds of millions of dollars in money as well as thousands of lives and a destroyed morale, the value of which it is impossible to estimate. Probably never in the history of any impossible to estimate. Probably never in the history of any world government has there been so much corruption, fraud, and bribery in the administration of any law, and instead of getting better the situation is daily becoming worse, and officers of the Anti-Saloon League, as well as of the prohibition forces of the National Government, are constantly heading toward the jails because of the tremendous temptations surrounding the promotion and enforcement of this distasteful law. tion and enforcement of this distasteful law.

Millions of dollars now going into the pockets of bootleggers and moonshiners will be employed in legitimate channels, and the hip-pocket flask, so detrimental to the morale of our young manhood and womanhood, will be a thing of the past.

Distinguished men in professional life, judges, statesmen, captains of industry, gentlemen of the cloth, and men who have always represented the highest standards of honor and integrity carry their private flasks and maintain their private supply of intoxicating liquors at their office, home, or club, and they do not seem to consider that in doing so they are committing any offense against the letter or spirit of the Constitution or the laws

They believe that the modification of that act and the substitution of more temperate laws, wisely framed so that the constitutional rights of all classes of citizens are recognized and protected, will have the effect of driving the bootlegger and rum runner out of existence and of bringing a better moral condition within our borders and of increasing respect for our Nation

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, a careful reading of my remarks, now eight years old, in opposition to prohibition convinces me that I was underestimating the horrors of that monumental blunder.

The human mind is swinging very rapidly away from prohibition and thinking of temperance.

Distress and unemployment during 1931 have thrown the light of publicity upon the enormous loss of revenue in an experiment which has been a scandalous failure for 12 unbroken years.

National organizations of the very highest moral standing and repute have expressed themselves in favor of repeal of the eighteenth amendment. The American Legion, the American Bar Association, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the American Medical Society are among many others to do so, but most significant of the trend against fanaticism is the vote of the Junior League in 43 States which were canvassed by the Junior League Magazine.

Mr. Speaker, let me repeat the vote of these young women whose principal public activity is charitable and philanthropic work. A total vote of 8,418 was divided as follows:

For repeal of eighteenth amendment	2, 438
For modification of Volstead law	2, 168
For modification and repeal	3, 415
In favor of present laws	397

Not even the most rabid or intolerant dry would dare impugn the motives or the character of such young people, who fairly represent the best of the coming generation.

That young women of the country are not alone in their opposition to unpopular prohibition laws is evidenced by the recent poll of 14 colleges by Harvard Crimson, which showed but 838 students favoring present conditions as against 16.595 for repeal or modification and 4,517 for strict enforcement.

Yale voting separately, demanded repeal by 2,113 to 426.

More than a hundred large professional, political, fraternal, business, social, and religious organizations have indorsed repeal of the eighteenth amendment. Not a single one of them has any pecuniary interest in the liquor traffic. They have only the Nation's best interests at heart.

Article V of the Constitution provides, "The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution." Aside from any question of personal freedom, appetite, or politics, I sincerely believe that the facts and figures surrounding our attempted enforcement of this unpopular law will convince any but the most intolerant dry that it is now necessary to propose a change.

The printed record of our noble experiment reads like a horrible recital of ruthless slaughter, destruction, and disregard of the sacred rights of our citizenry. It shows the failure of prohibition as no spoken statement possibly can. Only World War figures can compare with the astounding record promoted by the eighteenth amendment and its sister folly, "the Volstead law."

In the period covered between January, 1920, and July 30. 1931, Federal officers arrested 681,657 persons for prohibition violations; convictions were obtained in 499,911 individual cases, and 171,205 persons received jail sentences:

Mr. Speaker, concerning the repeal of prohibition then, I | 291,181 stills for the manufacture of illicit liquor were seized and 266,790,612 gallons of liquor, mash, and so forth, were confiscated; 77,707 automobiles were seized and 6,809 vessels and boats were captured; $60,003,344 was collected in fines and penalties; while 35,365 premises were padlocked.

While these astounding figures were accumulating, dishonest and grafting Federal prohibition agents were collecting their filthy percentage from their unwary victims, thus 1,604 of them were summarily dismissed "for cause" and another 11.982 were merely "dropped" from the service.

The dollar cost of this unholy enforcement was approximately $370,000,000 and the loss of revenue to the Treasury was approximately $10,984,000,000, a very large percentage of which went direct to the pockets of the bootlegger, the racketeer, and the rum runner.

When the division of profits with grafters and gangsters took the big money and the thrill out of rum and beer running the bootlegger and the racketeer switched to kidnaping, bank robbing, and other forms of getting "big money" quickly. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I blame prohibition for all of these lower crimes with which every section of our fair land is afflicted.

Mr. Speaker, if the State, county, and city records on prohibition could be added to the Federal figures, they would shock the sensibilities of the entire world. Our financial losses in the World War would not compare very favorably with the cost of the world's most colossal legislative failure, and yet there are those who would seriously recommend a further trial of this silly but costly experiment.

Mr. Speaker, the American people are now confronted with a situation in which their supposed right to vote on a simple and acute constitutional question is being disputed. Advocates of national prohibition not only announce their opposition to a resubmission proposal but state that they will try to punish Members of Congress who do not obey them when a submission resolution comes to a roll call.

The attitude of intolerant prohibitionists to-day is a direct contradiction of the vehement arguments with which they bombarded Congress when they jammed the eighteenth amendment into the Constitution while we were at war.

Arguments favoring prohibition a dozen years ago can be summed up in a single sentence: It is the duty of the Congress, regardless of dry or antidry opinions, to give the people a vote on the-then proposed-eighteenth amendment, because there is a reasonable demand for it and the power of amendment is vested in the people, not in the Congress.

In the report of House Judiciary Committee presented by Representative C. C. Carlin, of Virginia, on December 14, 1917, he said:

Your committee can not conceive of any good reason why the States should be denied longer an opportunity to pass upon the desirability of thus amending the Constitution. * * * The question submitted by this report to the Congress is not whether the manufacture and sale, etc., of alcoholic liquors shall be pro-hibited but whether the matter shall be submitted to the States for their determination.

Senator Sheppard, of Texas, sponsor of the eighteenth amendment, said at that time:

The Member of Congress who will not vote for the submission of a constitutional amendment to the decision of the States, where it belongs, unless he personally believes it should become a part of the Constitution usurps the function of the States, arrogates to himself and the Federal Government a prerogative that belongs to the States and violates the very essence of their sovereignty.

Mr. Speaker, Senator George, of Mississippi, a vigorous and outspoken antiprohibitionist, was a member of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred a national prohibition amendment some 40 years ago. He joined in a favorable report for its submission on the ground that to do otherwise would be to deny to millions of people the right of petition. Let me quote from that report, which was signed by both antiprohibitionists and prohibitionists:

It is proper to say that there are members of the committee who concur in the report recommending the submission of the proposed amendment to the States who do not by such action proposed amendment to the States who do not by such acting indicate their approval of the adoption of the amendment as part of the Constitution, nor that they would themselves advocate its ratification by the legislatures of the States; but in deference to the immense mass of petitions for this amendment of the organic law, coming from the people in all parts of the country, and believing that an opportunity should be given to them to be heard upon the merits of their cause in the forum of the States, where alone it can be heard and decided, the majority of the committee would deem a refusal to submit the proposed amendment to the States for consideration analogous to the denial of the right of a party to be heard in court upon a question of private right. (Congressional Record—Senate, July 30, 1917. Pp. 5553—5554.)

Senator Johnson, of California, said:

I shall cast my vote for the joint resolution that is presented by the Senator from Texas [Mr. Sheppard] upon the ground and upon the theory—fundamental with us of the West, upon the very basic idea upon which we have builded new Commonwealths there—that the people finally have the right to pass upon any question where any considerable number of the people ask that right. (Congressional Record, Senate, August 1, 1917, p. 5651.)

Senator Jones, of Washington, author of the now famous 5-and-10 law, said:

The Constitution provides the way for its amendment. Congress can not do it, but it can propose amendments to the people, who alone can adopt them through their State legislatures. I believe it to be my duty as a Senator to vote to submit an amendment to the State legislatures when there is a strong, matured, widespread sentiment and demand from the people for such an amendment. To refuse to do so is to act as the master rather than as the representative of the people. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Senate, July 31, 1917, p. 5587.)

Senator Lawrence Y. Sherman, of Illinois, an ardent dry, said:

Even if I were wet, if I were opposed to the amendment, there is no reason why any Senator should deny to the people of the States the right to pass upon a question and approve or reject this amendment. I put it upon that ground if I could put it upon no other. Congress ought to vote to submit it to the people of the States. (Congressional Record, Senate, July 31, 1917, p. 5626.)

Senator Cummins, of Iowa, another ardent dry, said:

I believe it is the duty of Members of Congress, when they find there is a fair and reasonable demand upon the part of the people for an opportunity to express their opinions regarding an amendment to the Constitution, to submit it irrespective of our individual judgment or opinion upon the merits. * * * We take ourselves, I think, altogether too seriously and impute to ourselves a guardianship of the Constitution which we ought no longer to hold or to exercise. It is the Constitution of the people of the United States; and when, as I said before, a reasonable proportion of the people want a chance to vote upon an amendment to it it is our highest duty to see that they have the chance. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Senate, August 1, 1917, p. 5643.)

Representative Edwin Y. Webb, of North Carolina, now Federal judge and then chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, said:

Mr. Speaker, in closing this debate I shall only be able to touch on three or four points. First, gentlemen, this is not a prohibition vote. It is a question of referendum. * * * I submit to you gentlemen, wets and drys alike, that you should be willing to stand by your States in giving them the opportunity to amend the greatest instrument ever struck off by the pen of man. * * * (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 65th Cong., 2d sess., December 17, 1917, p. 485)

Representative Richmond P. Hobson, of Alabama, always a dry leader, said:

The first matter that I desire to bring to your attention is that the memorial or petition is for a referendum. It is not the purpose of those who are here to-day to enter into any lengthy discussion of the question of the merits of prohibition or the differences in the various forms of temperance legislation, but to have you realize that the request is for the several States, or the people in the several States as a whole, to be allowed to pass on that question. (House Judiciary Committee hearings, April 15, 1914, p. 19.)

Senator Ashurst, of Arizona, still a Member of the Senate, said:

This proposed amendment is not an attempt to force upon a State something it does not want. It is, and only is, a great referendum giving the various States an opportunity to say, in the manner prescribed by the Constitution, whether or not they wish this particular change in organic fundamental law. (Congressional Record—Senate, July 30, 1917, p. 5556.)

Mr. Speaker, the question as to whether there is really a popular demand for resubmission of bone-dry prohibition has been raised by some Members of the Congress. I believe them to be honestly at a loss for evidence on this point, for I am confident that there are very few Members, if any, who would permit personal prejudice to deter them from doing their full duty in the present grave situation. I believe, moreover, that the question is a very proper question; the Congress can not accede to frivolous or ill-judged demands for amendments. So I think the whole issue in its present stage simmers down to this: What are the volume and extent of the demand for resubmission? One can not find the answer in a private opinion of national prohibition or an offhand estimate of how many people actually are asking for repeal. The answer lies in cold facts. Suppose we look at those facts and consider them in the light of the precedent set at the time the champions of national prohibition were pleading for submission of their amendment.

There were two facts that were concrete and undisputed—and no more—on which the drys based their demand. The chief of these was a petition reputed to bear 10,000,000 signatures. The other was a petition by one State legislature. Oklahoma was the only State in the Union which had appealed to the Congress, through its legislature or by referendum, for national prohibition, that action having been taken in 1915.

While it is true that 33 States had adopted some form of prohibition, bone-dry laws like the eighteenth amendment were in effect in only 12 of them, and those 12 contained only 11.8 per cent of the people of the United States. In the remaining 21, prohibition meant simply the barring of the saloon, inasmuch as they permitted importation of liquor into the State. None of the 33 prohibition States, save only Oklahoma, attempted to impose prohibition of any kind on other States.

Mr. Speaker, what is the situation to-day? Half a dozen States have specifically petitioned for relief from the eighteenth amendment. Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Nevada have each acted thus in two ways—by referendums and by legislative resolutions. Similar appeals have been made through referendums in Illinois and New York and by the legislature in Wisconsin. The six States which have thus officially asked relief from the eighteenth amendment have a total population of 28,185,895, or 23.04 per cent of our country's population. Their Federal individual incometax payments for the year ended June 30, 1930, amounted to $531,357,860, which was 55.54 per cent of the total collections from that source.

Let us consider, also, the States which have in other ways repudiated national prohibition; that is, by refusing to ratify the eighteenth amendment or to adopt enforcement laws or else by voting to rescind their enforcement laws. We have in that category nine Commonwealths—Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, Maryland, Illinois, Wisconsin, Montana, and Nevada. Their population is 31,961,930, or approximately one-fourth—26.12 per cent—of our entire population, and they paid 59.34 per cent, or $551,732,816 of the total received in Federal individual income taxes for 1929–30.

Three other States of the Union, which are not included in the foregoing compilations, have registered pronounced opposition to national prohibition in recent elections.

In Ohio, home of Republican traditions and the Anti-Saloon League, Senator Bulkley, a Democrat advocating repeal, won the senatorial primary in 1930 with double the vote of his nearest rival, and was elected over the dry Republican incumbent, Senator McCulloch, by 1,046,561 to 863,944. National prohibition was not the sole issue in that campaign, but Senator Bulkley came out squarely and emphatically for repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

Similarly, the late Dwight Morrow chose repeal—even against the advice of party leaders—as a cardinal issue in the New Jersey senatorial campaign. He was opposed in the primary by ex-Senator Frelinghuysen, who advocated modification, and Congressman Fort, a prohibitionist. He polled a vote of 422,978 against 118,621 for Mr. Fort and 47,811 for Mr. Frelinghuysen, and he was elected by 601,427 to 401,007 for Mr. Simpson, his Democratic opponent, who was also for repeal, while the prohibition candidate polled exactly 18,903 votes.

Mr. Speaker, in that rock-ribbed Republican stronghold, Pennsylvania, in the same year, Mr. Hemphill ran for governor on the Democratic-Liberal-Independent ticket, basing his campaign chiefly on repeal of the eighteenth amendment, which had caused formation of a third party, and Mr. Pinchot, the dry Republican, barely defeated him. A repeal Democrat, Mr. Hemphill, got 1,010,204 votes against the dry Republican's 1,068,874, a difference of only 5.4 per cent, in Republican Pennsylvania. A real prohibition candidate polled but 31,909 votes.

In my opinion, those returns at least indicate that the sentiment of Ohio, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania is opposed to national prohibition. If they are added to the nine States which have repudiated national prohibition, as heretofore shown, we find that the group represents a population of 52,281,311, or 42.74 per cent of our country's total, and paid 76.54 per cent, or $770,165,510, of the Federal Government's collections from individual income taxes in 1929–30.

The story told by these figures should be weighed not only as an impressive answer to the query whether a real demand exists for submission of repeal, but in contrast with the surprisingly meager demand on which the drys rested their contention in 1917, that national prohibition should be referred to the States.

Mr. Speaker, every fair-minded American will admit also, I believe, that the sentiment of the country has changed since the eighteenth amendment was ratified, and the change has been uniformly in one direction, against national prohibition. The evidence here is varied and abundant.

We know, for instance, that the Literary Digest's poll in 1922 showed 20.6 per cent for repeal, but that poll in 1930 showed 40.4 per cent for repeal, 29.1 per cent for modification, and only 30.5 per cent for enforcement. A poll now being made will be overwhelmingly in favor of immediate repeal.

We know that the legislatures of two States—Wyoming and Connecticut—have recently decreed that referendums shall be held next November.

We know that among important national organizations the American Bar Association has called for repeal by a vote of 13,779 to 6,340, and the American Legion has asked for resubmission by 1,008 to 394.

We know that, although not a single State platform contained a repeal plank in 1928, there was a call for repeal in 21 different State platforms in 1930.

Mr. Speaker, I beg to suggest that the Wickersham report on prohibition contains overwhelming evidence that conditions exist which have created a public demand for prompt relief. The only effective relief within the power of the Congress lies in the resubmission of national prohibition for a verdict to the people of the several States. It is not a question of who is dry and who is not. It is a question of whether the Congress will permit the people to vote on an experiment that during the 12 years of its life has aroused profound misgivings among all thinking Americans, dry and antidry alike.

Mr. Speaker, according to outstanding drys it was all right in 1914 for a Member of the Congress who did not believe in national bone-dry prohibition to join, nevertheless, in submitting to the people for their decision an amendment installing such bone-dry prohibition. But now, in 1931, they say it is all wrong for a Member of the Congress who may personally favor prohibition to join in submitting to the people for their decision the question of repeal or amendment of this eighteenth amendment.

It all depends upon which foot the shoe is on.

Reverend McBride, the head of the Anti-Saloon League, gave forth the following public statement on December 6, 1931:

The league will, as always, oppose the renomination or reelection of any Member of Congress who votes for wet or against dry measures.

The league will consider any vote for a resolution to repeal the eighteenth amendment as a step toward legalizing liquor and therefore as a wet vote.

The league does not accept the theory that a vote to resubmit the eighteenth amendment is a neutral vote.

Mr. Speaker, the league will punish us for doing in 1932 what it begged us to do in 1914.

This attempt to crack the Anti-Saloon League whip, which is losing its lash, prompts me to call respectfully to your attention the statements made to responsible committees of Congress by Bishop James Cannon and Mrs. Ella Boole in 1914, when the Congress was considering the question of submitting the proposed eighteenth amendment itself to the States for ratification or rejection.

Bishop Cannon, in those good old days before his indictment, spoke as follows:

The real question as I see it is this: Has the time come for the Congress of the United States to give the people of the several States an opportunity to decide for themselves whether they desire this amendment to the Constitution? I know, of course, that there is a certain responsibility attaching upon the Congress of the United States in submitting any proposition, a very grave responsibility, and yet it does seem to me that in view of the general trend of political thought in our day, whenever it becomes evident that a large percentage of the people desire an opportunity to express themselves upon a great question, the body in whose hands is committed the right to decide whether the people shall have that opportunity should at least divide the responsibility with the people as to the decision of that question. (P. 13, Senate Judiciary Committee hearings, April 16, 1914.)

Mr. Speaker, Reverend Dinwiddie spoke as follows:

What is Congress asked to do in relation to this proposed amendment? The answer is, we are simply asking Congress under the provisions of the Constitution to submit to the people of the various States this amendment for their ratification or rejection. As I take it, the report of this amendment, with the recommendation of this committee, and its ultimate passage by the Senate and the House, does not commit any individual Senator to this proposition. He can vote, as a citizen of his State, as he chooses when it comes to a final decision on the question, when submitted to the various States for approval or rejection.

In other words, we are simply asking that Congress, under the terms of the Constitution, give the people a chance to vote on this proposition by a referendum through their State legislatures. Congress, therefore, is not asked to pass on the policy of prohibition or nonprohibition, license or no license. (P. 125, Senate Judiciary Committee hearings, May 1, 1914.)

Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Boole, then president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of New York State, now national president and spokesman of that organization, said:

So I come, Mr. Chairman, representing the womanhood of the State of New York, as organized in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and representing the allied forces that speak in favor of this resolution of more than a dozen organizations in the State, asking that you give to the Senate of the United States, and through the Senate of the United States to the people of the States, the right to pass judgment upon the settling of this problem of the liquor traffic through an amendment to the National Constitution. (P. 34, Senate Judiciary Committee hearings, April 16, 1914.)

The people have a right to be heard. All the people have a right to be heard. All the people have never had a chance to be heard, and this proposed amendment will give them that chance. (P. 13, House Judiciary Committee hearings, December 11, 1913.)

Mr. Speaker, later in the Senate Senator Sheppard, who says now that he will not join in submitting to the people the proposed repeal of the eighteenth amendment, said:

At the close of this debate we will have an opportunity to enable the States to exercise their highest function, the right to shape, alter, and develop the Federal Constitution. They are the proper tribunal to decide the fate of this amendment. They compose the mightiest array of free Commonwealths united in a federated whole the world has ever seen. There are chapters in the history of each that add honor to American citizenship. If there is anything in the amendment subversive of their liberties and their welfare, they can be trusted to condemn it. Let not Congress assume to judge for them. Let Congress discharge its preliminary task of submission and stand aside. Let it put in motion the referendum provided by the Nation's organic law—the method of amendment the States themselves established when they created the Constitution. Let the States perform the duty which remains the sole instance of their sovereignty over the Federal Government itself.

the sole instance of their sovereighty over the redetal development itself.

As I view the matter, the Member of either branch of the American Congress who denies the power of amendment to the States, especially an amendment which vast numbers of the people desire the States to consider, violates the basic principles both of the Constitution and of popular government, repudiates the fundamental rights of the States, and overturns the two most sacred privileges the people possess—the privileges of referendum and petition. (P. 5554, Congressional Record, 65th Cong., 1st sess., July 30, 1917.)

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the prohibition leaders have threatened to defeat me and others in this House who differ with them on this important matter, but I am sure that when the time for nominations and elections comes, Reverend McBride and the political parsons who carry out his orders will not be the only voting Americans in the field. The Anti-Saloon League is not the United States of America.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS-REVENUE BILL OF 1932

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the collection of taxes is at best an unpleasant and a troublesome thing. Money must be raised to pay the operating expenses and fixed charges of the Government. There are many kinds of taxes-property, income, estate, excise, import, franchise, sales, and others. There should be a general, recognized principle of justice underlying any system of taxation. It should have for its basis justice and right. The maxim in taxation was laid down years ago that each person should contribute toward the support of the Government in proportion to his ability to pay, measured by the property possessed and the income enjoyed by him under the protection and security of the Government. Justice in taxation implies equality of sacrifice upon the part of those who pay the tax. But it is needless to discuss the question of equality and justice as applied to the sales-tax feature of this bill, because no one has attempted to justify or defend it upon the ground of equity and right. It is amazing to find here a revenue measure that none of its advocates or proponents will even try to uphold in principle. The most they can say for it is that there is an emergency now and that this plan is expedient and painless.

It was my privilege to hear the Canadian revenue experts in the city of Ottawa explain the operation of their sales tax. They gave three reasons for having that tax system:

First. It could be economically administered. Second. It produced substantial revenues.

Third. It did not materially interfere with business activities. No thought or consideration was given to the justice of the plan.

While it is said the plan is economically administered in Canada, it is not so simple there. In the 12 years the sales tax has been in operation there very many amendments to the law have been made and numerous changes in the rules and regulations, the methods of collection, and the audit of the taxpayers' records have been made. T. M. Gordon in his book, the Canadian Sales Tax, says: "The issue of interpretations and rulings as to the application of the tax has not been, up to the present, satisfactory, and much confusion and complexity exists among both taxpayers and auditors. The department is now attempting to rectify this."

After 12 years there the rulings are unsatisfactory and much confusion and complexity exists. Canada has only 10,000,000 people, living, for the most part, in rural communities and leading a quiet, contented, and passive life. If after all these years their system is unsatisfactory and confused, what would we have here in this country with our 120,000,000 of bustling, rushing, jostling, ultra ambitious and intensely active people with all our complex industrial, commercial, agricultural, and financial organizations and activities?

If established in this country, this system will take a commissioner with a number of deputies and assistants to formulate and promulgate the rules and regulations for its operation; it will take a staff of judges and lawyers to interpret such regulations and determine their application; and it will take a veritable army of clerks, stenographers, accountants, auditors, registrars, inspectors, investigators, and collectors to inspect and audit the books and collect the taxes. As the law under the provisions of this bill would expire in 1934, it would pass out of existence before the official machinery would be well oiled and limbered up. Economy in administration would not be one of its virtues here. If the system has caused confusion in Canada, we would have confusion confounded here.

The Manufacturing Association of Canada has strenuously voiced its opposition and objections to the faulty operation and unjust discriminations of the system. It can not be said that it has not interfered with and been opposed by the business interests. Already protests are coming from every section of this country against the enactment of this law.

It may be that this law will raise the money and, to be sure, that is the purpose of any revenue measure. That is the end to be attained. It is desirable and indeed necessary that any revenue bill accomplish that purpose. If it makes no difference at all to the Government how and from whom it gets the money, then there may be merit in this bill. In the conduct of every private business it is desirable that sufficient income be made to meet current expenses and provide a reserve. But those funds should be acquired by fair, open, and just business operations and dealings and not by unreasonable, unfair, or unconscionable methods.

It is desirable that every man should not only live in comfort, but that he should acquire a competency to provide for age or misfortune, but his income should be made and his property should be acquired by industry, thrift, good judgment, and honesty, and not by trickery, chicanery, or fraud. To my mind, it is not enough to say the measure will produce the revenue. It must be further shown that it will take the money from those who by every principle of justice and right should pay it.

The statement of the public debt issued by the Treasury Department shows the public indebtedness of the United States on March 1, 1932, to be, in round numbers, $1,670,-000,000 greater than on the same date in 1931, and at this rate the debt by July 1, 1932, the end of the fiscal year, will be $2,300,000,000 greater than last year. The Budget failed to balance at the end of 1931 by almost a billion dollars and will fail to balance by about two and one-third billion dollars in 1932. The administration revenue experts, the Treasury Department, and Congress, all of which were Republican, failed to provide a balanced Budget for 1931. The same forces failed to provide sufficient revenue to balance the Budget for 1932 to the tune of two and one-third billion dollars. These same wizards of finance, these same soothsayers and prophets, these same men who have in days gone by guessed at the Budget requirements and missed it many hundred millions and even billions of dollars, now tell us that this revenue measure with a sales tax must be passed in order to balance the Budget in 1933.

If some of this heralded prosperity which is "just around the corner," and in the search of which we have grown dizzy, should suddenly come into view, then the revenues would increase and all this burden would not be necessary. Suppose we should miss our estimate and fall short a few hundred million dollars, we would do no worse than has been done before. The country would not go to the bowwows nor would its credit be impaired. With all this increase in Government indebtedness, Government securities are selling three or four points above what they were a few months ago. The governing officials of the Treasury Department, the Federal reserve, and land banks have been doing their best to throw fear into Members of Congress. We were told by them that there must be appropriated $125,000,000 for the land banks to hold them up and avoid a collapse of the entire system and save the $2,000,000,000 of farm loans which they carried. We voted the money, and about $65,000,000 have already been added to our national debt. They insisted in language loud and vigorous that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation must be established to save the industrial and business concerns of the country, the railroads, the insurance companies, and others. If that was not done, certain wreck and ruin would follow. The corporation was organized and $500,000,000 was made available for its use, and up to date $100,000,000 have been added to our debt by reason of that act. The Federal reserve bank laws must be amended under threat of collapse of some of the great financial institutions of the country and the serious impairmant of credit. There was a veritable volcanic outburst on this matter by the emissaries of the administration. That law was passed. It would be humorous if it were not so serious.

These same gentlemen who drifted along calmly and quietly assuring the people with optimistic utterances and rosy predictions that business was coming back to normal, that the unemployment situation was improving, that the worst had been passed, and that rapid recovery could now be expected suddenly awoke to find themselves in the worst, the most devastating, and ruinous panic of history. They are now completely stampeded. They now demand that emergency legislation be passed immediately to save the country from chaos. There was nothing said about balancing the Budget when this urgent legislation was demanded, which may add over $600,000,000 to our national debt. Now this money must be raised by a tax on consumption, a tax upon the laboring man, the man with a family. Now the foghorns are blown, the fire alarms are sounded, the blast of bugles is heard, and we have all this fanfarade about balancing the Budget. It has become a fetish.

Do not understand that I am opposed to balancing the Budget, to getting as much money into the Treasury each year as is paid out, that the receipts of the Government should equal the expenditures. That is a consummation devoutly to be wished. That is a desirable, a sound, and an ideal condition. It is the wish of every family that the income may balance the outgo and that a surplus may be laid up against a rainy day. It is the intention of every business institution to have its net earnings exceed its expenses and thereby create a reserve. But in these unhappy days how many families and institutions are falling short of the goal? If a sufficient amount of revenue can not be raised in these distressing and desolating times without placing an unreasonable and an unconscionable burden upon labor and industry and upon the men of moderate means, then why not pass the deficit, if one should develop, to a fixed obligation of the Government in the shape of bonds?

This can be done with the expectation and with the assurance that when business revives and prosperity returns, the necessary revenue can be brought into the Treasury without the crushing weight of this sales tax. There should be a conservative estimate made as to the probable revenue for next year, and there should be an earnest effort made to raise that amount. Let the estimate be made in the light of better business conditions with the hope that additional revenue may come in, and if we should not realize as much as expected, no great calamity would befall the Nation.

This measure proposes to raise slightly more than $1,000,000,000 of additional revenue over and above that already provided for, and of that amount $600,000,000 is proposed to be raised by a sales tax. For some reason unknown to me, it is called a manufacturers' excise tax when the bill says "There shall be imposed a tax of 2½ per cent of the sale price on the sale of every article sold in the United States by the manufacturer or producer thereof," with certain enumerated articles exempt. It is a general sales tax with a very limited number of articles excepted. The tax is added when the manufacturer or producer sells the article and then the tax is passed on to the final consumer—not only does he pay the tax provided for by the law, but he may and most likely will pay an additional tax each time it changes hands.

The consumer not only pays the tax to the Government and the cost of collecting it but it is pyramided upon him. The laboring man with a family, whether he works in the field or in the factory, whether in the mill or in the mine, may pay more of this tax than the rich man in his palace. Above all, at a time like this to place an additional weight upon the shoulders of the struggling masses is cruel, if not inhuman.

There are in this country too many millionaires and too many paupers; too many ultra-rich and too many in poverty. There has been a decided drift of wealth into the hands of a few. There is not an equitable distribution of wealth. Under a capitalistic system, such as we have, there will not and can not be an equal distribution of worldly goods, but the spread is too wide between the lowest and the highest. It has been estimated that 2 per cent of the very rich own 60 per cent of the accumulated wealth of the Nation, and that in 1929, 504 persons had an income of $1,185,000,000, an average of over $2,350,000. There have grown up a few great estates in this Nation whose wealth runs into the billions. There has been a feeling among conservative people that these big incomes and these vast estates should pay a larger proportion of the expenses of government, under the protection of which these incomes are possible and those estates are accumulated. There has been an opinion that these immense estates, in the interest of social justice, should be curtailed. There is little reason or excuse for any man having an income of $40,000,000 per year. If he is not willing in behalf of his country and in the interest of social progress to forego his excessive and unreasonable profits and permit others to share part of them, then the Government should take a considerable portion of his illgotten gains in taxes. These top-heavy incomes and estates can not survive in a free country.

Even England, with her traditions of nobility and landed aristocracy, lays a much heavier tax upon excessive incomes and great estates than is provided for in this law. If the Budget must be balanced—and I think it should be—then why not make up the deficit by higher taxes on big incomes and vast estates?

For years there has been an effort on the part of the arrogant rich and special classes through official influence and pressure to engraft a sales tax upon the revenue system of our Nation. This insidious effort has been combated and successfully resisted by the brave, courageous, liberal Members of Congress.

Now, when conditions are deplorable, when 7,000,000 or more men are out of work, when millions more are barely able to subsist on reduced wages, working only part time, when industry is taxed to the utmost to keep going, when business is on the verge of collapse—under these conditions the Treasury Department of the United States sends to Canada for a sales-tax expert to write a law for us. This is taking advantage of the ruinous panic that is upon us in order to establish a sales tax which in better and happier days we have been able to fight off. This move must be openly and courageously met. This onslaught must be turned back. The struggling industries of the country must not be junked. The worn and weary laboring men of this Nation must not be pushed into a dark cellar of gloom and despair where the sunlight of joy and happiness can never shine. This sales tax must not pass.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, before the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. Mills stated:

It is extremely doubtful whether the Canadian sales tax would meet with the success in our country that it has across the border, (Hearings, p. 4.)

Dr. T. S. Adams, of Yale, and Mr. E. C. Alvord made a trip to Canada in November at the request of the Treasury Department (Mills' testimony, hearings, p. 30) to make a study of the situation there. Doctor Adams stated:

I have one definite conviction. Whether you should have a sales tax or not is a question for you gentlemen, largely a question of policy, but this, I think, is a common-sense conclusion, that it is not worth while to adopt a Canadian sales tax for a short period of time, because to put it over you ought to have an administrative machine so well built up and so large that you would not be justified in creating it for a temporary tax of two or three years. (Hearings, p. 260.)

Mr. Alvord stated (hearings, p. 266):

I agree with Doctor Adams that as an emergency measure, I think it would be subject to very serious consideration as to whether it would be worth while to interject the entire machinery for a short period of time.

Incidentally, Mr. Alvord when asked by the chairman if he had talked with consumers who paid this tax in Canada, replied:

No, sir; we did not.

This astounding fact must not be overlooked, that these representatives of the Treasury Department did not consult in Canada with the consumers who actually pay the tax but only with the officials of the administrative and manufacturing groups.

These excerpts from the testimony of the representatives of the Treasury Department reveal the inexpediency of adopting the manufacturers' sales tax as an emergency measure. Its adoption permanently has never been favored in the platform of either party. The Democratic platforms have expressly condemned it.

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I offer the following amendment, on page 36, after line 7, a new paragraph to be known as section 31a:

It is further provided, That the income tax imposed by this chapter shall be credited with the amount of any income tax assessed against such income by any State, Territory, foreign possession, or the District of Columbia. The credit allowed by this subsection shall not exceed 10 per cent of the tax imposed by this chapter.

The effect of this amendment would merely be to provide that the Federal Government should give a credit on the payment of Federal income taxes to an extent not to exceed 10 per cent of such taxes for any income tax paid upon the income taxed to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia by virtue of an income tax which those governmental subdivisions may have in force and effect.

I feel particularly that such an amendment should be adopted in view of the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. Swing]. I say that for this reason. There are now approximately 20 States that have adopted a State income tax. These States include Arkansas, with a maximum rate of 5 per cent; Delaware, 3 per cent; Georgia, 5 per cent; Idaho, 4 per cent; Massachusetts, 1½ per cent; Mississippi, 5½ per cent; Missouri, 4 per cent; New York, 3 per cent; North Carolina, 6 per cent; North Dakota, 6 per cent; Oklahoma, 5 per cent; Oregon, 5 per cent; South Carolina, 5 per cent; Utah, 4 per cent; Vermont, 2 per cent; Virginia, 3 per cent; and Wisconsin, 7 per cent.

It is my understanding that three other States have adopted income taxes this winter, and that a number of States, including Wisconsin, have also greatly increased their income-tax rate because of the widespread unemployment and distress.

Taxpayers living in these States have felt that they were at an unfair disadvantage as compared with taxpayers living in States having no State income taxes.

In view of the fact that Federal income taxes will be increased from a maximum of 26 per cent to a possible maximum of 72 per cent under the Swing amendment, it becomes clear that the State income taxes will become even more onerous than ever.

This Congress should also recognize the fact that these States have adjusted their taxing system to a basis whereby a certain amount of revenue is derived from the taxes on incomes by those States.

The policy followed by the Federal Government during the last 13 years has justified these various States in the enactment of a State income tax law. I believe that the present development has conclusively demonstrated that these States are proceeding along sound economic lines by imposing a tax upon big incomes.

I say that because as a general thing those States are to-day in the soundest financial position. Many States that have not levied a State income tax are on the verge of bankruptcy, and at this late moment, when incomes have been greatly reduced, they are turning to this source for additional revenue.

Shortly after the World War the Federal Government tried to develop the theory that certain sources of taxation should be reserved to the Federal Government and other sources reserved to the States.

In view of what has happened during the past 12 years, it seems to me that this theory was proposed with ulterior motives in view. The theory advanced by Congress in its debates was to the effect that the large incomes ought to be reserved to the Federal Government for purposes of taxation, while inheritances dependent upon the laws of devolution of the various States should be reserved to the States.

Having enunciated this doctrine, however, the Federal Government reduced income taxes on big estates from 72 per cent in 1918 down to our present maximum rate of 26 per cent. In line with this theory they abolished the gift tax which we recognize as a prime essential if we are to make an estate tax effective. We have seen the major portions of the great fortunes of Ford and Rockefeller transferred under the benign protection afforded by the repeal of a gift tax.

In view of what has happened, I make the charge that the Federal Government during the 10-year period following the war deliberately played into the hands of the recipients of the big incomes and the owners of the big fortunes by permitting them to dictate our tax policies. It is to the credit, therefore, of the different States that did adopt an income tax that they sensed this fact and enacted income taxes of their own on the theory that if the Federal Government did not make the wealthy bear their just share of taxes that the States would attempt to see that the wealthy bore a small part of the burden that was properly theirs.

There is also another major reason why this body should at this time provide for the reciprocal feature provided for by my amendment in favor of States having income taxes. It is the fact that it is very clearly the sentiment of this body that we, the Federal Government, ought to increase our estate taxes. I am referring to the very excellent speech and analysis presented to this body by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Lewis] in his speech of last Thursday, March 17. In his speech he shows that if we increase the rate on estates from $50,000 and up the Federal Government can collect an annual estate tax of $867,000,000. There is little doubt in my mind that a majority of the Members of this Congress are in favor of the position taken by the gentleman from Maryland. In fact, I am inclined to believe that a majority of this House would go even further along the line of the taxation of estates than even the gentleman from Maryland has gone.

I regret that it is necessary to consider the question of a reciprocal feature in favor of State income taxes before we can see what this body will do with the matter of increasing Federal estate taxes. I want to say to the Members of this body that if they intend to increase Federal estate taxes to the extent advocated by the gentleman from Maryland, then they must recognize the fact that they are abandoning the expressed policy of the Congress of the United States by levying a tax upon inheritances which was presumably reserved to the States with a reservation of income taxes to the Federal Government. With the abandonment of this policy it becomes increasingly necessary that the States that have adopted an income tax be protected.

I am not going to oppose the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland. I am going to support it. But by the same token I am going to say that an amendment such as I have proposed ought in justice to our respective States to be supported by every Member who comes from a State having a State income tax. And in fairness it ought to be supported by the Members coming from States that do not have an income tax, for the reasons that I have given.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, this Congress and the country are now confronted with one of the most serious problems which has ever confronted the Congress or the country. As the Congress and the country decide this problem and meet it, the welfare of this generation and the destiny of the American people are going to be determined. In such a situation it may be natural to meet it with hysteria, but it will be better to meet it with calm reasoning and wisdom.

We are confronted with the situation of a Government whose expenses for the last two years have exceeded its income three billions, or three thousand millions of dollars. It is now spending daily $7,788,000 more money than it takes in. The country is now called upon to meet this situation. The country can only speak through Congress. We are going to meet this situation either through a sound principle of sane taxation or through confiscation of property.

We can not confiscate property without throwing overboard the very corner stone of civilization from Moses to Hoover. If the Congress and the country meet this situation calmly and with wisdom, they will meet it on a basis of taxation. If the country and the Congress are going to act irrationally, hysterically, and follow the red flag of inflamed passion, we shall probably refuse to balance the expenses with the income, and then, if divinity is kind to America, we shall get out of this situation with something a little less than revolution. All of cur hysteria and all of our anguish can not dodge the necessity that our Government must either balance expenses with income or topple and go down into bankruptcy. We can not have a stable government which is not a solvent government.

Many of us have had well-grounded preconceived ideas of taxation based upon the basic principle that those most able to pay taxes must pay them. We have been firmly convinced that this Government should be supported upon the basis of an income tax. These ideas of government are correct only so long as the incomes of the country with a fair and reasonable income tax levied against them will produce enough revenue to support the Government. We have reached a situation which none of us ever thought was possible, namely, that the incomes of the United States taxed by an income tax which is based upon sound principles of taxation will not yield enough money to support this Government. When we have reached this situation, those of us who have believed that the income tax was the proper way to support our Government must either give up for the time being this belief or change our position from levying a tax against income to a confiscation of income.

The incomes of this country have so diminished that we can not raise $2,500,000,000 a year from these incomes without confiscating them. If we confiscate them, we have broken down the principle of private ownership of property. We can not do that unless we are ready to junk American and Anglo-Saxon civilization and sail off into the new Russian experiment commonly known as communism.

Rather than to give up our ideas of the years, that income tax should support this Government, I believe that this House in its despair has cast overboard rational reasoning for hysteria. I do not believe that it is the sound judgment of this House that we should jump from income tax to confiscation of property. One of the reasons I believe this is the record and conduct of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia], who is leading this great crusade which is taking place in this House. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] has within the last year presented his views as to what would constitute a sound income tax for this country. He did not reach the conclusion of what would constitute a sound income tax hastily; he reached it after weeks and months of deliberation. Last October or November before this Congress convened, he sent out to the Members of this Congress what he thought was a fair and just income tax bill for the United States. That bill was quite evidently the result of his deliberation for at least the time intervening between the adjournment of the last Congress and the convening of this Congress. When this Congress convened, he introduced into this Congress H. R. 4605. I would not do the gentleman the injustice of suggesting that he introduced H. R. 4605 to this Congress except that it was his honest judgment as to what, in his opinion, constitutes a proper income tax bill for this country, giving full consideration to the principles of taxation, revenue for the Government, and the protection of society from concentrated wealth.

Not only did the gentleman from New York introduce H. R. 4605 in this House but he appeared before the Ways and Mean Committee and prevailed upon the committee to accept that bill. The committee rejected the income-tax proposal of the gentleman from New York, not on the ground that he levied too much income taxes but because he had not levied enough. The committee presented the bill before this House, which we are now considering. The surtax rates in this bill presented by the committee on every income up to $3,235,000 per year are much in excess of the surtax rates in the bill presented by the gentleman from New York, and in behalf of which he appeared before the committee. I am here going to present to the House the comparative income-tax yield from surtaxes on various incomes under the bill introduced by the gentleman from New York and under the bill presented by the committee, now before the House for consideration. For convenience I shall refer to these bills as the LaGuardia bill and the committee bill

$300,000 $500,000		$2,950 11,660 54,160 100,160 243,160 443,160 668,160 1,158,160 1,273,300	$4, 200 20, 100 100, :00 180, 100 380, 100 780, 100 880, 100 1, 180, 000 1, 274, 100

In each income in the United States in excess of $3,235,000 the LaGuardia bill will return an income tax of 9 per cent more than the committee bill. In the year 1930, which is the last report available, there were 18 incomes in the United States in excess of $3,235,000; therefore, even in the more prosperous year, 1930, the LaGuardia bill would return to the Government an income in excess of the committee bill on only 18 incomes in the United States, while on every other income in the United States the committee bill will return to the Government an income in excess of the LaGuardia bill.

Now, what do we find? Do we find the gentleman from New York assailing the committee because its bill presents higher income-tax rates and returns more income tax into the Government of the United States than his bill? No. Singular as it may seem, we find him leading the fight denouncing the committee, leaving the impression to the country that the committee sold out the people and protected the wealth of this country at the expense of the masses, yet the committe in its deliberation presented an income-tax rate on the incomes of the United States, with the exception of 18 incomes, which returns far more income than the bill which the gentleman from New York presented as a result of his deliberations as to what would be a just and fair income tax bill.

I am not going to charge that this assault upon the committee bill is the result of any dishonesty of purpose, yet it can not be justified by either truth or reason. I am going to charge it to the hysteria which is sweeping over this House and the country in our uncompromising rebellion against giving up our preconceived ideas that our Government must be supported by income tax. Even though the facts are that the incomes of this country can not support it by taxation, and it is questionable whether or not they can support it by confiscation, the country can well afford for us to give up our preconceived idea and bow to the inevitable. The country can not afford for us to justify our preconceived idea and maintain our consistency at the expense of junking our civilization.

In common with others, I have firmly believed in the philosophy as advocated by the gentleman from California [Mr. Swing] that the Government should be supported by those who are making money, yet I have been firm in the conviction that the expenses of the Government should be kept to the irreducible minimum irrespective of the people's ability to pay or from what source we receive the taxes. Before we started the consideration of this bill I had gone into the matter and had reached the firm conviction that we could not meet the expenses of this Government by any form of taxation except through some sort of a sales tax, special or general; therefore my mind has been made up that I would vote first for a general sales tax, then, if we could not receive that, vote for a special sales tax.

I am opposed to a special sales tax because it is unjust and because it will persecute and demoralize certain industries; yet, if we can not have a general tax, it is better to persecute and demoralize certain industries than to destroy our Government. As a basis of showing my good faith, I went along on the Swing amendment. I was willing to make the large incomes pay the maximum. I did not think that they would furnish much revenue because I think that such incomes under present conditions will not be large enough to yield much revenue. So far as those particular income-tax payers are concerned, if they do not make the incomes, they are not seriously hurt. I have not cared if it did hurt them, however, I have reasoned this thing through a little further. I am now firmly convinced that they are not the ones who are going to suffer by the restoration of the war-time rates. If they were the only ones suffering, I should have no desire to make a change in my position. I am convinced that the American people are going to suffer. I am not going to pay the price of making others suffer in order to make my position in Congress a little more easily explainable to my constituency. We have built up great institutions in this country; the merging and consolidating of institutions has gone to far, yet millions of people depend upon these institutions for their employment. These institutions are so large that they can not be operated except by some large investments of capital.

I am firmly convinced that in hazardous times such as these arithmetic will not permit capital to be invested in any institution where that capital must bear all the losses in case of loss and must give up 72 per cent of the winnings in case of profit. That is the situation under the Swing amendment, 65 per cent surtax and 7 per cent normal tax. The States are also in this field. Does anyone think for a moment that such capital can be invested in industry and employ labor?

I am opposed to the consolidation of industry and concentration of wealth. It took 15 years to build it up. I am willing to disintegrate it. I am not willing to put the legislative torch to it.

I am firmly convinced that the Swing amendment drives the last of great wealth out of American industry. At this time we need all the wealth of this country, great and small, in American industry, in order to keep our society and industry affoat. We can not disintegrate this consolidation of industry overnight. If we drive all of the great wealth out of it instantly, it will be closed down. In a day it can not be replaced by smaller institutions. Hungry society can not wait for it to be replaced by smaller institutions. Industry must operate or government can not survive. Unless private capital operates it, there is only one alternative, and that is for the Government to operate it; that is communism. It was not idle talk. It was not talk to scare us into line when the Democratic floor leader, Mr. RAINEY, of Illinois, told us Saturday that we had made the closest step toward communism any country had ever made except Russia.

I, for one, made the step but I am going to retract that step at the first opportunity. I can suffer the humiliation of the unthinking charging me with being inconsistent, but I can not bear the responsibility of knowing that I have done anything which will drive my country into or toward communism. At a later date I hope the committee will ask for a roll call to reject the Swing amendment. At that time I shall retract and vote to reject it. I shall replace it with the committee bill. The committee bill of 47 per cent, 40 per cent surtax and 7 per cent normal tax on concentrated wealth, will disintegrate it in an orderly and civilized fashion. That gives us a chance to return to the civilization of individualism which made America a great country. That shall be my course. That is my desire. I will not lend my support to the Swing amendment, which, at best, can only increase the present despair and distress with more unemployment and will more likely drive us into Government ownership and operation of industry, which is communism. I will stick by the traditions of Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, Roosevelt, and Wilson, rather than, in a spirit of hysteria, turn to the philosophy of Lenin and Trotsky.

Saturday the gentleman from New York said that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Lewis] would introduce an amendment to the estates tax which would obtain the necessary revenue. I am now informed that the Lewis amendment will provide for a 40 per cent estates tax on estates in excess of $100,000.

I take it that the gentleman from New York in his desperation to maintain his consistency and his determination to carry out his policy of making wealth bear the expenses of this Government is now willing to abandon his sound and deliberate opinion of just taxation in the estates tax for confiscation of property in order to maintain his position. When he was viewing the estates tax on a basis of sound taxation and not as a means of confiscating property in order to justify his views as to who should pay taxes, he regarded 3 per cent as a sufficient estates tax on estates in excess of $100,000 and less than $200,000. Last fall when he informed his colleagues what would be a proper estates tax and when he appeared before the Ways and Means Committee and advocated what he thought was a proper estates tax, he firmly believed that 3 per cent was a sufficient tax on estates between $100,000 and $200,000. Now he is willing to advocate the proposed Lewis amendment of 40 per cent on such estates. Obviously, he has jumped from taxation to confiscation. When he appeared before the Ways and Means Committee and gave his deliberate judgment as to the proper estates etx he did not think that any estate should pay 40 per cent until it was an estate of not less than $6,000,000 or more than $7,000,000.

It is true that the committee bill levies a tax of 40 per cent on incomes of $100,000. There is a lot of difference in levying a tax on an annual income of $100,000 and on an estate of $100,000. The annual income represents the earnings and profits of a year's time. The estate of $100,000 represents the thrift and accumulations of a lifetime.

The committee bill on estates taxes levies a higher rate on estates up to $4,000,000 than the gentleman from New York. in his bill, H. R. 4605, asked the committee and this House to accept. On estates above $4,000,000 the gentleman from New York by his bill graduates the estates taxes from 30 per cent up to 60 per cent, while the committee bill graduates them from 28 per cent up to 40 per cent. So far as revenue to the Government is concerned, the committee bill will yield much more revenue to the Government from estates taxes than will the bill offered by the gentleman from New York. The higher rate of the committee bill on estates up to $4,000,000 will yield more revenue than the LaGuardia bill on estates of $4,000,000 and upward. In order to bring clearly before the House the soundness of the committee bill after deliberation, as compared to the LaGuardia bill, which the gentleman presented as a result of his deliberation, I am going to set forth as a part of my remarks the committee bill on income tax and the LaGuardia bill on income tax and the committee bill on estates taxes and the LaGuardia bill on estates taxes.

I am doing this to bring clearly before Congress and the country that we can not reject the deliberation of the committee without rejecting the deliberate views of the gentleman from New York, who is now leading the crusade to destroy the committee bill and to abandon taxation for confiscation. I do not believe that the gentleman from New York will stand on this floor and seriously tell this House that his wide departure from his own bill (H. R. 4605) to the program which he is now advocating is anything less than abandoning taxation and embracing confiscation of property.

SURTAX ON INDIVIDUALS UNDER THE COMMITTEE BILL

Upon a net income of $10,000 there shall be no surtax; upon net incomes in excess of $10,000 and not in excess of $12,000, 1 per cent of such excess.

$20 upon net incomes of $12,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $12,000 and not in excess of $14,000, 2 per cent in addition of such excess.

$60 upon net incomes of $14,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $14,000 and not in excess of $16,000, 3 per cent in addition of such excess.

$120 upon net incomes of $16,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $16,000 and not in excess of $18,000, 4 per cent in addition of such excess.

$200 upon net incomes of $18,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $18,000 and not in excess of $20,000, 5 per cent in addition of such excess.

$300 upon net incomes of $20,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $20,000 and not in excess of $22,000, 6 per cent in addition of such excess.

$420 upon net incomes of $22,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $22,000 and not in excess of $24,000, 7 per cent in addition of such excess.

$560 upon net incomes of $24,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $24,000 and not in excess of $26,000, 8 per cent in addition of such excess.

$720 upon net incomes of $26,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $26,000 and not in excess of $28,000, 9 per cent in addition of such excess.

$900 upon net incomes of $28,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $28,000 and not in excess of $30,000, 10 per cent in addition of such excess.

$1,100 upon net incomes of $30,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $30,000 and not in excess of $32,000, 11 per cent in addition of such excess.

$1,320 upon net incomes of $32,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $32,000 and not in excess of $34,000, 12 per cent in addition of such excess.

$1,560 upon net incomes of $34,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $34,000 and not in excess of $36,000, 13 per cent in addition of such excess.

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, the balancing of the Budget is one of the most important problems of this Congress, and I realize it is no easy task. The Ways and Means Committee, to whom this task was assigned has, brought before the House H. R. 10236, which its proponents state will provide over a billion dollars in revenue. The bill and hearings before the committee show careful and deliberate consideration.

I have no objection to supporting this measure provided certain provisions were stricken from the bill, namely, the sales tax and the theater admission tax.

The American people have always accepted the principle that the tax burden should be distributed amongst all, and each according to his ability to pay. The sales tax in this bill is a radical departure from that principle, for it makes consumption, rather than income, the basis of taxation. It is putting the burden on the masses—the poor people who are least able to assume it. It is, in my opinion, the most unjust and iniquitous tax ever proposed in this country, and coming particularly at a time when there are millions of men unemployed and millions more on part-time employment or barely receiving a living wage makes it more so.

This tax bill will be a severe blow to business, for it tends to restrain consumption and lessens the purchasing power, which is badly needed to aid in bringing more employment to our people. Even if the principles were defensible, it is plainly erroneous to tax the distribution of goods when the country is suffering from overproduction as it is to-day. Aside from its unfairness, the agencies interested in savings and in encouraging modest investments will certainly suffer.

The proponents tell us in one breath that the tax will be absorbed through the operations of competition by the distributor, and in another breath that it will be paid by the consumer, practically without his knowledge. I will admit it is a tax of low visibility and sugar-coated to make it more palatable to the consumer, so that every time he makes a purchase he will not realize he is paying the burden of the wealthy. Let us see how much the consumer is going to pay. The committee recommends a rate of 21/4 per cent upon the price at which the manufacturer or producer sells his commodity, which is estimated to raise about $600,000,000 for the Government, but what will that mean to the ultimate consumer?

The report states pyramiding of taxes is effectively eliminated by a system of licensing. There was an honest endeavor to accomplish this, but pyramiding is inevitable on a commodity passing through the many business channels. Everyone who handles an article will add on additional profit and in the final analysis the ultimate consumer will pay at least double the tax the Government will receive. So instead of paying $600,000,000, he will pay $1,200,000,000. This does not represent social justice in any form whatso-

A wage earner having a wife and three children and receiving a salary of $3,000 would pay a tax of approximately $40 under the sales tax, while a person to-day having a wife and three children would have to earn a salary of approximately $8,000 to pay that same amount in income family had for saving is completely wiped out.

The sales tax, if enacted into law, will spare wealth from its just proportion of the deficit and put the great burden on the workingman who is so desperately poor to-day. It was the wealthy of the country whose greed for more wealth without earning it caused the depression and as a result the present deficit.

Those who engage in livestock and agriculture get but a small per cent of the consumer's dollar, and a consumption or sales tax will reduce that amount. Our sheepmen, cattlemen, and farmers have a hard time to keep their heads above water, but will certainly sink lower if this tax is

I am for balancing the Budget not by a sales tax but by increasing the gift tax, the income tax, and the inheritance tax in the higher brackets. A tax of one-half of 1 per cent of the stock exchanges would raise over $300,000,000, a great amount of which would be paid by the professional gamblers in Wall Street.

THEATER-ADMISSION TAX

In regard to the proposed theater admission tax, my State is made up mostly of farmers, ranchers, and laboring people. None of these folks are making money.

The motion-picture theater is the center of entertainment in our small towns. We have no large cities. The only form of amusement for our folks is the theater. The theaters that have survived the depression are barely making ends meet, and the admission tax would close down the rest of them.

It would be impossible for the theaters to pass the tax along to these folks, as they have their budgets stretched to the limit now. If the tax is placed on admissions, they would have to give up their only form of amusement and diversion from their daily labors. The theaters, consequently, would have to close their doors and be the cause of adding many more to the great army of unemployed.

The moral effect upon the communities would not be healthy should our poor and humble be deprived of their only diversion. These same theaters have been a great steadying influence upon our people. We do not have the communistic element in this country in proportion to other countries, and the theater has been a great factor in this blessing. I think the theater-admission tax should not be enacted into law.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, in his Budget message to Congress on December 9 President Hoover advised the Congress and the country of the deficit in the Federal Treasury. At that time he gave the deficit for 1931 as being $903 .-000,000 and estimated the deficit for the following two years would be over $2,000,000,000 for 1932 and $1,417,000,000 for

It is unfortunate that Secretary Mellon, for whom great claims have been made, and of whom it has been said that he has been the greatest Secretary of the Treasury since Alexander Hamilton, did not sooner learn the true condition of the Treasury. In that event the last Congress could have made proper provision for raising the necessary revenue to meet the deficit for 1931 and 1932. The failure of the Secretary of the Treasury to properly ascertain the facts at a time when those facts should have been available, and involving the probable income and the expenditures of the Federal Government, has made it necessary for this Congress not only to provide the required revenue to meet the deficit for the next fiscal year but for the two preceding years in order to balance the Federal Budget.

During the present session of Congress much has been said not only in Congress but throughout the country with reference to the necessity of balancing the Budget. We have been told that failure to provide sufficient revenue for that purpose would cause dire results to the Nation; that the return of prosperity could not be looked for until that result had been achieved, and that failure to achieve it would result in the worst financial panic in the history of the country. It is rather difficult to see how economic conditions could be much worse than they have been during the past two tax. What little opportunity the small wage earner with a \ years, with depression, unemployment, and distress on every hand.

> The serious problem which confronts and concerns the Congress and the Nation at the present time, in connection with this question, is not alone as to whether the Budget should be balanced but also as to how it should be balanced in the event that course is to be followed. Whether the Budget should be balanced in accordance with the recommendation of the Treasury or in the manner suggested by the House Ways and Means Committee is a fit subject for

> It has not been conclusively proven, at least not to the satisfaction of many Members of Congress, that it would not be better for the taxpayers of the country-and their interests are entitled to first consideration-to raise only sufficient revenue to meet a part of the deficit and to issue short-time bonds to meet the balance, in the hope that the return of normal conditions would increase the revenue sufficiently to care for that indebtedness. To say that a country that has an estimated worth of $350,000,000,000 can not borrow one-half of $1,000,000,000 seems ridiculous.

> However that may be, granting that the better course to pursue at this time will be to provide the necessary revenue to balance the Budget, the question naturally arises as to how that Budget shall be balanced. Is it to be balanced entirely as a result of increasing taxes? Would it not be better to balance the Budget as far as possible through the curtailment of Government expenses, resulting from the elimination of unnecessary and useless Government activities? Also, through a proper reduction in Government salaries, at least the salaries in the higher brackets? I would not favor reducing the salaries of those who are earning merely living wages. Such wages should not be cut, either in Government or in industry. On the other hand, as I have previously stated, during the present emergency if need be to balance the Budget, I would vote to drastically reduce the larger salaries, including the salaries of Members of Congress, members of the Cabinet, and heads of departments.

> In the present time of depression, of unemployment, and of low farm prices taxes should be increased only where absolutely necessary, and should be reduced wherever possible. The House has authorized the appointment of a special Economy Committee, whose duty and function it is to ascertain ways of reducing governmental expenditures in the interest of desired economy. This committee should be permitted to exhaust every possible method of cutting expenses, the cost of maintaining the Federal Government before Congress will have just cause for passing a bill that will materially increase taxes.

> If after every other possible means of reducing expenses has been exhausted and every possible cut has been made it shall be found necessary to increase taxes in order to balance the Budget, the increased taxes should not be placed upon the smaller taxpayers of the Nation. For that reason, that increased revenue should not be secured through the enactment of a sales tax. I am unalterably opposed to the principle of a sales tax. To propose such a tax at this time is an insult to the average American citizen, who is already overburdened with taxes. The rich of the country would not be required to pay their fair share of a tax of that kind.

> If taxes must be increased to meet the present emergency, and it is to be admitted that it will be necessary to meet a part of the deficit in that way, I am in favor of placing the greater part of those increased taxes upon the larger incomes and upon inheritances, gifts, and luxuries. The revenue measure to be enacted should be one which will provide that the increase be distributed equitably, so that the greater burden will rest on those individuals and corporations that are best able to bear it. That is the only fair principle of taxation.

> The more fundamental question involved, however, in a discussion of this issue is not as to whether there is a deficit that must be balanced, but as to why there is such a deficit at this time. The answer is obvious; the deficit is due to the depressed economic condition of the country which has re sulted in reduced values, profits, incomes, and other sources of revenue. The failure of the Federal Government to balance its Budget under the existing law is due to the failure of the average citizenship of the country to balance its budget.

In other words, if the farmers of America had received prices for their products which would have been at least equal to the cost of production, so that they could have paid their taxes, interest, and other expenses, including a living for their families; if the working classes in the cities, whether in the factory, in the shop, in the office, or elsewhere, could have secured wages which in every instance would have enabled them to pay their house rent and other living expenses for themselves and for their families; if the more than 8,000,000 of unemployed had been given an opportunity to work, to earn an honest living as the result of their own efforts; if all of these could have balanced their budgets, there would be no Federal Budget to balance at the present time as the result of a deficit.

Furthermore, may I be permitted to say that the Federal Budget will never be permanently balanced until those to whom I have referred have been given an opportunity to balance theirs. You will never be able to permanently balance the Federal Budget by merely voting hundreds of millions of dollars to aid large financial and industrial institutions. The desired prosperity will never be restored to the American people in that way. The way to build a sound structure is not by beginning at the top and building toward the bottom, but by beginning at the bottom and building toward the top.

In this instance the foundation is to be found in a restored buying power among the masses of the Nation. Prosperity will come, and come speedily, whenever Congress will take the necessary action to provide employment for the unemployed and proper farm commodity prices for the farmers. With a restored buying power on the farms and in the cities we can hope for the return of desired prosperity to the country as a whole. With the purchasing power of the Nation reestablished, the wheels of industry will again move, confidence will be restored, and a normal condition will again prevail.

Mr. PEAVEY. Mr. Speaker, under the revenue bill now before Congress the Ways and Means Committee proposes to raise $1,100,000,000.

Sixty per cent of this amount, or $600,000,000, is to be collected under a manufacturers' excise or sales tax. What this will cost the people of Wisconsin and my district is a simple mathematical proposition. Wisconsin has over 3,000,000 of the 120,000,000 people in the United States. That is one-fortieth of the whole. One-fortieth of the $600,000,000 which the Ways and Means Committee says the bill will raise is $15,000,000. On a basis of what the experts and some of the committee members say that this bill will cost the consumer, Wisconsin's one-fortieth would in that case be $25,000,000.

As the new tenth district which I represent has approximately one-tenth of the population of Wisconsin, it will cost that district each year, under the committee figures, one-tenth of $15,000,000, or $1,500,000, and on a basis of actual cost, as shown by previous experience with the sales tax during the war, it will cost $2,500,000. I am unalterably opposed to the imposition of this new burden upon every business, farmer, and workingman, and their families. It is unnecessary and unjustifiable.

Most of the remaining $500,000,000 to be raised under the provisions of the revenue bill will be collected under the income and inheritance tax provisions of the measure.

Of this amount, it is estimated that the income-tax provision of this bill will raise about $250,000,000 to $300,000,000, or about one-half of the amount raised by the sales tax. In other words, the consumers of America under the provisions of this bill will be made to pay twice as much in taxes as is collected on incomes.

The small business man, the farmers, and the workers of America under this bill are asked to pay in consumption taxes two dollars for every one paid by organized wealth, in order to balance the National Budget. The Budget must be balanced, so the sponsors of this bill say, in order that the tax-free Government bonds held by wealth may not depreciate and other stocks and securities collapse.

It is unfair and unjust, and I for one will never vote for it. Such a law should never be enacted, except as a last resort and only after every other legitimate means of raising revenue has been exhausted.

Mr. Speaker, last night's Washington newspapers carried information on the first page, saying in substance that if the progressive members of both parties in the House combined in removing the sales tax from the present revenue bill, the party leaders, in charge of the bill, would retaliate by advocating a reduction in all Federal salaries.

That means, Mr. Speaker, that unless the duly elected representatives of the people in Congress pass this bill, sales tax included, to relieve organized wealth of its share of the burden caused by the present depression, then we, as Members of Congress, along with all the other employees of the Government, will have our salaries cut.

I can only speak for myself as one member of the House. As such I accept that challenge. Mr. Speaker, I will never vote to pass this bill as long as it contains a sales tax. I will never vote to place an additional burden upon the backs of the farmers and workingmen of my district at this time.

Under this bill as now written every farmer in my district will be required to pay a consumption tax on every piece of machinery he buys, every roll of wire, steel post, rope, strap, or other manufactured article with which he operates his farm. The wife of every workingman in my district, under the provisions of this bill, will be made to pay taxes on every manufactured article she buys for herself or the children, from a pin to a sewing machine. Once adopted, this sales tax on consumption will become a permanent policy of the Government. It will be a burden on the business and common people from the cradle to the grave. Every child under this bill will be compelled to pay taxes on everything he needs to attend school, including books, likewise every piece of candy, bottle of pop, or ice-cream cone.

Many of the people of my district, through unemployment and the agricultural depression, are unable to meet their present burdens, and our towns and cities are feeding and clothing hundreds of families. This bill will tax them all.

As now written this bill is a rich man's tax bill. It protects wealth from paying its fair share of the burden, and I will not vote for it. I would not vote for it if I knew they would reduce my salary from the Government because of my vote against it. Nor will I vote to reduce the salaries of the employees of the Government on account of it.

Mr. Speaker, I believe in economy. I believe in reducing taxes, Federal, State, county, and town. I am interested in reducing taxes because I am a taxpayer. I know just how hard it is to dig up money to pay high taxes when every farm is being operated at a loss.

We have several thousand Government employees in my district. Mail carriers, rural carriers, postmasters, post-office employees, lighthouse keepers, harbor workers, and so forth. Nearly all of these men have families; many of them are helping to support others. They all contribute to town, city, and civic relief, the unemployed and destitute. Many of these Government employees get small salaries, five to eight hundred dollars per year. Only a few get more than two thousand. Every one of them is the son or daughter of some farmer or workingman taxpayer. Once a cut in Government wages is sanctioned by law it will cause a reduction in the wages of every worker from Maine to California. Every business man, farmer, and laboring man in my district would be injured if these Government salaries were reduced.

Under the Federal political patronage system in vogue in Wisconsin, progressive Congressmen, like myself, because of our votes in Washington against bills like the present bill, are not recognized or allowed any voice in the appointment of Government workers. My answer to the threat of the House leaders to cut our salaries is that I will not vote a sales tax upon all the people I represent, nor will I vote to cut the salaries of Government employees because of that votenot until the income-tax rates on those receiving ten thousand net and up are raised 100 per cent; nor will I vote for a sales tax or cutting the salaries of the Government employees until the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is stopped from making tax refunds of hundreds of millions of dollars each year in the secrecy of his office and without the knowledge or approval of the people or Congress. Over $1,000,000,000 has been remitted in this manner in the last five years.

Nor will I vote for a sales tax or to cut Government salaries until the rates on gift and inheritance taxes are placed on a parity with the rates on incomes. This change in the law would alone increase the Government revenue $714,000,-000, or more than the entire amount collected under the sales tax.

Think of it! A rich man gives his son $50,000. Under the provisions of this bill that young man pays a tax of 11/2 per cent, or $750. That is all. A business or professional man earning $50,000 must pay all the expenses necessary to produce such an income and then pay property taxes and an income tax of $4,200. Income, whether it be gift or inheritance, should be taxed as income and all taxpayers should pay alike. There should be nothing sacred about money; rich and poor should be treated alike.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the Federal Budget can be balanced without the imposition of a general sales tax. The proposal to place a tax burden of this character upon the entire population of the country at a time when nearly one-fourth of our people are suffering from lack of work is most unjust and should not be tolerated by the American people.

Any attempt to place a sales tax on the necessities of life simply means the passing of the cost of Government from those who are able to pay to the great mass of our people who are without means to purchase even the bare necessities of life.

Due to the unheard-of low prices for agricultural products-far below the cost of production-it can not be seriously contended that this tax burden should be placed upon those who are engaged in agricultural pursuits. The farmers' tax burden, due to an extravagant increase in local, county, and State expenditures for the past 15 years, has placed such a tremendous tax obligation upon the farmers and people residing in the rural sections that they are to-day losing their homes by tax sales and mortgage foreclosures, being unable to meet these expenditures.

For several years I have advocated reductions in local, State, and Federal expenditures, and I now believe that the legislators and officials of the country have a real opportunity to demonstrate their willingness to work for the public good by a stringent curtailment in governmental

In the State of Minnesota nearly all township, county, and city units have greatly curtailed their budgets for the coming year, and the public officials in charge of these matters are to be congratulated for their sincere effort along this line.

The example set by the local units has not been followed by our State administration in Minnesota. While the municipal, township, and county officials have curtailed expenditures for their own governmental subdivisions, the head of our State administration has conducted the affairs of the State in such a manner as to bring about the largest State tax that Minnesota has had for the past 10 years. He has increased personnel and salaries in nearly all branches coming under his jurisdiction. He has failed to exercise the power granted him in our State constitution to veto any single appropriation item contained in a legislative bill in order to reduce the tax burden of our people. I would urge the people of Minnesota to secure from the State auditor, who has charge of the public accounts of the State, an itemized account showing the expenditures of our State under the present administration. It will open their eyes looked the poor man's food. You are taxing the bread line, and will, no doubt, bring about another housecleaning in our State when all facts are analyzed.

Congress has a real opportunity to demonstrate to the country that we can bring about a balanced Budget by a tremendous cut in Federal expenditures. A careful study of the governmental structure will disclose that the activities of a large number of bureaus can well be eliminated or consolidated in order to avoid duplication of effort and futility of endeavor.

For the past 10 years our various Presidents have requested authority from Congress to bring about a consolidation of governmental bureaus and departments. Congress has refused to grant such authority, and now it appears to me that if our Federal Legislature is not willing to permit the President to perfect the administrative structure some legislation should be passed at the present session of Congress to bring about the desired results. Such legislation must necessarily be arbitrary in its purpose, and I urge the Committee on Expenditures to immediately report a bill reducing Federal bureaus and commissions at least 25 per cent. Such action on our part will be a good example for other municipal subdivisions throughout the United States.

It is well said that the power to tax is the power to destroy. It has seemed rather strange to me that during the course of the debates on the revenue bill there has been very little talk about a reduction in Federal expenditures. Virtually all arguments have been along the line to raise the taxes and to impose a sales tax. I therefore feel that it would be far better for us to start in with a reduction in Federal expenditures and then talk about an inc-ease in taxes in order to balance the Budget.

If the Budget can not be balanced by curtailment in expenditures, then the amendment adopted to increase normal and surtaxes in the higher brackets, and the Ramseyer estate tax amendment will go a long way toward correcting our financial difficulties.

In my opinion the Ramseyer amendment which was adopted by the committee yesterday will serve a twofold purpose. In the first place, it will produce approximately $600,000,000 in revenue per annum, and at the same time it will serve in the redistribution of concentrated wealth in the United States. This amendment places an inheritance tax on estates of $10,000,000 in an amount of $3,116,000, and a 45 per cent tax on all estates in excess of $10,000,000. This amendment should be approved by the House and become a part of the law of the land.

In conclusion let me reiterate that our first effort should be to curtain all unnecessary governmental expenditures, and after this is done we can talk about increasing taxes and pass necessary legislation to balance the Budget.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this bill more directly affects the masses of the people than any peacetime revenue measure ever brought before the House, with the possible exception of our present tariff act. I realize that the Budget must be balanced, but other ways should be found to raise the necessary money without imposing additional burdens on those least able to bear them.

You ask me to vote for a bill that provides that when my constituents, thousands of whom are now without employment, have any money to spend they will be required to pay a sales tax on the shoes and clothes they buy for their children, as well as many other necessities of life.

You ask me to vote for a bill that exempts porterhouse steaks, rib roast of beef, and other choice cuts of meat, but places a sales tax on lard, boiled ham, sausages, such as fresh pork sausage, bologna, meats in can, and even the frankfurter, the poor man's food. It is estimated that, based on the 1929 manufacturers' census, the value of lard, sausage, canned meats, and cooked meats to be sold in 1932 will approximate $450,000,000, which would bring a tax of $10,000,000 at 21/4 per cent, every nickel of which will be added to the finished product by the packer and paid for by the consumer.

Everyone will agree that the products exempted in the bill should be exempted, but the committee evidently overwhere the unfortunate is handed a cup of coffee and a hotdog sandwich. When the time comes I will offer an amendment to correct this.

You ask me to vote for a bill that imposes a tax on malt sirup and wort that goes into the illegal manufacture of home brew, but you refused to place a tax on the manufacture of 2¾ per cent beer that would bring to the Federal Treasury $300,000,000 or more, would revive an old legal industry, place several hundred thousand of the unemployed at work, and absorb 128,000,000 bushels of grain annually. The only industry such a tax would disturb would be the bootlegging industry. I am surprised that the Members who took the joy ride to Canada were not converted to a tax on beer rather than to a sales tax. It will be interesting to check the roll call on the sales tax against the one on the Linthicum-Beck amendment of those who accepted the hospitality of one who has advocated a sales tax for many years.

Economists all over the country have stated time and again that there must be a redistribution of the wealth of this Nation. This is becoming more apparent every day. Why, then, were the inheritance and gift taxes not further increased and a way found to reach the thousands of trust funds, amounting to billions, where the money in trust is invested in tax-exempt securities and increasing annually? I know that this is a problem, but a way that is constitutional can be found to reach such trust funds. The money in many trusts remains intact until there is no issue, and it will be several hundred years before that day arrives, in most cases. Oh, I know you increased the inheritance tax and reinstated the gift tax, but you did not go far enough.

Chairman Crisp showed the difference in rates in the sales tax between the proposed legislation and those in force in various countries that have adopted such a measure. Naturally the proposed rate is much lower. Why not place in the Record the rates that now apply on inheritance and gift taxes in effect in the leading countries? You will then see how foreign nations are redistributing their wealth. Here, again, you will find our rates much lower.

It is hard to understand why the committee did not go higher on the inheritance and gift taxes. If the wealth of the country is to be redistributed, then it would have been proper to have assessed a 50 or 60 per cent tax on inheritance and a 40 or 50 per cent on gifts. It is only proper that the gift tax should be lower than the inheritance tax.

Study the income taxes for a moment. Why did the committee fail to graduate the tax above $100,000. Is this not a discrimination against the man who is conducting the business in favor of the man who derives the profits?

The maximum rate applies to all taxes above $100,000. It is the same rate for the railroad president or the noted surgeon who has an income of $101,000 as it is for Rockefeller, Mellon, or Ford, whose incomes are probably $10,000,000 or more. During the war the tax was graduated up to $1,000,-000. I would not have stopped at $1,000,000, but in this emergency I feel the committee would have been justified in having extended the graduated tax up to $2,000,000, if not more

I was pleased to hear the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Canfield, say he proposes to offer amendments to extend the graduated tax. I will support him.

Paul Y. Anderson, the well-known Washington correspondent, in this week's issue of the Nation says that the Democrats are making Uncle Andrew Mellon look like a radical. Can you deny it? After condemning the sales tax and the failure to levy more than 40 per cent on surtaxes in the high brackets, he says:

The real point is that now is the ideal time to adopt a permanent policy of restricting exorbitant incomes, and shrinking swollen fortunes.

Look how you go down. You lower the exemption for the married man as well as the single man. By so doing and applying this sales tax, you can just as well stop talking about reducing salaries. Why, it is amazing to hear men advocating the passage of this bill and at the same time call for a reduction in salaries. It is absurd.

It has been said—and it is almost true—that this bill will tax everything but Bibles, pig's knuckles, and admissions to the bread line. If this is an example of what happens when politics are excluded in the consideration of a tax bill, I say open the door and let politics in. Politics might have been on the outside when you placed the sales tax in the bill, but I am inclined to feel politics had a seat in the front row when you voted to keep a tax on beer out.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Crisp], addressing the House Thursday, said this is not a Democratic or a Republican bill. I know it is not a Democratic bill—of that I am certain. He also said:

It is a Government bill; it is an American bill; it is your bill.

Well, I want him and the country to know I decline to accept his generous offer. I refuse to accept any responsibility for the bill. Never will I vote for such a nefarious measure as the one reported by the committee.

I would like to support a real Democratic revenue measure, and I hope this bill will be amended so that I can vote for it.

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this is no ordinary occasion. History is being made. As a result of commendable cooperation on the part of rank-and-file Democrats and Republicans a far-reaching victory is about to be won for the people. While there may have been a coalition of House leaders, there has, happily, been brought about a more powerful coalition of the membership of this body. Without any desire to discredit the leaders, Members have for the time being refused to follow. Well may the country congratulate. No longer can there consistently be made the charge that Congress lacks the courage of its convictions, or that the average Member is a rubber stamp. Although referred to by parts of the press as "insurgents," "fanatics," and "rebels," a majority of the Members continue the fight against the sales tax.

If the sales-tax principle were thought of as so indefensible that it was not recommended during the dark days of the World War when our people were called upon to raise billions of dollars in taxes, why advocate it now? If wrong to impose this further tax upon the people in a period of plenty, when wages and prices were high and machinery was humming, why suggest it during these dark days of low prices and unemployment when millions of men owe more than they can possibly pay?

Financially speaking, the fix in which Uncle Sam finds himself does not differ greatly from that of many of his nieces and nephews. There has been too much spending and not enough saving. "Think not of the morrow," has been the motto of too many. The Government and those who support it have alike spent. But there is a difference. The Government is not bankrupt. In making this statement I repeat what I said on this floor some time ago, at which time I made plain my opposition to the sales tax. The Federal Treasury may, because of too liberal appropriations, waste, and extravagance, be in the red, but it is ridiculous to speak of the United States of America, with an estimated worth of $350,000,000,000 and with more millions due it than it owes, being bankrupt. If that statement were true, or generally believed, it would be impossible to sell a new bond to-day. Instead bondholders would be clamoring for their cash. As to the individual, it is different. Millions are bankrupt and other millions owe more than they can at present pay. Millions in values, real or imaginary, have disappeared as disappears the morning mist. The Hoover market, the cartoonist's conception of which was Mr. Wall Street astride an elephant, is but a memory. For many months the public purchased and purchased and purchased. Nobody in authority suggested the safety slogan, "Stop! Look! Listen!" Forgotten, apparently, was the trite statement to the effect that whatever goes up must come down. There was much high-pressure salesmanship, much Pollyanna preachment, much ostrich optimism. There was not, though, in the White House a Calvin Coolidge to say, as was said in the President's message to Congress in December, 1927 -

The Nation must make financial sacrifices, accompanied by a stern self-denial in public expenditures, until we have conquered the disabilities of our public finance.

So to suggest caution was to invite criticism. If some timid soul dared express doubt, he was immediately referred to the Nation's leading financial doctors. These nerve specialists-pocketbook nerve specialists-sought to allay his fears. If an upper-bracket individual, if one who understood the language of the "big street," he was told not to sell America short. If one of the "smaller fry," as the "big boys" were wont to express it, the doubting individual was advised to spend. "If everybody spends and keeps on spending, times are bound to be good," he was told. Such was the philosophy of that school, the faculty of which was made up of cheer leaders. Apparently to prove his sincerity, our Uncle Sam, greatest of all spendthrifts, kept on spending, not even ceasing with the convening of the present session of Congress.

Is it any wonder, then, that the individual to-day finds himself in doubt and in debt? Is it less wonder that, after an orgy of spending not only countenanced but encouraged by those in high places, there followed days of demoralization and distress? Millions to-day are unable to take on the added burden of a sales tax because they did exactly what they were advised to do. When times were good they spent and kept on spending. Nor is that the worst of the story.

There came the day when many high in industry and who were in best position to judge saw that the end was in sight. Prompted partially by desperation, or impelled by greed, instead of slackening, they sent out their high-pressure salesmen. Free purchasing and less hesitancy was urged by the Department of Commerce, whose spokesman professed to see signs of the "disappearance of the defeatist psychology" and who spoke in praise of installment buying, instead of warning of the danger.

To-day many who bought goods under the installment plan and who still owe for monthly payments are without employment. This fact alone would be sufficient argument against the adoption of a sales tax. Millions mortgaged their earnings in advance and to-day have no earnings. The idea of those who advised such merchandising seems to have been that they would blow the bubble to its biggest, then let it burst.

The farmer finds himself in much the same fix as the wage earner. His taxes, seen and unseen, have gone up and up, while prices for practically everything he has to sell have gone down and down. If two years ago he took the advice of the Farm Board and held his wheat-and he was even advised to buy lumber and build granaries—he has seen fully two-thirds the value of his wheat wiped out. Neither the farmer nor the laborer is able to take on a sales tax-and this statement applies almost without exception to the average man or woman in America.

I have referred to installment buying. There has come also a novel-and in a way amusing-campaign of advertising to create more cash buying. This represents an upto-the-minute advertising urge, with its special appeal, an appeal often comic, to the overcredulous. One would not be welcome to the best society if he failed to use a certain make of soap. Only this or that brand of powder would make a woman beautiful. The secret of bravery in men or kissableness in women depended upon the brand of cigarettes smoked. Other advertising more brazen there has been, and the wonder is that the women of America have not protested the immolation of womanhood upon the altar of commercial greed. "Get the business" seems to have been the rule, whether by begging, bragging, or bullying. No wonder the public has spent.

Back in the investment days of 1929, when captains of industry were setting the example and when six billions of easy-payment paper was outstanding, it is not to be wondered at that hundreds of thousands of people, if not actually millions, were buying goods on money which they ex- | sure this applies to every Member of this House. The Ways pected to get from gambling profits, or were living in luxurious apartments, the rent of which represented more than their monthly salary checks.

The sole injustice, as I see it, is not that the overcredulous, who in those days were divorced from their dollars, are asked to take on the added burden of a sales tax, but the great wrong is that others who were in a position to advise either remained silent or offered advice of the wrong sort.

No wonder many political and business leaders have lost the confidence of the country. This statement applies to great commercial organizations as well as to those individuals who kept composing rhapsodies on prosperity. All of us now know that if Uncle Sam had not spent unwisely we would not now have that big hole in the Federal Treasury. Equally true is it that if the individual had been warned to save, instead of being encouraged to spend, he would not now have such a big hole in his pocketbook. In the street cars of Washington were cards on which one might read, "Forward America—business is good. Keep it going—nothing can stop United States." Even at that late day many who are now without funds, or perhaps dependent upon public charity, might have saved something for the day of storm had they been so advised.

Few, if any, there were, whether B. C .- before the crashor A. D .- after the drop-who dared speak out openly and honestly. Instead official spokesmen for politics and business continued their optimistic utterances. The same applies to the days following the greatest market crash in the history of America.

Speaking over a national radio hook-up, Julius Klein, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, said:

Some economists have feared that such credit, especially installment selling, is expanding excessively. Suppose, they say, there should be a business let down, with growing unemployment and smaller amounts of money in the pay envelopes and pockets of the people. Let me hasten to assure you that nothing of the sort is

Later, his prophecies having proved false, the same speaker saw good in the adversity which had forced American business to shed some of its "flabby economic paunches."

Julius H. Barnes, a cheer leader of the Pollyanna peoples, gave assurance that the-spring of 1930 marks the end of a period of grave concern. American business is steadily coming back to a normal level of prosperity.

When 1930 opened Secretary Mellon predicted a revival of activity in the spring, while Secretary of Commerce Lamont said:

There is nothing to be disturbed about.

Shortly after the beginning of the terrible depression President Hoover predicted business would be near normal in 60 days. Said he:

The fundamental business of the country, that is production and distribution of commodities, is on a sound and prosperous basis.

Commenting on the stand of the President, the Washington Post of March 8, 1930, said:

He has consistently refused to sense a panic in the situation and stands firmly in that position now in spite of scare speeches in Congress.

Then, if I remember correctly, a widely read magazine for women featured an article, "Everybody Ought to Be Rich," by John J. Raskob. So not all, not quite all, the Pollyanna preachment was political.

Concluding, I repeat that while the principle of a sales tax is always wrong, it is doubly wrong for us at this time, when want, grim-visaged and fear-impelling, invades farm homes and stalks city streets, to attempt to fasten this added burden upon those who can not bear it.

The defeat of the sales tax, made sure by the united support of members of all parties in this House, will represent one of the greatest victories ever won for the people since the creation of the Congress.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, the tax bill under consideration has given me a great deal of concern, and I am and Means Committee of the House, who brought this bill out, have worked almost day and night for some two or three months trying to devise ways and means to meet the deficit that is now in the Treasury. They brought this bill in as a nonpartisan bill and it is the expression of the majority of the membership of that committee.

I appreciate the work that these gentlemen have done and the effort that they have made to solve this situation. But I am sure they expect every Member of the House to use his individual judgment as to what taxes should be raised and by what means they are raised. I am very sorry I can not agree with the committee. I have always opposed a sales tax, because I do not believe that it is the proper system of taxation for our Government to adopt. The last reference made in our Democratic platform was opposition to this class of taxation.

To the sales tax in this bill I am opposed, first, because those manufacturers who can will pass the tax on to the consumer, and the consumer is the least able to pay. I am opposed to it for another reason, and that is that there are thousands of manufacturing plants in this country who are now running in the red and are merely trying to give their help employment and to keep up their organizations. In many instances this tax can not be passed on, which would be unjust if it were; but they will have to assume it themselves, and I fear that the results would either be that they would have to close their plants down, which would put thousands of people out of employment or probably make other reductions of the wages paid to their employees. In either case I feel that this sales tax should not pass.

I have always felt that the burdens of taxation should be borne by those of our people who are more able to pay, and the opposite of this rule would be adopted if this salestax measure were passed. I approve of the measures in this bill to tax incomes and inheritances, and the brackets to which these items have been raised will cause the flowing into the Treasury of many millions of dollars. The money in our country is fast being gathered into the hands of a few, and the result is that the extreme fortunes placed in the hands of the few are a great menace to our institutions and to our country. There is no better means of preventing this than by increasing the percentage of taxation on large incomes and large estates. For many years, since I have been in Congress, there has been quite a demand on the part of large interests of this country to raise our revenues by a sales tax, with the view of repealing the income and inheritance taxes, and if this sales tax passes after a course of time you will see an effort made by the same selfish interests, trying to evade just taxation and leave the salestax provision on the statute books.

If you at any time place a general sales tax on our statute books, it will be hard to relieve the people of this unjust burden. But it is said that we have to balance the Budget. I am one of those who feel that it does not have to be balanced at this time by taxation, when the people of this country are going through such a dreadful panic. We are raising quite a lot of revenue in this bill under consideration even with the sales-tax provision eliminated, and I am of the opinion that in the course of two or three years the extra money raised from the income and inheritance taxes will be sufficient to properly care for the amount required in the Treasury. Short-term notes could be issued, as they have been issued, to pass us over to the time when we should have sufficient funds to balance the Budget.

A full Treasury is always encouraging to extravagant and useless appropriations for the Federal Government.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this proposed amendment to the revenue bill, which calls for 3 per cent sales tax on beer. As I understand the amendment, this amendment will permit the legal sale and consumption of beer up to 2.75 per cent in all States except States where State laws have been passed against the manufacture and sale of beer in their limits.

This is one kind of sales tax which an overwhelming majority of the people of the United States will be glad to pay to aid the passage of this tax bill, a bill we must pass as a result of three years of Hoover prosperity and the noble experiment of the constitutional liquor amendment and the Volstead Act.

So far we seem to have before us three general plans of taxation to raise the $2,000,000,000 we are compelled to raise to balance the Budget. There is no question in my mind but that to keep our standard as a solvent Nation we must balance the Budget and meet our debts. I consider this a patriotic duty, even though a most unpleasant one. It seems most unfortunate that it is put upon the shoulders of the Democratic Party to plan out some form to pay the burdensome bills of the present administration.

Three general plans are proposed. The first suggested by the administration, called the Mills plan, contains a very obnoxious form of sales tax favoring the wealthier people. This has been rejected by the committee, and wisely so. Second is the LaGuardia plan, which hits so many and varied subjects that, in my opinion, it will raise as many and varied kinds of opposition. This plan will be far less popular than the third plan, which is the one recommended by the committee.

I am going to support this committee plan with the amendments proposed, at least until a better tax bill is submitted. These amendments safeguard the people in the humbler walks of life in that all foods are taken out of the tax, all clothing, all drugs, and all farmers' machinery, all household fuel, which leaves it still a sales tax, but with the necessaries of life cut out, one which is the least offensive of all. Even though I have opposed a sales tax as a general proposition, I feel the need of supporting this as a temporary emergency measure to help the country in a crisis.

But by a 3 per cent a pint tax on beer we will give to the people of the country the only popular kind of sales tax ever drawn. As estimated in the report of the Senate subcommittee hearings, 2 cents a pint tax on beer based upon an average of the consumption in preprohibition days will yield $347,000,000; 3 cents a pint tax will yield close to one-half billion dollars yearly. Add to this the benefits accruing from a State tax and the prospects of an increase rather than a decrease, the United States will likely benefit through this popular form of taxation close to a billion dollars, or one-half of the amount we have to raise in this serious crisis to balance the Budget.

The personal dry members of the country—I do not mean the men who may vote dry and drink wet, but the abstemious person who does not care to drink—that person will be freed from taxation and the consumer will be the only one who has to pay. In other words, it is a tax highly favorable to the real dry people of the communities.

In my section of the country, in Connecticut, the Literary Digest has shown that our people are about 6 to 1 for wet change, and this sentiment to the extent of at least 3 to 1 is carried out throughout most of the United States. We will be very glad to pay this tax to the United States Government rather than to Capone and the racketeers, and to Mr. McBride and the Anti-Saloon League, who now are the only beneficiaries of the illicit beer running now going on in the United States. We are willing to pay this tax and end the career of the bootlegger and the racketeer and bring our country around to a far better and happier sentiment toward business in general.

The amount of money realized by this tax would more than offset the one-half billion dollars squandered by the Farm Board on cotton and wheat and other ventures in the recent unsound economic plan of the Government. This tax would save us from the foolish—I may say cruel—plan of taxing about 500,000 Federal employees, whose salaries are around one to two thousand dollars a year. This would permit us to put thousands of men to work in the newly established brewery industries, would extend a market for the crops of the farmers of the great West, who will be benefited by the consumption of grain, and would start 1,000,000 men to work through direct or indirect employment incidental to this industry.

This tax will make possible a maintenance of our present standard of living and business and employment and wages. It will allow us to hospitalize our disabled veterans in a proper manner. It will permit us to take care of and have suitable pensions for the widows and orphans of the veterans. It will assist the veteran in obtaining revenue which will be needed to meet his request for payment of the balance of the bonus, which should have been paid many years ago.

I believe that there is a marked change of sentiment in the so-called drier sections of the United States on the question of prohibition. When I came down to Congress a few months ago if you heard a group of people discussing the wet and dry issue you generally found yourselves in a group of wet Congressmen. Since the remarkable and very substantial showing made by the wets in the last vote of the House you will now find yourself frequently in a group of the so-called dry Congressmen debating with great vigor all sides of the issue. The shoe is worn on the other foot, the drys are on the defensive. No doubt this marked change of sentiment which has grown up and is getting stronger comes from the folks back home who will express themselves in no uncertain tones on the subject November next.

Four million soldiers in the war never had an opportunity to express themselves on the prohibition issue. More than 30,000,000 people have been qualified to vote in the United States since the last test we had on the subject.

This 30,000,000 and 4,000,000 are being heard from and in no uncertain tones. Congress can satisfy the wishes of the big element of our people by placing this tax allowing the consumption of beer of very little strength and bringing in a tremendous income in the United States in a time when the United States badly needs it.

It is seriously discussed in financial and business circles of the country that as soon as the Budget is balanced and the tax fixed there will be a very vigorous drive to attempt to restore values and give business an upward push. Whether this will be only a boom of a few months or the real beginning of a steady upward turn in American business life and conditions only time will tell. It ought to mean an upward movement and it ought to bring an increased measure of prosperity that we need so badly to-day with our millions of men out of work. The faster Congress will take up this issue and the quicker Congress will do this thing, the sooner a result will be arrived at. This plan of tax on beer is by far the most feasible and most sensible and popular that we could possibly plan on the country at this time.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, what is the real issue to-day? I assert it is not the balancing of the Budget, for the Budget will be balanced. The issue that confronts the House is whether or not you will enter a new field for the purpose of raising revenue. You will, if you adopt this manufacturers' tax, initiate a movement which will eventually end in substituting this form of taxation for the income tax. Deny it if you like, but that is the goal special interests have been seeking for years.

Did not the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Bacharach] state frankly in his discussion last week that he introduced a general sales tax bill in 1921 and that he hoped if that bill had been adopted it would have resulted in that form of taxation taking the place of the income tax? Can you imagine anything more pleasing to those whose incomes run into the hundreds of thousands?

The defeat of the sales tax to-day by Democratic votes, and if it is defeated it will be done in the main by Democratic votes—for I do not think it will get 40 votes on the Democratic side—you will be defending the principles for which the Democratic Party has been fighting these many years. If the Democrats in this House fail to defeat this wicked tax, your just reward next November will be a sound thrashing.

Picture the scene that would have been enacted in this Chamber had a Republican committee two years ago brought forward a bill containing a manufacturers' or sales tax. The fiery Jack Garner, the veteran Henry Rainey, and the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Crisp] would have shouted themselves hoarse attacking such a nefarious proposition.

I have information which warrants me in making the statement that Mr. Parker, the expert with the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, advised the committee a fair estimate of the income above the $100,000 brackets for 1931 and 1932 would be $1,006,000,000. This is two-thirds of the amount above the $100,000 mark in 1930. War-time rates would have yielded a tax of $473,000 on $1,006,000,000. The Swing amendment is 10 per cent below the war-time rate.

The Swing amendment will enrich the Treasury by several hundred millions of dollars; then you have the additional amount that will be raised by the increase in the inheritance and gift taxes. Fear not, Mr. Chairman, the Budget will be balanced after the sales tax has been defeated, as it will be defeated.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some disagreement as to whether the excise tax on imported petroleum as contained in this bill is a tariff or a tax. Personally I do not care what it is called, but this is a tax bill, and I propose to discuss the proposition from the standpoint of taxation and to show that it will be justified in every way from that viewpoint. No one likes to be taxed. Many industries fear that they will be injuriously affected by taxes which we may levy upon them, and it ought to be the purpose of Congress to levy taxes which can be justified not only from the revenue standpoint but from the standpoint of doing the least injury to business progress.

Therefore, in looking about for something to tax, what can be fairer than to select foreign oil produced in South America and Rumania by peon and serf labor and in Russia by forced labor? What better subject could be found for taxation than this oil which, coming in competition with oil produced by American capital and American labor, has so depressed the price of the latter as to practically rum a large part of the industry? When we consider that the domestic oil industry is carrying the greatest load of taxation of any industry in this country in the way of ad valorem taxes, gross-production taxes, capital-stock taxes, and income taxes—State and Federal—what is more fair than to tax imported oil, which very largely escapes all of these taxes?

As a matter of fact, this is practically the only country in the world which does not tax petroleum importations; and most of them do it purely as a revenue measure, because they have no domestic production to protect. Thus, in imposing a tax upon imported oil in this country we are not embarking upon something new, but are following a precedent which has been followed by almost every civilized country.

This House has recognized in writing this tax bill the principle that the tax in a large part should be based upon the ability to pay. Therefore, in considering the oil tax, it is important to inquire who is going to pay it. I suppose that can be readily ascertained by inquiring who is against it, and we find that there has been intense opposition to this provision of the bill from the four great importing companies—the Standard of Indiana, the Standard of New Jersey, the Gulf, and the Shell, the latter a foreign-owned corporation. Also, that equally intense opposition has come from industrial sections in New England and along the Atlantic seaboard.

Now, I do not know which group will pay this tax. Possibly both of them will contribute, but I am here to say that there are no groups in America to-day which are better able to pay the tax than those which are so strenuously opposing a tax on imported oil. Suppose we assume that all the tax will be paid by the great importing companies. Let us see what their profits have been in recent years. Have they suffered from the oil depression? Not one of them has. While a large part of the oil industry has been going into bankruptcy during the past two or three years, the dividends of these companies have been steadily increasing. The dividends of the Standard group in round numbers in 1926 were $200,000,000; in 1927, $213,000,000; in 1928, $218,000,000; in 1929, $269,000,000; in 1930, $286,000,000; the biggest dividends in all their history right down through the year 1930.

These companies own practically all of the pipe lines of the country and, according to the Bureau of Statistics of the Interstate Commerce Commission for 1930, the Gulf Pipe Line of Oklahoma paid 400 per cent dividends; the Humble, 40 per cent; Shell, 54.01 per cent; the Magnolia, 40 per cent; Oklahoma Pipe Line, 30 per cent; Stanolind, owned by the Standard Oil of Indiana, one of the big importers, 61.54 per cent. The Humble and Oklahoma Pipe lines are owned by the Standard Oil of New Jersey and the Magnolia by the Standard Oil of New York. Not only are these companies paying immense dividends but they are using their earnings and their vast resources at this time to take advantage of the distress of the independent oil producers and are buying up their properties at bankrupt sales. If there is any question about this, we have only to look at the admissions of the companies themselves. If you will refer to the Wall Street Journal of December 19, you will find the following headline:

Gulf uses cash to buy bargains. Mellon official says dividends omitted to permit more purchases; holds time propitious.

In the body of the article it says:

The Gulf Oil Corporation of Pennsylvania is using its cash to buy up oil properties at attractive prices. This explanation of the omission of the quarterly dividends of  $37\frac{1}{2}$  cents on December 11 has been given by an official of the company. He said that while the omission was a difficult step to take, it will prove to have been the most desirable policy for the stockholders from a long-range viewpoint.

Further-down in the article it states:

It now is shown that Gulf is not merely completing the expansion started for the past year, it is taking advantage of temporary demoralization of the oil industry to acquire distressed properties which will be shown to be of considerable value after the era of overproduction shall have been eradicated.

That shows exactly what is going on in the oil industry today; and if this House has any interest in saving the independent oil producer, if it has any interest in collecting taxes from a source which can pay them and from a source which is using its immense revenues and power to crush its competitors and build up an intolerable monopoly, then it will at least try to collect a part of the revenue needed to run this Government from these big oil-importing companies. Now, it may be said that these companies will not pay the tax, that it will be passed on to the consumers. A little later on I expect to say something in this connection as far as the consumers of gasoline are concerned and to show that this tax can not and will not be passed on to them. Apparently, however, large manufacturing industries along the Atlantic coast think that they may have to pay a part of this tax. I do not know whether they will or not.

If the importers do not pay it, perhaps they will; but I submit to this House that if there is any group of industries in this Nation to-day which ought to be willing to pay a tax of this kind, it is the great protected industries along the Atlantic coast, who have been coming to Congress for all these many years seeking and getting protection for their products at the expense of the remainder of the country. It ill becomes them at this time to complain of a tax which will not only raise revenue but will protect and equalize the burdens of a great domestic industry. Just how much revenue will such a tax produce? It has been said here that very little, if any, revenue would result. Of course no one knows what any tax which we may levy here will produce, but we do know that the Tariff Commission in its investigation of the difference in the cost of production of petroleum in this country and in Venezuela has found the differential to be $1.03 per barrel. This tax of 1 cent per gallon means a tax of 42 cents a barrel. Therefore there is no reason to believe that it would result in any particular decrease in importations. If importations should continue at the rate of last year when 3,615,000,000 gallons were imported, then the revenue raised would be $36,154,000. It must be remembered that importations this last year were restricted by agreement on the part of the importing companies so that this amount was probably smaller than the quantity which would be imported under normal conditions. If we take the importations for the year 1930 as a criterion, then the revenue raised at 1 cent per gallon would be $44,149,000. Even if it should be assumed, as contended by some of those opposing this tax, that the revenue which may be received will be much less than this, there will, indirectly, be a great increase in revenue from this source because this tax will so equalize competition with the heavily taxed domestic industry that it will be able to pay increased taxes into the Federal Treasury.

Now, I realize that the question which is troubling some of the Members of this House is whether or not this tax will cause an increase in the price of gasoline and lubricating oil. To answer this question it is necessary to consider conditions in the oil industry and the relationship between the price of crude oil and refined products. To-day, because of importations, the price of crude oil in this country is low. Compared with the price of crude, gasoline prices are relatively high but are lower than they have been in the past. The main reason that they are lower is because there is competition in the industry. That competition is furnished by the independent producers. If they can continue in business, we will have competitive prices. If the large importing companies force them out of business, we will have monopoly prices.

It might be well in this connection to consider how the prices of gasoline in countries where there are no independent producers compare with those in the United States. In the month of December retail gasoline prices in this country, less the tax, ranged from 9 to 14 cents per gallon. The Tariff Commission has found that oil is being produced in Venezuela for $1.03 per barrel less than in the United States, yet at Caracas, Venezuela, gasoline is selling for 251/2 cents per gallon. We import oil from Colombia, yet, deducting taxes, it has been selling in Bogota for 34 cents per gallon and in Cartagena for 26 cents. Mexico is an oilproducing country, and yet gasoline, according to the latest figures available in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, is selling for 24.7 cents in Mexico City and 30.3 cents per gallon at Tampico. The fact is we have the lowest gasoline prices of any country on the globe because of the intense competition in the industry.

Take another illustration of the effect of monopoly. We all know that while there has been some reduction in gasoline prices, we are paying the same or higher prices to-day for lubricating oil than we did when crude oil was $3.50 per barrel. The average crude-oil price to-day is 77 cents per barrel, and during the year it has been as low as 14 cents. Why are we still paying from 25 to 35 cents per quart for lubricating oil when crude prices have declined so drastically? Simply because this phase of the refining business is in the hands of a relatively few refiners and is controlled by the larger companies. Because of the lack of strong independent competition these companies have held the price of lubricating oil to war-time levels.

A study of past price relationships between crude oil and gasoline indicates that there is very little connection between the prices of the two commodities. An interesting study has been made of the relationship of the price of gasoline as compared with the price of crude oil. It shows that in 52 typical cities of the United States the average price of gasoline at the filling stations in February, 1926, was 18.09 cents per gallon, exclusive of tax. At the same time the average price of crude oil of 36 gravity was $2.04 per barrel. In February, 1929, the price of the same crude oil had dropped to $1.20, and the average price of gasoline in the same cities had actually increased to 18.39 cents per gallon. In other words, a reduction in price of oil of 84 cents per barrel was followed by a slight rise in the price of gasoline.

Are the cities along the Atlantic seaboard where imported gasoline is being sold receiving any price benefit from the fact that it is manufactured from oil which is produced for $1.03 per barrel less than the cost of production in this country? Certainly not. On December 2, 1931, the latest date for which I have been able to get reliable figures, gasoline was selling, exclusive of tax, at service stations in typical Atlantic seaboard cities as follows:

	Cents
Baltimore	12.4
Washington	12.9
Charleston, S. C	12.5
Newark, N. J	12.7
New York City	14.3
Boston, Mass	11.5
Hartford, Conn	12.0

Compare these prices with cities which are not only a great distance from the Atlantic seaboard but from the domestic oil-producing territory as well:

12.3
11.4
11.9
12.0
11.9
12.1

All of the above prices are taken from the December 9 issue of the National Petroleum News and are for the standard grades of gasoline.

The one thing which has brought about cheap gasoline in this country has been competition. The imposition of a tax on imported oil means that this competition will continue, because it places the independent producers who are furnishing that competition upon a basis where they can remain in business. If that competition is removed and these four great importing companies continue their policy of driving the independent out of business and building up a giant monopoly, then we will have something to fear from high gasoline prices.

This is one tax to which there ought to be no legitimate objection. It will bring in revenue. It will take this revenue from those who are able to pay. It will equalize production costs to the advantage of a great American industry and will put a stop to the racketeering tactics of the great oil companies who are ruthlessly forcing their independent competitors out of business.

Mr. PEAVEY. Mr. Speaker, under the Federal patronage system in vogue in Wisconsin, progressive Congressmen like myself, because of our votes in Washington against bills like the present bill, are not recognized or allowed any voice in the appointment of Government workers. My answer to the threat of the House leaders to cut our salaries is that I will not vote a sales tax upon all the people I represent, nor will I vote to cut the salaries of Government employees because of that vote-not until the income-tax rates on those receiving ten thousand net and up are raised 100 per cent; nor will I vote for a sales tax or cutting the salaries of the Government employees until the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is stopped from making tax refunds of hundreds of millions of dollars each year in the secrecy of his office and without the knowledge or approval of the people or Congress. Refunds in the past 10 years have grown to the enormous sum of $1,267,868,645.67. These refunds in 1931 amounted to $69,476,930.26.

It seems to me that publicity of income-tax returns is just as much the constitutional right of every taxpayer as to open the public record as to payment of property taxes. It is just as fundamental.

Oh, yes, I know there are those who claim that individuals and corporate concerns will learn their competitors' trade secrets, sources of income, and so forth. Gentlemen, those arguments against the law are weak and fallacious. I offer as positive proof that they are fallacious the experience of the people of Wisconsin. Our State income tax law with full publicity clause was bitterly opposed when adopted. We have had it in the law for 20 years. There is no one against it now.

There are only two kinds of taxpayers who are opposed to such a provision. One is the dishonest citizen who will do anything to evade paying his taxes. The other has the same purpose but not as much courage. He hires experts, accountants, and Washington lawyers skilled in the art of tax-law evasion.

Everyone knows that were a publicity clause written into the law, every employee in the United States Treasury Department from the janitor to the commissioner would be inclined to be more careful in every action having to do with the collection of the Government's revenue. Is there anyone here but who believes refunds would be less and harder to get if the newspapers and the public were to have access to the public records and facts?

There is an impression abroad in this land, gentlemen, that individuals and corporations scattered all over the several States who have received refunds ranging from a few thousand dollars up to many millions have reciprocated by making generous campaign donations. I do not know to what extent this apprehension on the part of the public is justified. I do know that in my own State there is a similarity between the lists of names of those receiving tax refunds and those who are heavy party contributors that is startling.

That alone, in my opinion, is sufficient to cause the general public to believe there has been gross carelessness in the making of these refunds, collusion, or both.

Mr. Speaker, I can think of no better way to clarify the public mind on this important matter than by the adoption of a publicity clause giving full publicity to these refunds and the reasons for which they were made.

Without this fundamental change in the bill in protection of the people I represent, I will not vote for it.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, the bill before us, ostensibly intended to raise revenue and to balance the Budget, is not only a tax bill but also a tariff bill. It would be objectionable as either, but containing both tax and tariff provisions it is doubly objectionable, and should, unless modified in several vital particulars, be defeated.

As a tax measure the principal vice and its most objectionable feature is the sales tax, the purpose of which is to raise from the most sorely pressed and poorest sections of our population close to $600,000,000. If there were not other objections to the bill—and there are many others—this would be sufficient reason to defeat it.

For the first time in our history, and during a serious national depression, we are asked to resort to sales taxes, a tax on the necessities of life. The committee has tried to minimize its consequences and disguise its effects, but if this method of taxation is resorted to the plutocracy of our Nation will have won the greatest victory in its history.

The battle has been going on for a long while. Vested interests, irked by the tax methods by which they have been compelled to bear their just burden of the conduct of our Government, have been planning for a long while to put over just such a tax as the one which is now proposed.

William Randolph Hearst, himself a multimillionaire and a professional friend of the people, has been agitating for it for many years, sending delegations at his expense to Canada to observe the wonderful workings of this cleverly devised scheme to take the burdens off the powerful and place it on the shoulders of the oppressed.

Both old parties professed to be opposed to it. The Democratic national platform in 1924 vehemently denounced it, and declared that it would resist it.

Finally, this House, controlled by the Democratic Party but bearing the indorsement of the bipartisan group in the Ways and Means Committee, yielded and brought in the plan which for years never got beyond the popular clamor of the Hearst newspapers.

Every sound principle of taxation is repudiated by the terms of this bill. Instead of the time-honored doctrine that each should pay according to his ability, we have now the doctrine that we shall all pay pretty nearly the same, since the difference between what the rich and the poor eat can not be as great as the difference between what the rich and the poor earn.

Everything the worker and farmer earns goes to provide the necessities of life, which the sales tax deals with; only a very small part of what the rich man receives goes for those necessities.

It has been shown in the discussion that has already taken place that this plan to levy tribute on the necessities of the people is considered by the wealthy as an entering wedge for a new method of taxation, and as a means of | privileges they have received from the Government as addestroying the income tax law, which was adopted after many years of persistent effort on the part of progressives as the soundest and best method of taxation which under existing conditions could be devised.

Some of the spokesmen for the vested interests now speak hopefully of the time when the wealthy, now owning most of the wealth of the Nation, will no longer have to pay income taxes; when they will be able to remain in undisputed possession of the wealth which millions of farmers and workers labor day in and day out over a lifetime to create

Fortunately for the Nation the bipartisan leadership which has brought forth this monstrosity is confronted by members of both parties in this House who will refuse to follow them into a policy that makes life more intolerable for the large masses of our people.

And, fortunately for the Nation, the progressives, who have consistently and persistently resisted the encroachment of those who have come to regard government as instituted for their benefit and for their enrichment, have been on the alert, leading the fight against this proposal.

Progressives are no less interested than others in balancing the Budget. They appreciate the need of maintaining the credit of our Government unimpaired. But they consider it of even greater importance that those who make up the Nation, whose labor creates the Nation's wealth, and who are now in the midst of a depression which is driving millions of them to desperation, shall not alone assume the burden of balancing the Budget while there remain large and untapped sources that can supply the amount required to balance the Budget.

During the World War, in the face of an emergency that demanded all the funds that we could raise, the sales tax was not resorted to. Why should we accept it now, in peace time?

The committee in its report insists that it is taxing wealth by drastic increases.

It is stated that incomes of $1,000,000 and more annually will pay a tax of 46 per cent. But the man with an income of $1,000,000 a year-which means that he has a fortune many times that amount-will have, after he gets through paying the 46 per cent, close to $600,000 a year on which to eke out an existence.

The poor man, living on a budget which the Government agencies state is insufficient to provide for more than the barest necessities, and is seldom adequate to provide for such emergencies as illness in the family, will find himself less able to pay the share which you impose on him than the wealthy man whose income runs into the hundreds of thousands or millions of dollars annually.

Let us be fair and just about this. Let us not take from those who have not to give to those who have. When we think of intolerable burdens, let our thoughts be first of those on the farms who after many years of hard and diligent toil find the very roof over their heads going under foreclosure proceedings.

Let our thought be first of the worker, about 8,000,000 of whom are now tramping the streets searching for an opportunity to work so that they and their families may not succumb to starvation. Let us think of the small merchant who performs a vital service to the community, who labors long hours over many years, and who has received no special privileges from our Government, but who, instead, faces extinction by the development of the chain store, the product of organized and concentrated wealth.

If tax legislation is to be fair and just, it will take into consideration the inequality which years of favoritism has created, and which has resulted, in spite of the warnings of the progressives, in the creation of a small but powerful class of intrenched wealth on one hand, and a large mass of propertyless workers and farmers on the other. It will use the taxing power not merely to raise revenue, important as that may be, not merely to balance the Budget, vital as that may be, but to reduce the extremes of wealth and poverty, at least to the extent of making the rich pay for the many ministered by the conservatives of both major parties.

The committee has sought to minimize the consequences of the sales tax. It has sought to create the feeling that part of it, or all of it, will be absorbed by the manufacturers. When Secretary of the Treasury Mills testified before the committee, he admitted that the tax would be passed on to the consumer and that it would inevitably add to the cost of living.

There is no justification for disguising or concealing the facts. The resentment of the people is increasing in extent and intensity day by day. You can not impose these additional burdens without adding fuel to the flames.

If you persist in these policies you will eventually face a condition in which property will be endangered, and those who have benefited most will be the first victims of the catastrophe. This might prove to be the straw that will break the camel's back.

If you have any doubt that the sales tax that is now proposed by the leadership of the two parties is not merely an emergency measure, but that it is regarded by big business as the first step in the direction of a new tax policy, the purpose of which will be to wipe out income and inheritance taxes, let me quote from a letter sent by the Philadelphia Board of Trade, and read on this floor by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns], in which an officer of that board says what is in his mind, and what, I am sure, is in the minds of big-business men throughout the Nation. He

On the question of a final sales tax, so specified as to avoid duplication or pyramiding of taxes, it is conceded, as we understand it, that in the event Congress does—and we sincerely hope it will—enact the sales-tax legislation that automatically Congress will repeal the Federal income and the Federal corporation taxes.

Are you willing to encourage that thought? Will you want those who now control the Nation, its resources, and influence the policies of our Government, to get away with the notion that any tax which enables them to get from under and which is shifted to the shoulders of the masses will receive the sanction of Congress?

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that the day will ever come in the United States when that shifting will be achieved, but let us let down the barriers just this time and we will have paved the way for a revolution in our revenue-raising policies that will have far-reaching consequences.

The committee claims that it has examined every source of revenue, but can find no others.

Besides raising the income taxes on incomes in the higher brackets, besides reducing the tremendous exemptions on the estate taxes so that those estates will pay in this country what similar estates are compelled to pay in England. there is a source of revenue which the committee might have considered more fully. That is a tax on legalized beer.

You propose in the pending bill to tax malt wort, which is an essential ingredient in the manufacture of illegal beer. You thereby give legal recognition to the existence of a huge bootleg ring engaged in the manufacture of illegal beer.

It is estimated that at the rate of $5 per barrel, a revenue of $500,000,000 would be produced if you would permit the manufacture of legal beer. It would give you as much as the sales tax, but instead of taxing the necessities of every family you would be taxing those who wish to have beer as a beverage. It has been taxed before.

It would not only give us the revenue we require to balance the Budget, but it would give us relief from the intolerable abuses which have grown up since and as a result of prohibition. It would permit people to return to the use of the more moderate beverages, from which they were driven as a result of the eighteenth amendment. It would serve to restore respect for law and order. It would drive the corrupting influence of the newly developed bootleg industry from our midst.

Has the committee given this a fair and impartial study before it reached the conclusion that there are no other sources of revenue? Or have the members, unwilling to face the facts of the failure of prohibition, foreclosed their minds on account of their prejudices on the subject?

The vicious tax principles which the bill contains are equaled only by the attempt that is made to have the bill also serve as a tariff measure. It is proposed to tax oil imports. Not having had our fill of tariff protection under the Smoot-Grundy Tariff Act, it is now proposed that under the guise of a revenue measure we should begin anew "protecting " industries.

There may be some practical advantage in this proposal to those who think that they can get enough votes from those who want a tariff on oil by offering in exchange their votes for the sales tax. It is a revival of log rolling which has disgraced tariff history in the past, and is now transferred to tax legislation.

This process of trying to put something over in such a way that it will not be recognized for what it is is being carried too far. If you want more protection than you already have-if you are not content with the disastrous consequences that have followed from the tariff legislation you have already enacted-if there are still some infant industries that need some special privileges from governmentbring in a bill that is a tariff bill and have it considered on its merits.

If you are Democrats who profess to be opposed to special privileges, except when the industries you happen to represent need such privileges, you can now have a measure brought in-you are in control of the House-and we will vote on it, with the record of each Member where it can be seen and studied. But it is not fair, because it is deceptive, to smuggle in provisions that belong in a tariff bill and then maneuver for advantage and for the exchange

And to be consistent, why do not the Democratic Members who have complained so bitterly in the past about the Grundy tariff law now bring in a bill revising those schedules, so that monopolies may no longer exploit its benefits?

1 voted against that law in 1930. And I am opposed to the tariff feature in this bill.

There is another extremely objectionable feature about the pending bill: You propose a tax on malt sirup, which is manufactured from malted barley.

The production of barley has increased under prohibition, but it is now used largely as a feed grain at a great reduction in price. The farmers have lost their market for the finest grades of barley which were formerly used and purchased by brewers at premium prices. Before prohibition the consumption of barley for brewing purposes was 80,000,000 bushels a year. The total production was in the neighborhood of 200,000,000 bushels a year. The brewers used from 30 to 35 per cent of the barley crop.

May I call to the attention of the House how the committee now proposes to further injure the farmer by providing a tax on malt sirup? It is a food product, an essential ingredient in the manufacture of bread, and is sold in large proportions to bakers, breakfast-food manufacturers, textiles and pharmaceutical industries. Barley is at the present time one of the best cash crops which farmers in my State

The tax which is proposed would increase the present price of malt sirup from about 6 cents per pound to 9 cents per pound. It will lead people to resort to sugar.

When you stop to consider that you are administering this blow to those who have had their best market lost as a result of prohibition, and that you are driving further to the wall the farmers who are already up against it, you will appreciate the extent and the nature of the injury you are doing them.

To further burden this industry, as you propose to do by imposing this tax, is to practically destroy what has managed to survive of a once powerful industry. It is neither fair nor just, nor necessary. I know that the prohibitionists in this House will not admit the justice of eliminating this tax, even though they know it is a perfectly lawful industry.

A letter which I have received from the Cereal Products Co., located at Manitowoc, Wis., in my district, discloses how serious the situation is. I take the liberty of incorporating it as part of my remarks:

Manitowoc, Wis., March 12, 1932.

Hon. G. J. SCHNEIDER,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have viewed with a great deal of alarm the proposed tax of malt sirup. This industry uses millions of bushels of barley, a large proportion of which comes from farmers in this locality. Due to its use, barley at the present time is the best cash crop which the farmers in the State of Wisconsin have.

While we are thoroughly in accord with a fair tax program and believe that the content are the farmers.

and believe that every assistance should be rendered to the Government at this time, we also believe that the tax on malt sirup is extreme and practically confiscatory. We wish to cite a case in fact:

A very large percentage of malt sirup is used in the baking trade in direct competition with sugar. Should the proposed 3 cents per pound tax be placed on malt sirup, which is now selling from 4 to 5½ cents per pound, it would practically double the price and definitely and absolutely prevent the use of malt sirup by the believe industry.

by the baking industry.

We are already operating under severe handicaps due to foreign competition, etc., which has taken away a great deal of our volume, and it is doubtful whether we can continue to operate should the very large percentage of business of the malt manufacturers be taken away from us. This would be the case if the present tax on malt sirup goes into effect as now in the bill.

We ask you to give this your very thoughtful and serious consideration, as this problem is one of the most serious confronting us since the advent of prohibition.

Yours very truly,

CEREAL PRODUCTS Co., G. R. RAHR, Secretary-Treasurer.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the salestax feature of this bill. In the first place, this system of taxation does not place the expense of government upon those able to bear it. With this sales tax it is proposed to raise $600,000,000, or $25 for each family of the United States in one year. The rich and well-to-do, having more property rights, get more protection from the Government than the poor because they have more property rights to protect. This strikes the balance; to my mind the salestax idea and theory are out of balance with the rule I have just suggested. The average man simply can not pay more than he is already paying.

There is abundant evidence that one of the big moving influences has the object in view of scaling down, and, if possible, finally eliminating, the income tax on big incomes; this is in the face of the modern theory of taxation in the United States. One great newspaper makes the statement in big headlines that "The income-tax system has become the greatest racket in the United States," and urges the sales tax in its stead. Will this country ever consent to the abandonment of the income tax! No signs point that way.

Once you saddle the sales tax on the backs of the American people we can never get rid of it; the history of other nations which have a sales tax proves this beyond a doubt. For instance, in the Philippines, about 10 years ago, to balance the budget, temporarily—as it was claimed, and as it is claimed for this bill that it is only temporary—they levied a sales tax which raises $20,000,000 a year of their $80,000,-000 budget. Once they got the sales tax they couldn't get rid of it and still have it.

A sales tax encourages extravagance in Government because it makes the people easy picking for the bureaucrats. Somewhere, some place, somebody has got to call a halt on governmental expenditure, which have increased on an average by almost a billion dollars a year since 1924, with lots of economy talk going on at the same time. If special taxes are levied, they will in the nature of things have to be only temporary, but a general sales tax never would let go of us. The sales tax is just another pocket of the taxpayer for the tax eater to pick.

I am against the sales tax because the way to lower taxes is to quit spending money. I favor a horizontal cut of 20 per cent in all appropriations. We can raise the income taxes, gift taxes, and inheritance taxes and levy a tax on long and short selling amongst the stock-market gamblers. The money can be raised and from proper sources, which is more important.

Let me call the attention of my Democratic colleagues to the fact that every Democratic platform for generations has been against the sales tax. How can we go to the people, in the face of all those platforms, and with a tax on an average of $25 on the people of the United States, without serious slashes in the appropriations, and claim that we have been giving them good government? The question answers itself.

Mr. KARCH. Mr. Speaker, our Nation is faced by two problems, each of which is grave and fundamental. We have reached what seems to me to be a major crisis in our national affairs, and this crisis must be met by sound judgment and a deep sense of justice.

One horn of our dilemma is to balance our Budget while the other is to avoid further depression of a populace, at least 25 per cent of which is now totally without any income, and another 50 per cent of which has had its income seriously reduced.

That brings us to the question of the sales tax. Every Member of the Congress, on both sides of the Capitol, is giving his most earnest study to the tax question. There is a definite and honest division of opinion in the Congress as to the wisdom of the sales-tax measure which has been proposed.

After conscientious study of the whole question, I am compelled to decide that the sales-tax plan that has been offered the House is unwise. There is no use trying to disguise the fact that the sales tax is to fall upon the ultimate consumer. The people of this country are the ultimate consumers.

More than 80 per cent of our population is in the wage-earning class, and that class is bearing at the present more than 80 per cent of the burden of providing charity funds for the support of our unemployed and their dependents. That support is inadequate even though it is costing a tremendous sum of money, and greater drains upon the slender resources of this 80 per cent are to be expected if the depression continues.

Therefore, to enact a sales tax means, in my opinion, that the great burden of balancing the Budget would be placed upon that strata of our population, which is now most seriously stricken by the depression.

It is fundamentally true that more than 80 per cent of the purchasing power of this country resides in the wage earners. They compose 80 per cent of our consuming market in America. The depression and its consequent unemployment have destroyed approximately 50 per cent of that purchasing power. To enact a sales tax which would divert further moneys from trade into the Treasury of the United States would, in my opinion, act to further depress consumption, which, in turn, would tend to destroy much of the volume of sales which obtains now.

We have just witnessed the remarkable phenomenon of our national financial group coming to the Congress and demanding a reconstruction finance fund of $2,000,000,000 to save the banks, the railroads, and insurance companies, and a further two and a half billions of dollars for the relief of finance and industry in a broadening of the Federal reserve base under the Glass-Steagall Act.

After the bankers have secured from the Congress and the Government this relief of four and one-half billions, we are now told by the Secretary of the Treasury that those same bankers have warned the Treasury that unless the Government balances its Budget at the expense of the oppressed and depressed wage earners the bankers may refuse to lend the Government any more money.

It may be pertinent to suggest that if this is to be the attitude of the bankers toward the Government, after having themselves received four and one-half billion dollars of relief, the Government would need no loans at the hands of the bankers if it used the four and a half billions of dollars it is to lend them to balance the Budget instead of trying to extract it from the pockets of the wage earners through a sales tax.

I can not evade the conviction that the proposed sales tax is simply another move in the wrong direction—that of taking from those who have little, while we have been giving to those who have much. It must be obvious to any thinking person that this Nation can not stand if we are to continue on this course of exempting wealth from the greater burden of both charity for unemployment relief and taxation to balance the Budget, on the theory that because wealth is too powerful to submit to it we must turn to the unorganized and oppressed masses and tax them, because they can not defend themselves. Any such theory is un-American, unjust, unsound, uneconomical, and unwise to the utmost degree.

The argument most strenuously urged by the proponents of the sales tax is that it is "the most nearly painless tax." On the basis of that theory the man who is robbed and does not know it does not suffer from his loss. Such an assumption is assinine. The sales tax, stripped of its fallacious arguments, shows itself to be simply a bludgeoning of the consumers, more than 80 per cent of whom are wage earners, in order that they may not realize it at the moment that their pocketbooks are being tapped.

Congress is bluntly and somewhat insolently informed by some prominent economic writers that Congress may try to tax the wealthy, but "let the Government try and get it," because the wealthy will "promptly evade the tax by burying their wealth in tax-exempt securities."

Well, Mr. Speaker, if that is to be the selfish attitude of wealth, I, for one, will favor the proposed constitutional amendment pending in this Congress authorizing Congress to require the incomes on all securities issued by the States and their subdivisions, to be subject to Federal taxation.

This is no time, sir, for arrogant wealth to adopt the attitude of the kidnaper and the underworld racketeer and to sneer—"you can not tax us and make us pay it; we will evade it by burying our wealth in tax-exempt securities; so let the poor bear the burden!"

We can not, we dare not, further burden the wage earners of this country, who to-day are groaning in agony under the burden of fear, unemployment, diminishing savings, and failing resources. It is neither the humane, the American, nor the right way to do it.

We must put our people to work on shorter hours and thus restore the purchasing power of this country. With that purchasing power restored by the sound method of shorter hours and with a resulting increased demand for products, factory wheels will begin to turn, dividends will be resumed, depreciated stock and bond values will rise, and wealth will reap much more, many fold, than all it has to pay out in taxes to balance the Budget.

But I warn this House that if we continue to lay the burdens of taking care of the starving, helping the poor, sacrificing the homes, and bearing the burden of balancing the Budget on the backs of the masses, we will force revolution with all that ugly term implies upon the poor people of this country, and revolution we will get.

Beware! The Israelite of old, who tore
The lion in his path—when, poor and blind,
He saw the blessed light of Heaven no more,
Shorn of his noble strength and forced to grind
In prison, and at last led forth to be
A pander to Philistine revelry—

Upon the pillars of the temple laid
His desperate hands, and in its overthrow Destroyed himself, and with him those who made
A cruel mockery of his sightless woe;
The poor blind slave, the scoff and jest of all,
Expired, and thousands perished in the fall!

There is a poor, blind Samson in this land,
Shorn of his strength and bound in bonds of steel,
Who may, in some grim revel, raise his hand,
And shake the pillars of this Common-weal
Till the vast temple of our liberties
A shapeless mass of wreck and rubbish lies.

I am against this sales tax because it taxes the people least able to pay it, and enables the richest of our citizens to escape their just share in the burdens of our National Government,

SENATE

Monday, March 14, 1932

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Dear Lord and Father of mankind, by whose watchful providence we are brought to this another day of serving Thee, be with us as we meet the chance and change of our appointed lot, that we may order our steps wisely, finding in Thy presence springs of comfort that shall refresh us with the joy of human sympathy, through the exercise of which as sons of God we shall learn to esteem Thy desire as our delight, for unto Thee all souls of men are dear.

Grant to us self-control that, avoiding the hasty word, the irritated spirit, we may walk before Thee in steadiness and quietness of heart, no matter how sudden the surprise, how great the strain. Implant in us the spirit of our Savior's courage, His tenderness and His simplicity, until our own poor shadow self shall be transformed into the likeness of His truth and strength. We ask it in His name and for His sake. Amen.

SINO-JAPANESE SITUATION AND THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I send to the desk a letter signed by 85 members of the faculty of the University of Texas, requesting cooperation by the United States with the League of Nations in the Sino-Japanese situation. I ask that it be read and that the signatures be printed in the RECORD with the letter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

LETTER FROM 83 MEMBERS OF THE FACULTY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF

To the Hon. Morris Sheppard,

The United States Senate, Washington, D. C ..

The events in Manchuria, and still more in Shanghai, have shown that protests by other governments, and the public opinion of the world, will not alone restrain the use of armed force to attain national ends.

China has asked for an extraordinary session of the assembly of the League of Nations to consider the acts of Japanese troops upon her soil. If it shall be found that Japan has resorted to war without submitting the dispute to arbitration, judicial settlement, or to the council—none of which has been done—it will be the covenanted duty of all the members of the league to prohibit trade and financial relations of their countries with the covenant-breaking state, and to prevent all intercourse with that state by the people of any other state, whether a member of the league or not.

Obviously this can not in fact be done in the case of Japan without the concurrence of the United States; nor will any steps be taken toward it without the assurance that, if taken, this country will concur. The United States is not a member of the league, but it is a party to the Kellogg-Briand pact of Paris, and there can be no doubt that Japan, contrary to the pact, has sought to settle a dispute by other than pacific means. What will our Government do? Will it refuse to sever commercial relations, and thereby prevent almost all the rest of the world from bringing to bear economic pressure, which will certainly stop the present bloodshed; or will it act in harmony with other nations to stop it? We, the undersigned, appeal to the President and Congress to

We, the undersigned, appeal to the President and Congress to signify to the league that we will concur in economic measures it may take to restore peace.

PROPOSED TAX ON GROSS EARNINGS OF UTILITIES

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I present a letter from the secretary of the City Commission of Jacksonville, Fla., inclosing copy of a resolution adopted by the city commission, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the letter, with the accompanying resolution, was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> CITY COMMISSION OF THE CITY OF JACKSONVILLE, Jacksonville, Fla., March 11, 1932.

Hon. D. U. FLETCHER.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I hasten to forward you certified copy of resolution adopted by the City Commission of Jacksonville at a special meeting held this morning with reference to legislation which we understand is now pending in Congress and which would place a 7 per cent tax on utilities, both public and private.

As you are aware, the city of Jacksonville owns and operates a number of utilities, principal among which are the electric plant, water plant, and municipal docks and terminals.

I know you will recognize the importance of the proposed act and give it your immediate and careful consideration.

Respectfully,

M. W. BISHOP, Secretary City Commission.

FROM THE MINUTES OF THE CITY COMMISSION, JACKSONVILLE, FLA., MARCH 11, 1932

Commissioner Anders moved the adoption of the following resolution:

"Whereas it has been brought to the attention of this commission that there is now pending in the Congress a bill which would levy a 7 per cent tax on the gross earnings of utilities; and "Whereas if such legislation be enacted, the resultant tax will

"Whereas if such legislation be enacted, the resultant tax will have to be passed on to the consumer or user of the product or service of such utility and would work a hardship to industries and to the citizens as a whole and would have a tendency to augment the present unemployment; and
"Whereas many persons are now in destitute circumstances and not in a position to stand any increase in the cost of such necessities of life as water and electricity; and
"Whereas the utilities operated by the city of Jacksonville turn over their net earnings to its general fund, for the operation of the city, and for such a tax to be imposed on utilities would cost the taxpayers and citizens of this city approximately $280,000 per year and mean an increase in the city's millage of approximately 3 mills: Now, therefore, be it mills: Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That the City Commission of Jacksonville go on record as opposed to such legislation, and that a copy of this resolution be transmitted to Hon. Duncan U. Fletcher and Hon. Park Trammell, United States Senators, and to Hon. Ruth Bryan Owen, Hon. R. A. Green, Hon. Tom Yon, and Hon. Herbert J. Drane, Members of Congress from the State of Florida, and that they be requested to use their influence and utmost endeavors to defeat the bill hereinabove mentioned."

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

The resolution was unanimously adopted. A true copy.

M. W. BISHOP, Secretary City Commission.

ENLARGEMENT OF VETERANS' BUREAU HOSPITAL, LAKE CITY, FLA.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I also present resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Lake City, Fla., together with a resolution adopted by the State Democratic Executive Committee of Florida, with reference to hospitalization of disabled former service men, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas it has become a matter of common knowledge that the demands for hospitalization on the part of disabled former service men at/in the United States Veterans' Bureau Hospital No. 63, located in Lake City, Fla., far exceeds the capacity of the splendid institution; and

Whereas the American Legion, Department of Florida, at its last State convention did go on record unanimously in requesting the Veterans' Bureau to enlarge Hospital No. 63 by at least 200 beds; and

Whereas it has been publicly announced on various occasions that it was the intention of the Veterans' Bureau to enlarge and otherwise improve the physical plant of aforesaid hospital: It is

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of Lake City, Fla., does hereby join with the Columbia County Post, American Legion, the commission of the city of Lake City, and other civic organizations of this community and of the State in urging the immediate enlargement of United States Veterans' Bureau Hospital No. 63, in Lake City Fla. and it is further. in Lake City, Fla., and it is further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be furnished the heads of the United States Veterans' Bureau, the Florida delegation in Congress, as well as others interested in providing needed benefits for former ex-service men.

G. L. MORRISON. FRED H. YOUNG, T. P. JORDAN, C. C. CODRINGTON, DR. R. B. HARKNESS, E. A. McCLOSKEY, WALTER HACKNEY Directors.

Be it resolved, by the State Democratic Executive Committee of the State of Florida, That we indorse the above resolution and request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their best efforts to secure the improvements to the veterans' hospital at Lake City as sought by above resolution.

CERTIFICATE

We, the chairman and secretary, respectively, of the State Democratic executive committee, do hereby certifiy that the above is a true and correct copy of a resolution properly introduced and passed at the recent meeting of said committee held at Jacksonville, Fla., on February 19, 1932.

Attest:

GEORGE WHITFIELD MCRORY. Secretary.

EMERGENCY ROAD CONSTRUCTION

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have received a letter from Mr. W. R. Mathews, editor of the Arizona Daily Star, Tucson, Ariz., respecting the so-called Costigan-La Follette bill, and I ask unanimous consent to have the same read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE ARIZONA DAILY STAR, Tucson, Ariz., February 23, 1932.

Senator Henry F. Ashurst,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.
Dear Henry: I am writing to tell you how disappointed I am with your vote on the Costigan bill that would have appropriated $375,000,000 for distribution to the States and $375,000,000 for additional road work. You and Carl Hayden are certainly maintaining a 100 per cent record of voting for every panacea that comes along taining a 100 per cent record of voting for every panacea comes along.

Of course I could give you a long list of reasons why you should not have voted for the bill, but I will make my remarks brief by saying that unless you Senators and Representatives back in Washington take some very determined action at an early date to balance the Budget, unemployment is going to increase and the financial structure of this country is going to suffer a knockout blow. When you vote to add hundreds of millions of dollars to the Federal Budget without taking any proper means to balance the Budget by increased taxes, you are inviting disaster.

I should think from your experience in Washington you would have come to see the folly of all the panaceas that have been offered during the past 10 years, and that you would have come to realize that there is an end even to the extent the Federal Government can borrow.

I can not resist telling you how much I am disappointed in your

Yours very truly,

W. R. MATHEWS.

PROPOSED RESUBMISSION OF THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Mr. HALE presented a resolution adopted by the Maine Woman's Christian Temperance Union at a State regional conference, representing 1,765 people, at Bangor, Me., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the United States Senate:

Whereas the eighteenth amendment was adopted by the orderly processes of government and has been sustained by no less than 48 decisions of the United States Supreme Court; and

Whereas its opponents are now asking Congress to resubmit the question of prohibition through a repeal amendment to be ratified by State conventions called for that purpose; and

Whereas we have no reason to believe that those opponents who have not counseled obedience to the eighteenth amendment and its enforcement act and those who have openly advocated disobedi-ence and disregard of the same, which is selective anarchy, would change their attitude and accept the vote of the majority of States should the repeal amendment fail of ratification; and

Whereas we are confident that resubmission would not take pro-hibition out of politics but would intensify it as a State issue: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we are opposed to the resubmission of the eight-eenth amendment, to be ratified by State conventions or by State legislatures, and that we ask our Congressman from this district and our United States Senators to vote against such a resolution, and to vote for adequate appropriations for law enforcement and for education in law observance.

Adopted by Maine Woman's Christian Temperance Union at a State regional conference representing 1,765 people.

Mr. HALE also presented a resolution adopted by the Maine Woman's Christian Temperance Union at State regional conferences, representing 1,130 people, at Biddeford, Me. (identical with the above printed resolution), protesting against the proposed resubmission of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution to the States, and favoring the making of adequate appropriations for law enforcement and education in law observance, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE WORLD COURT

Mr. BROUSSARD presented a resolution adopted by the Thirteenth Annual Convention of the Louisiana Department of the American Legion, favoring the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Resolution adopted at the Thirteenth Annual Convention of the American Legion, Department of Louisiana, held in Monroe, La., July 16, 17, and 18, 1931.

Whereas the American Legion advocates the adherence of the United States to the Permanent Court of International Justice; and

Whereas steps toward this end have already been taken in the Senate's passage of the resolution providing for our adherence to the World Court: and to the World Court; and Whereas all that remains to put this resolution into effect and complete the adherence of the United States to the court is the Senate's ratification of the three World Court protocols which the United States has already signed; and

Whereas it is the judgment of our national committee on foreign relations that Mr. Root's formula, incorporated in the protocols accepting our Senate's reservations and offering a procedure for the Senate's fifth reservation concerning advisory opinion, "fully protects the interests of the United States": Therefore be it

Resolved, at a meeting of the Louisiana Department of the American Legion, That we heartily approve the Senate's ratification of the three World Court protocols and hope that Senator Broussard and Senator Long, of Louisiana, will accurately reflect our hopes and those of thousands of their other constituents in doing everything within their power to secure the ratification of the protocols at the short session of the Senate beginning this December.

DRINKING AMONG HARVARD STUDENTS

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, we hear a great deal about the drinking of college students. I have here a statement from the New York Times of this morning by Dr. Alfred Worcester, professor of hygiene in Harvard University—the greatest American university, in the wettest State of the Union—in which he shows the steady decline of drinking among college students, especially in the last six or seven years. I hope the wet newspapers will all publish the truth about this statement, and I ask that it be inserted in the Record.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From the New York Times of Monday, March 14, 1932]
HARVARD DRINKING IS AT LOWEST MARK NOW, SAYS DOCTOR WORCESTER, HYGIENE PROFESSOR

Cameridge, Mass., March 13.—Drinking among Harvard students has reached its lowest level in the past two or three years, according to Dr. Alfred Worcester, the Henry K. Oliver professor of hygiene, who supervises the health of the students.

Doctor Worcester says:

"For more than 100 years there has been a steady decline in the drinking of hard liquor by Harvard students. In at least the past seven years the decrease has been notable and highly gratifying. In the last two or three years the increasing sobriety of the student body has been even more marked."

Doctor Worcester quotes records to show that graduation day in 1778 was the scene of riotous confusion, when the corporation celebrated by distributing free rum to men, women, and children of Can.bridge.

Soon after his election to the presidency Eliot banned all liquors in the Harvard yard at commencement. It was the first move for temperance since the first temperance lecture at Harvard by an unknown man 100 years ago, described by James Russell Lowell in his Fireside Travels.

Along in the nineties the university was able to force all bars and saloons out of Harvard Square. Since then the Great War and prohibition has minimized the issue at the university.

Chief agents in the war on liquor have been the university police, and the general opinion of these men, most of whom have served the student body for years, is that there has been a steady decrease in the evidence of drinking. Students that did drink, they say, probably drink as much as they ever did, but these are held to comprise a steadily decreasing fraction of the student body.

MUSCLE SHOALS (S. REPT. NO. 423)

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, pursuant to the permission given me several days ago by the Senate, I am submitting a written report from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to accompany the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 15) to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of the Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals in the State of Alabama, to authorize the letting of the Muscle Shoals properties under certain conditions, and for other purposes, reported by me on the 9th instant without amendment from that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and printed.

ANTI-INJUNCTION LEGISLATION (S. DOC. NO. 71)

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 5315) to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes, signed by all the conferees on the part of the Senate and the majority of the conferees on the part of the House. I am not asking for the consideration of it now. I am merely reporting it from the committee.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5315) to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That no court of the United States, as herein defined, shall have jurisdiction to issue any restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction in a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, except in a strict conformity with the provisions of this act; nor shall any such restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction be issued contrary to the public policy declared in this act.

"Sec. 2. In the interpretation of this act and in determining the jurisdiction and authority of the courts of the United States, as such jurisdiction and authority are herein defined and limited, the public policy of the United States is hereby declared as follows:

"Whereas under prevailing economic conditions, developed with the aid of governmental authority for owners of property to organize in the corporate and other forms of ownership association, the individual unorganized worker is commonly helpless to exercise actual liberty of contract and to protect his freedom of labor, and thereby to obtain acceptable terms and conditions of employment, wherefore, though he should be free to decline to associate with his fellows, it is necessary that he have full freedom of association, self-organization, and designation of representatives of his own choosing, to negotiate the terms and conditions of his employment, and that he shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection; therefore, the following definitions of, and limitations upon. the jurisdiction and authority of the courts of the United States are hereby enacted.

"Sec. 3. Any undertaking or promise, such as is described in this section, or any other undertaking or promise in conflict with the public policy declared in section 2 of this act, is hereby declared to be contrary to the public policy of the United States, shall not be enforceable in any court of the United States, and shall not afford any basis for the granting of legal or equitable relief by any such court, including specifically the following:

"Every undertaking or promise hereafter made, whether written or oral, express or implied, constituting or contained in any contract or agreement if hiring or employment between any individual, firm, company, association, or corporation, and any employee or prospective employee of the same, whereby

"(a) Either party to such contract or agreement undertakes or promises not to join, become, or remain a member of any labor organization or of any employer organization; or "(b) Either party to such contract or agreement undertakes or promises that he will withdraw from an employment relation in the event that he joins, becomes, or remains a member of any labor organization or of any employer organization.

"Sec. 4. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue any restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction in any case involving or growing out of any labor dispute to prohibit any person or persons participating or interested in such dispute (as these terms are herein defined) from doing, whether singly or in concert, any of the following acts:

"(a) Ceasing or refusing to perform any work or to remain in any relation of employment;

"(b) Becoming or remaining a member of any labor organization or of any employer organization, regardless of any such undertaking or promise as is described in section 3 of this act;

"(c) Paying or giving to, or withholding from, any person participating or interested in such labor dispute, any strike or unemployment benefits or insurance, or other moneys or things of value;

"(d) By all lawful means aiding any person participating or interested in any labor dispute who is being proceeded against in, or is prosecuting, any action or suit in any court of the United States or of any State;

"(e) Giving publicity to the existence of, or the facts involved in, any labor dispute, whether by advertising, speaking, patrolling, or by any other method not involving fraud or violence:

"(f) Assembling peaceably to act or to organize to act in promotion of their interests in a labor dispute;

"(g) Advising or notifying any person of an intention to do any of the acts heretofore specified;

"(h) Agreeing with other persons to do or not to do any of the acts heretofore specified; and

"(i) Advising, urging, or otherwise causing or inducing without fraud or violence the acts heretofore specified, regardless of any such undertaking or promise as is described in section 3 of this act.

"Sec. 5. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue a restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction upon the ground that any of the persons participating or interested in a labor dispute constitute or are engaged in an unlawful combination or conspiracy because of the doing in concert of the acts enumerated in section 4 of this act.

"Sec. 6. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction upon the hearing of an application for temporary restraining order or for an interlocutory injunction to grant a mandatory injunction, compelling the performance of an act in any case involving or growing out of any labor dispute as herein defined.

"Sec. 7. No officer or member of any association or organization, and no association or organization participating or interested in a labor dispute, shall be held responsible or liable in any court of the United States for the unlawful acts of individual officers, members, or agents, except upon clear proof of actual participation in, or actual authorization of, such acts, or of ratification of such acts after actual knowledge thereof.

"Sec. 8. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue a temporary or permanent injunction in any case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, as herein defined, except after hearing the testimony of witnesses in open court (with opportunity for cross-examination) in support of the allegations of a complaint made under oath, and testimony in opposition thereto, if offered, and except after findings of fact by the court, to the effect—

"(a) That unlawful acts have been threatened and will be committed unless restrained or have been committed and will be continued unless restrained, but no injunction or temporary restraining order shall be issued on account of any threat or unlawful act excepting against the person or persons, association or organization making the threat or committing the unlawful act or actually authorizing or ratifying the same after actual knowledge thereof;

"(b) That substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property will follow;

"(c) That as to each item of relief granted greater injury will be inflicted upon complainant by the denial of relief than will be inflicted upon defendants by the granting of relief;

"(d) That complainant has no adequate remedy at law; and

"(e) That the public officers charged with the duty to protect complainant's property are unable or unwilling to furnish adequate protection.

"Such hearing shall be held after due and personal notice thereof has been given, in such manner as the court shall direct, to all known persons against whom relief is sought, and also to the chief of those public officials of the county and city within which the unlawful acts have been threatened or committed charged with the duty to protect complainant's property: Provided, however, That if a complainant shall also allege that, unless a temporary restraining order shall be issued without notice, a substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property will be unavoidable, such a temporary restraining order may be issued upon testimony under oath, sufficient, if sustained, to justify the court in issuing a temporary injunction upon a hearing after notice. Such a temporary restraining order shall be effective for no longer than five days and shall become void at the expiration of said five days. No temporary restraining order or temporary injunction shall be issued except on condition that complainant shall first file an undertaking with adequate security in an amount to be fixed by the court sufficient to recompense those enjoined for any loss, expense, or damage caused by the improvident or erroneous issuance of such order or injunction, including all reasonable costs (together with a reasonable attorney's fee) and expense of defense against the order or against the granting of any injunctive relief sought in the same proceeding and subsequently denied by the court.

"The undertaking herein mentioned shall be understood to signify an agreement entered into by the complainant and the surety upon which a decree may be rendered in the same suit or proceeding against said complainant and surety, upon a hearing to assess damages of which hearing complainant and surety shall have reasonable notice, the said complainant and surety submitting themselves to the jurisdiction of the court for that purpose. But nothing herein contained shall deprive any party having a claim or cause of action under or upon such undertaking from electing to pursue his ordinary remedy by suit at law or in equity.

"Sec. 9. No restraining order or injunctive relief shall be granted to any complainant who has failed to comply with any obligation imposed by law which is involved in the labor dispute in question, or who has failed to make every reasonable effort to settle such dispute either by negotiation or with the aid of any available governmental machinery of mediation or voluntary arbitration.

"SEC. 10. No restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction shall be granted in a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, except on the basis of findings of fact made and filed by the court in the record of the case prior to the issuance of such restraining order or injunction; and every restraining order or injunction granted in a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute shall include only a prohibition of such specific act or acts as may be expressly complained of in the bill of complaint or petition filed in such case and as shall be expressly included in said findings of fact made and filed by the court as provided herein.

"Sec. 11. Whenever any court of the United States shall issue or deny any temporary injunction in a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, the court shall, upon the request of any party to the proceedings and on his filing the usual bond for costs, forthwith certify as in ordinary cases the record of the case to the circuit court of appeals for its review. Upon the filing of such record in the circuit court of appeals, the appeal shall be heard and the temporary injunctive order affirmed, modified, or set aside with the greatest possible expedition, giving the proceeding precedence over all other matters except older matters of the same character.

"Sec. 12. In all cases arising under this act in which a person shall be charged with contempt in a court of the United States (as herein defined), the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the contempt shall have been committed: Provided, That this right shall not apply to contempts committed in the presence of the court or so near thereto as to interfere directly with the administration of justice or to apply to the misbehavior, misconduct, or disobedience of any officer of the court in respect to the writs, orders, or process of the court.

"Sec. 13. The defendant in any proceeding for contempt of court may file with the court a demand for the retirement of the judge sitting in the proceeding, if the contempt arises from an attack upon the character or conduct of such judge and if the attack occurred elsewhere than in the presence of the court or so near thereto as to interfere directly with the administration of justice. Upon the filing of any such demand the judge shall thereupon proceed no further, but another judge shall be designated in the same manner as is provided by law. The demand shall be filed prior to the hearing in the contempt proceeding.

"SEC. 14. When used in this act, and for the purposes of

"(a) A case shall be held to involve or to grow out of a labor dispute when the case involves persons who are engaged in the same industry, trade, craft, or occupation; or have direct or indirect interests therein; or who are employees of the same employer; or who are members of the same or an affiliated organization of employers or employees; whether such dispute is (1) between one or more employers or associations of employers and one or more employees or associations of employees; (2) between one or more employers or associations of employers and one or more employers or associations of employers; or (3) between one or more employees or associations of employees and one or more employees or associations of employees; or when the case involves any conflicting or competing interests in a 'labor dispute' (as hereinafter defined) of 'persons participating or interested' therein (as hereinafter defined).

"(b) A person or association shall be held to be a person participating or interested in a labor dispute if relief is sought against him or it, and if he or it is engaged in the same industry, trade, craft, or occupation in which such dispute occurs, or has a direct or indirect interest therein, or is a member, officer, or agent of any association composed in whole or in part of employers or employees engaged in such industry, trade, craft, or occupation.

"(c) The term 'labor dispute' includes any controversy concerning terms or conditions of employment, or concerning the association or representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing, or seeking to arrange terms or conditions of employment, regardless of whether or not the disputants stand in the proximate relation of employer and employee.

"(d) The term 'court of the United States' means any court of the United States whose jurisdiction has been or may be conferred or defined or limited by act of Congress, including the courts of the District of Columbia.

"Sec. 15. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held unconstitutional or otherwise invalid, the remaining provisions of the act and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

"Sec. 16. All acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 215. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of Schutte & Koerting Co. (Rept. No. 424); and

S. 1421. An act for the relief of Little Rock College, Little Rock, Ark. (Rept. No. 425).

Mr. NORRIS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 941) relating to the review of cases tried in the district courts of the United States without a jury, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 427) thereon.

THE UNION MORTGAGE CO., OF CLEVELAND, OHIO

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported back favorably the resolution (S. Res. 176) submitted by Mr. Bulkley on the 3d instant, which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of the action or inaction of the Department of Justice in the case involving alleged use of the mails to defraud by the Union Mortgage Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, its officers and agents, and particularly with respect to the dismissal of the indictment against S. C. Crobaugh, president of said company, and the failure to obtain indictments against other officers and agents of said company. The committee shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places in the District of Columbia or elsewhere during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-second Congress until the final report is submitted, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $1,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

ALABAMA SENATORIAL CONTEST-EXPENSES

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported back favorably the resolution (S. Res. 185) submitted by Mr. Hastings on the 9th instant, which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, authorized by resolution of February 28, 1931, to hear and determine the pending contest between John H. Bankhead and J. Thomas Heflin involving the right to membership in the United States Senate as a Senator from the State of Alabama, hereby is authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate $5,000 in addition to the amount heretofore authorized for such purpose.

MEXICAN LAND GRANTS IN CALIFORNIA

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, by resolution the Senate directed the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys to investigate charges and reports that vast tracts of land within the area of the lands ceded to the United States by the Government of Mexico were corruptly and fraudulently turned over to and delivered into the possession of private interests and have been held and are now held by said interests without color of title; that qualified citizens seeking to exercise constitutional rights relative to said lands and parts thereof have been maliciously threatened, intimidated, slandered, libeled, and arrested, and have been corruptly indicted and held under outrageous bonds for long periods of time, and then released without a hearing or a trial.

Pursuant to the resolution, Mr. President, the committee conducted extended hearings both in the city of Washington and in Los Angeles, Calif., the land to which the resolution related primarily being located in southern California.

Following an exhaustive investigation the committee has reached a unanimous conclusion to the effect that the charges are untrue and unfounded.

I submit the report from the committee. The concluding part of it is in this language:

It is the judgment of the committee that the grants in question are separately and severally valid; that their confirmation in conformity with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1851, constitute res adjudicata and can not be reviewed; that no fraud in connection with its issuance being shown, the patent in each case is conclusively binding with respect to the quantity of land conveyed; that such confirmation of title and issuance of patent present a perfect case of repose of title and foreclose further question; that the attacks being made upon such titles are without substance or foundation and are inspired and furthered by out substance or foundation and are inspired and furthered by out substance or foundation and are inspired and furthered by persons seeking to profit financially at the expense of well-intentioned but grossly misled applicants for homestead entry.

Your committee is unanimously of the opinion that those now claiming the lands in question, as successors in interest under the original grants, confirmed as hereinbefore stated, are the unqualified owners thereof and have an unquestioned legal title thereto, and that there is no foundation in fact or in law for the charges which Senate Resolution 291 directed this committee to investigate.

to investigate.

Mr. President, I ask that the report of the committee be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The report (No. 426) is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 426, Seventy-second Congress, first session] MEXICAN LAND GRANTS IN CALIFORNIA

Mr. Bratton, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surve submitted the following report (pursuant to S. Res. 291, 70th

The Committee on Public Lands and Surveys was directed by Senate Resolution 291, such resolution being extended by Senate Resolutions 329 (70th Cong.) and 283 (71st Cong.), to investigate charges and reports that vast tracts of land, within the area of the lands ceded to the United States by the Government of Mexico, were corruptly and fraudulently turned over to and delivered into the possession of private interests. Resolution 291 (70th Cong.) reads as follows: The Committee on Public Lands and Surveys was directed by reads as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, or any subcommittee it may designate for the purpose, be, and it hereby is, authorized and directed to make a thorough investigahereby is, authorized and directed to make a thorough investiga-tion of and report to the Senate its findings and recommendations regarding charges that have frequently been made and continue to persist, and reports that have long been current and now pre-vail, that vast tracts of lands within the area of the lands ceded to the United States by the Government of Mexico were corruptly and fraudulently turned over to and delivered into the possession of private interests, and have been held and are now held by said interests without color of title; that qualified citizens seeking to exercise constitutional rights relative to said lands, and parts thereof, have been maliciously threatened, intimidated, slandered, libeled, and arrested, and have been corruptly indicted and held under outrageous bonds for long periods of time, and then released without a hearing or a trial; that private interests continue in the unlawful possession of the public lands by reason of their exerted influence over those whose duty it is to enforce the law.

"That said committee is hereby authorized to sit and perform its duties at such times and places as it deems necessary or proper, and to require the attendance of witnesses by subpœna or otherwise; to require the production of books, papers, surveys, maps, grants, patents, and any and all other documents pertaining thereto; and to employ stenographers at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses and sign subpenas for witnesses and records; and every person duly summoned before said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, who refuses or falls to obey the process of said committee or refuses to answer the questions pertaining to said investigation shall be punished as prescribed by law. The expenses of said investigation shall not exceed $1,500, which shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers of the committee or subcommit-rund of the Senate on votations of the Committee or subcommit-tee, signed by the chairman and approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate."

Pursuant to such direction the committee conducted extended hearings in Washington, D. C., and in Los Angeles, Calif. Wit-nesses were examined, documents were submitted, and attorneys presented arguments and briefs relating to the questions involved.

APPLICATIONS FOR HOMESTEAD ENTRY

Charges had been made and repeated with frequency that vast areas of land in southern California were held under fraudulent titles arising from the fact that in some instances no grant was ever made by the Government of Spain or that of Mexico; in some instances forged or fabricated grants had been obtained; in some cases grants, although issued subsequent to the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, had been antedated to precede American sovereignty; and in other instances a grant was made of a fixed quantity of land, but that in surveying and fixing the boundaries of such grant a vast quantity in excess of the original grant was included in the field notes and the patent subsequently issued, thus passing into private possession such excess land which, in fact, is the property of the United States and constitutes a part of the public domain, and accordingly is properly subject to homestead entry.

A so-called Homesteaders' Association was formed with offices in Los Angeles, Calif. The practice of those in charge of such association was to solicit persons eligible to make homestead entry on the public domain to file on these lands, the association charg-ing a filing fee plus a legal-retainer fee for such services varying from $100 to $1,000.

This practice has extended over a period of several years and has netted officers and agents of the association a stupendous financial reward. According to information furnished the committee, it is still followed in some form. It was the common practice of the still followed in some form. mittee, it is still followed in some form. It was the common practice of the officers or agents of the association to take prospective applicants out and show them lands with the statement and representation that they were available for entry. In most instances these lands were highly improved, with bearing orchards, vineyards, productive farms, and modern dwellings thereon. In some instances they included towns of substantial size with brick buildings and other expensive improvements of incalculable value. buildings and other expensive improvements of incalculable value. These applicants were told that through appropriate action of Congress or the courts, title of the present occupants and their predecessors in interest would be held invalid; that thereupon such lands would be subject to homestead entry and that the applications of these persons would take priority, thus vesting them with title and possession of some of the most highly improved and valuable farms and suburban property in southern California, some of which is adjacent to the city of Los Angeles. California, some of which is adjacent to the city of Los Angeles. As stated, the Homesteaders Association in virtually every case charged a filing fee plus a legal-retainer fee, usually being from $100 to $1,000, for the alleged service thus rendered and to be rendered in pressing the rights of the applicant either before the Department of the Interior or Congress or in the courts. Pursuant to this system many scores of applications were filed covering large quantities of land.

All applications, submitted in the circumstances outlined, were rejected by the Department of the Interior for the reason that the rejected by the Department of the Interior for the reason that the lands embraced therein were not a part of the public domain; that they were not subject to homestead entry because (1) they had not been surveyed by the Government nor had any unofficial survey thereof been recognized as official and (2) no order or proclamation had been issued declaring them subject to entry.

BOARD OF LAND COMMISSIONERS

For the purpose of adjudicating claims of title to lands in Cali-For the purpose of adjudicating claims of title to lands in California held under grants from Spain or Mexico, prior to the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, executed February 2, 1848, Congress passed the act approved March 3, 1851 (9 Stat. 631), creating a commission of three members, commonly called the Board of Land Commissioners, to be appointed by the President and vesting such commission with jurisdiction to hear, consider, and determine all such claims, confirming or rejecting the same as the facts and law required. The adjudication of such commission became final and constituted res adjudicate unless an appeal was taken thereand constituted res adjudicata unless an appeal was taken there-from to the United States court as authorized by the act, and if such appeal were taken, the judgment of the court should be final and constitute res adjudicata. The statute authorized an appeal from the United States court to the Supreme Court of the United States. In order to reflect the comprehensive system thus created, sections 6 to 13, both inclusive, of the act are quoted. They read as follows:

"Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the said commissioners, when sitting as a board, and each commissioner at his chambers, shall be, and are, and is hereby, authorized to administer oaths and to examine witnesses in any case pending before the commissioners, that all such testimony shall be taken in writing, and shall be recorded and preserved in bound books to be provided for that purpose.

"SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the secretary of the board shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and required, on the application of the law agent or district attorney of the United States, or of any claimant or his counsel, to issue writs of subpena commanding the attendance of a witness or witnesses before the said board or any commissioner.

"SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That each and every person claiming lands in California by virtue of any right or title derived from the Spanish or Mexican Governments shall present the same to the said commissioners when sitting as a board, together with such documentary evidence and testimony of witnesses as the said claimant relies upon in support of such claims; and it shall be the duty of the commissioners, when the case is ready for hearing, to proceed promptly to examine the same upon such evidence, and upon the evidence produced in behalf of the United States, and to decide upon the validity of the said claim, and within 30 days after such decision is rendered to certify the same, with the reasons on which it is founded, to the district attorney of the United States in and for the district in which such decision shall be rendered.

"SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That in all cases of the rejection or confirmation of any claim by the board of commissioners it shall and may be lawful for the claimant or the district attorney, in behalf of the United States, to present a petition to the district court of the district in which the land claimed is situated, praying the said court to review the decision of the said commissioners, and to decide on the validity of such claim; and such petition, if presented by the claimant, shall set forth fully the nature of the claim and the names of the original and present claimants, and shall contain a deraignment of the claimant's title, together with a transcript of the report of the board of commissioners, and of the documentary evidence and testimony of the witnesses on which it was founded; and such petition, if presented by the district attorney in behalf of the United States, shall be accompanied by a transcript of the report of the board of commissioners, and of the papers and evidence on which it was founded, and shall fully and distinctly set forth the grounds on which the said claim is alleged to be invalid, a copy of which petition, if the same shall be presented by a claimant, shall be served on the district attorney of the United States, and if presented in behalf of the United States shall be served on the claimant or his attorney, and the party upon whom such service shall be made shall be bound to answer the same within a time to be prescribed by the judge of the district court; and the answer of the claimant to such petition shall set forth fully the nature of the claim, and the names of the original and present claimants, and shall contain a deraignment of the claimant's title; and the answer of the district attorney in behalf of the United States shall fully and distinctly set forth the grounds on which the said claim is alleged to be invalid, copies of which answers shall be served upon the adverse party 30 days before the meeting of the court, and thereupon, at the first term of the court thereafter, the said case shall stand for trial unless, on cause shown, the same shall be continued by the "Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That the district court shall proceed to render judgment upon the pleadings and evidence in the case, and upon such further evidence as may be taken by order of the said court, and shall, on application of the party against whom judgment is rendered, grant an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States on such security for costs in the district and Supreme Court, in case the judgment of the district and supreme court, the case the said court shall proceed as trict court shall be affirmed, as the said court shall prescribe; and if the court shall be satisfied that the party desiring to appeal is unable to give such security, the appeal may be allowed without ciding on the validity of any claim brought before them under the provisions of this act, shall be governed by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, the law of nations, the laws, usages, and customs of the government from which the claim is derived, the principles of equity, and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, so far as they are applicable.

"Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That to entitle either party to a review of the proceedings and decision of the commissioners hereinbefore provided for notice of the intention of such party to file a petition to the district court shall be entered on the journal or record of proceedings of the commissioners within 60 days after their decision on the claim has been made and notified to the parties, and such petition shall be filed in the district court within six months after such decision has been rendered.

"Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That all lands, the claims to which have been finally rejected by the commissioners in manner herein provided, or which shall be finally decided to be invalid by the district or Supreme Court, and all lands, the claims to which shall not have been presented to the said commissioners within by the district or Supreme Court, and all lands, the claims to which shall not have been presented to the said commissioners within two years after the date of this act, shall be deemed, held, and considered as part of the public domain of the United States; and for all claims finally confirmed by the said commissioners, or by the said district or Supreme Court, a patent shall issue to the claimant upon his presenting to the General Land Office an authentic certificate of such confirmation and a plat or survey of the said land, duly certified and approved by the surveyor general of California, whose duty it shall be to cause all private claims which shall be finally confirmed to be accurately surveyed, and to furnish plats of the same; and in the location of the said claims the said surveyor general shall have the same power and authority furnish plats of the same; and in the location of the said claims the said surveyor general shall have the same power and authority as are conferred on the register of the land office and receiver of the public moneys of Louisiana by the sixth section of the act 'to create the office of surveyor of the public lands for the State of Louisiana,' approved March 3, 1831: Provided always, That if the title of the claimant to such lands shall be contested by any other person it shall and may be lawful for such person to present a title of the claimant to such lands shall be contested by any other person, it shall and may be lawful for such person to present a petition to the district judge of the United States for the district in which the lands are situated plainly and distinctly setting forth his title thereto and praying the said judge to hear and determine the same, a copy of which petition shall be served upon the adverse party 30 days before the time appointed for hearing the same: And provided jutther, That it shall and may be lawful for the district judge of the United States, upon the hearing of such petition, to grant an injunction to restrain the party at whose instance the claim to the said lands has been confirmed from suing out a patent for the same until the title thereto shall have been finally decided, a copy of which order shall be transmitted to the finally decided, a copy of which order shall be transmitted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and thereupon no patent shall issue until such decision shall be made or until sufficient time shall, in the opinion of the said judge, have been allowed for obtaining the same; and thereafter the said injunction shall be dissolved."

In each case to which such charges of fraud, as hereinbefore outlined, relate the grant was held valid and confirmed as authorized in such act. Patent subsequently issued.

The act creating such commission, the authority vested in the commission, and the binding effect of its action holding a grant to be valid, and, accordingly, confirming it, was reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of United States v. Flint (4 Sawyer 42). There the United States sought to vacate a patent issued pursuant to confirmation in conformity with the state in question on the ground that the ground was transfer. act in question on the ground that the grant was fraudulent. If such cancellation could be obtained, then in the alternative recovery of excess land included in the patent beyond the quantity granted was prayed. Both contentions were decided against the United States. Mr. Justice Field, himself intimately familiar with conditions in California, including the situation attendant upon passage of the act in question, speaking for the court, said:

"By the act of March 3, 1851, the legislative department prescribed the mode in which the provisions of the treaty should be carried out and the obligations of the Government to the former inhabitants discharged, so far as their rights respecting the territory acquired, and thus provided the means of separating their property from the public domain. That act created a commission of three persons, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for the express purpose of ascertaining and settling private land claims in the State. It gave a secretary to the commission, skilled in the Spanish and English languages, to act as interpreter and to keep a record of its proceedings. It provided an agent, learned in the law and skilled in those languages, to superintend the interests of the United States, and it was made his duty to attend the meetings of the commissioners, to collect testimony on behalf of the United States, and to be present on all occasions when the claimant, in any case, took depositions. To the commission every person claimany case, took depositions. To the commission every person claiming lands in California by virtue of any right or title derived from the Spanish or Mexican Governments was required, on pain of forfeiting his land, to present his claim, together with the documentary evidence and testimony upon which he relied in its support.

"As thus seen, the most ample powers were vested in the commissioners and the district court to inquire into the merits of every claim, and they were not restricted in their deliberations by any narrow rules of procedure or technical rules of evidence, but could take into consideration the principles of public law and of equity in their broadest sense. When the claim was finally confirmed the act provided for its survey and location and the issue of a patent to the claimant. The decrees and the patents were intended to be final and conclusive of the rights of the parties as between them and the United States. The act, in declaring that they should only be conclusive between the United States and the claimants, did, in fact, declare that as between them they should have that character.

"Here, then, we have a special tribunal, established for the

"Here, then, we have a special tribunal, established for the express purpose of ascertaining and passing upon private claims to land derived from Spanish or Mexican authorities, clothed with ample powers to investigate the subject and determine the validity of every claim, and the propriety of its recognition by the Government, capable as any court could possibly be made of detecting frauds connected with the claim, and whose first inquiry in every frauds connected with the claim, and whose first inquiry in every case was necessarily as to the authenticity and genuineness of the documents upon which the claim was founded.

"On principle, such adjudications can not be reviewed or defeated by a court of equity, upon any suggestion that the commissioners and court misapprehended the law or were mistaken as to the evidence before them, even if that consisted of fabricated papers supported by perjured testimony. The very questions presented by the present bill were necessarily involved in the proceeding before the commissioners and the district court, and the credibility of the testimony offered was a matter considered by them. Whether the grant produced by the claimcourt, and the credibility of the testimony offered was a matter considered by them. Whether the grant produced by the claimant was genuine and the claim resting thereon was entitled to confirmation were the points at issue. The bill avers that the alleged grant was not genuine because it was antedated. But the genuineness of the document was that matter sub judice and could not have been established, and the claim based upon it affirmed except by evidence satisfactory to the commission and court, that it was made at the time stated.

"It is to no purpose in such case to invoke the doctrine that fraud vitiates all transactions, even the most solemn, and that a court of equity will set aside or enjoin the enforcement of the most formal judgments when obtained by fraud. The doctrine of equity in this respect is not questioned; it is a doctrine of the highest value in the administration of justice, and its assertion highest value in the administration of justice, and its assertion in proper cases is essential to any remedial system adequate to the necessities of society. But it can not be invoked to reopen a case in which the same matter has been once tried, or so put in issue between the parties that it might have been tried. The judgment rendered in such a case is itself the highest evidence that the alleged fraud did not exist and estops the parties from asserting the contrary. It is afterward mere assumption to say that the fraud was perpetrated. The judgment has settled the matter otherwise; it is res judicata."

In the later case of Thompson v. Los Angeles Farming & Milling Co. (180 U. S. 72), the Supreme Court of the United States, in discussing the effect of an adjudication under such act, said:

"The power to consider whatever was necessary to the validity of the claim—propositions of law or propositions of fact—the fact of a grant, or the power to grant, was conferred. If there should be a wrong decision, the remedy was not by a collateral attach on the judgment rendered. The statute provided the remedy. It allowed an appeal to the district court of the United States and from thence to this court. Legal procedure could not afford any better safeguard against error. Every question which could arise on title claimed could come to and receive judgment from this court. The scheme of adjudication was made complete, and all the purposes of an act to give repose to titles were accomplished."

The act of March 3, 1851, has been reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States in numerous other cases. (Beard v. Federy, 3 Wall. 478; More v. Steinback, 127 U. S. 70; United States v. Fossatt, 21 How. 445.) In these several cases it has been held repeatedly that an adjudication of the Board of Land Commissioners, when not appealed from, or the decree of the court, in case of an appeal, is conclusively binding and constitutes res adjudicata, so far as the existence and validity of a grant made by the Government of Spain or that of Mexico is concerned. It forecloses inquiry into all such matters thereafter. The strongest case dealing with this exact question is United States v. Throckmorton (98 U. S. 61). There the United States sought to vacate and annul the decree confirming the grant on the ground that such decree was obtained through a false and fabricated grant; the facts alleged were, in substance, that after the proceedings for confirmation had been instituted and while they were pending before the Board of Land Commissioners, the claimant went to Mexico and there obtained a grant antedating American sover-Mexico and there obtained a grant antedating American sover-eignty, and upon such grant the decree of confirmation was predi-cated. In determining the binding and conclusive effect of such judgment, even though predicated upon false testimony or fabri-cated documents, as well as the exception to the general rule, the cated documents, as well as the exception to the general rule, the court said:

"If the court has been mistaken in the law, there is a remedy by writ of error. If the jury has been mistaken in the facts, the remedy is by motion for a new trial. If there has been evidence discovered since the trial, a motion for a new trial will give appropriate relief. But all these are parts of the same proceeding, relief is given in the same suit, and the party is not vexed by another suit for the same matter. So in a suit in chancery, on proper showing a rehearing is granted. If the injury complained of is an erroneous decision, an appeal to a higher court gives opportunity to correct the error. If new evidence is discovered after the decree has become final, a bill of review on that ground may be filed within the rules prescribed by law on that subject. Here again, these proceedings are all part of the same suit, and the rule framed for the repose of society is not violated.

"But there is an admitted exception to this general rule in cases where, by reason of something done by the successful party to a suit, there was in fact no adversary trial or decision of the issue in the case. Where the unsuccessful party has been prevented from exhibiting fully his case, by fraud or deception pracvented from exhibiting fully his case, by fraud or deception pracvented from exhibiting fully his case, by fraud or deception practiced on him by his opponent, as by keeping him away from court, a false promise of a compromise; or where the defendant never had knowledge of the suit, being kept in ignorance by the acts of the plaintiff; or where an attorney fraudulently or without authority assumes to represent a party and connives at his defeat; or where the attorney regularly employed corruptly sells out his client's interest to the other side—these, and similar cases which show that there has never been a real contest in the trial or hearing of the case, are reasons for which a new suit may be sustained to set aside and annul the former judgment or decree and one. ing of the case, are reasons for which a new suit may be sustained to set aside and annul the former judgment or decree and open the case for a new and a fair hearing. (See Weils, Res Adjudicata, sec. 499; Pearce v. Olney, 20 Conn. 544; Wierich v. De Zoya, 7 Ill. 385; Kent v. Richards, 3 Md., ch. 392; Smith v. Lowry, 1 Johns. (N. Y.), ch. 320; De Louis et al. v. Meek et al., 2 Iowa 55.)

"In all these cases, and many others which have been examined, relief has been granted on the ground that, by some fraud practiced directly upon the party seeking relief against the judgment or decree, that party has been prevented from presenting all of his case to the court.

his case to the court.

On the other hand, the doctrine is equally well settled that the court will not set aside a judgment because it was founded on a fraudulent instrument, or perjured evidence, or for any matter which was actually presented and considered in the judgment assailed."

Judgment assailed."

This case is regarded throughout the country as a leading authority upon the question of the binding effect of a judgment or decree, although founded upon false documents or perjured testimony. It is not suggested that the claimant in any case to which this inquiry relates practiced fraud on the United States by preventing a full submission of its contentions. The naked contention is that the evidence submitted by the claimants was false, fraudulent, and fabricated, or that excess land was included in the survey and subsequently issued patent—the very matters, issues, and things remitted to the commission for its consideration and determination. It would seem perfectly clear, therefore. tion and determination. It would seem perfectly clear, therefore, that the cases cited render such question no longer debatable.

EXCESS LANDS HELD UNDER PATENT

In addition to asserting that some of the grants in question are invalid for the reasons already stated, it is contended by those urging the investigation that, if such grants be valid, vast areas of land in excess of the quantity granted were included in the patent in several instances. In this connection it will be noted that the act of March 3, 1851, provides for the survey of the grant, in case its validity is established and it is confirmed, and the issuance of a patent predicated upon such grant. By the express language of the statute a patent issued in conformity with its provisions is conclusive as between the United States and all claimants. The homestead applicants seek to acquire a right under the United States, namely, title to the land in question an claimants. The homestead applicants seek to acquire a right under the United States, namely, title to the land in question from the United States. Present occupants hold under the grant long ago confirmed, followed by issuance of patent, as hereinbefore outlined. So, in the absence of fraud in the issuance of the patent, such patent is conclusive and can not be canceled, nor lands included therein recovered on the theory that they are in excess of the quantity specified in the grant and confirming decree. The facts fail to show any fraud on the part of any claimant in connection with the issuance of patent.

Although we are convinced that none of the patents in question can now be assailed, nor can the contention that excess lands are recoverable be sustained, if such lands could be recovered by the United States, the applicants for homestead entry thereon, to whom reference has been made, would not be entitled to acquire such lands in that way, because it has long been the policy of the Department of the Interior, in case land is restored to the public domain, to extend a preference right to acquire the same to the person or persons in possession thereof asserting claim or color of title. That policy rests upon recognized principles of justice and equity. Its application in the cases presented by these homestead claimants would be undeniable.

NO FACTS INDICATING FRAUD

Although, for the reasons stated, it is the belief of the committee that the confirmation of the several grants in the manner previously stated with the subsequent issuance of patent forecloses further inquiry into the antecedent facts, it may be appropriate to say that the committee's inquiry has disclosed nothing substantial indicating that such grants were not in fact made or that they were made with attending fraud. Aside from a meager showing that no record of such grants could be found in the archives of the Mexican Government recently, there is nothing to indicate any facts tending to support, even remotely, the charges to which Senate Resolution 291 refers.

CONCLUSIONS

It is the judgment of the committee that the grants in ques-It is the judgment of the committee that the grants in question are separately and severally valid; that their confirmation in conformity with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1851, constitute res adjudicata and can not be reviewed; that no fraud in connection with its issuance being shown, the patent in each case is conclusively binding with respect to the quantity of land conveyed; that such confirmation of title and issuance of patent present a perfect case of repose of title and foreclose further question; that the attacks being made upon such titles are without substance or foundation and are inspired and furthered by out substance or foundation and are inspired and furthered by persons seeking to profit financially at the expense of well-intentioned but grossly misled applicants for homestead entry.

Your committee is unanimously of the opinion that those now claiming the lands in question, as successors in interest under the original grants, confirmed as hereinbefore stated, are the unqualified owners thereof and have an unquestioned legal title thereto, and that there is no foundation in fact or in law for the charges which Senate Resolution 291 directed this committee to investigate.

EMERGENCY CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I introduce a bill and ask that it be printed in the Record, together with an accompanying explanatory statement, and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 4076) to provide for emergency construction of certain authorized public works to aid in increasing employment, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

8. 4076

A bill to provide for emergency construction of certain authorized public works to aid in increasing employment, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of providing for emergency construction of certain authorized public works with a view to increasing employment and carrying out the policy declared in the employment stabilization act of 1931, there is hereby appropriated, from the emergency construction fund hereinafter created, the sum of $1,003,499.890, which shall be allocated as follows: To the Department of Agriculture, $252,314,755; to the Department of Commerce, $3,424,582; to the Department of the Interior, $200,-843,300; to the Department of Justice, $4,100,000; to the Department of Labor, $71,170; to the Navy Department, $25,109,000; to the State Department, $1,453,520; to the Treasury Department, $33,949,950; to the War Department, $420,014,130; to the Architect of the Capitol, $15,037,083; to the Arlington Memorial Bridge Commission, $2,750,000; to the George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission, $500,000; to the Inland Waterways Corporation, $815,000; to the Mount Rushmore Memorial, $350,000; to the Panama Canal, $11,250,000; to the Smithsonian Institution, $6,500,000; to the Veterans' Administration, $20,232,000; and to the municipal government of the District of Columbia, $3,535,400. The amounts so allocated shall be expended on the authorized contruction projects covered by the report of the Federal Employment Stabilization Board transmitted to the Senate January 25, 1932, pursuant to Senate Resolution No. 127, Seventy-second Congress, first session, agreed to January 7, 1932, and shall be made available at such times and in such amounts as may be necessary to complete such projects at the earliest practicable date. In the event that an appropriation has heretofore been made for any such project the amount thereof shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Sec. 2. (a) There is hereby created a special fund in the Treasury to be known as the emergency construction fund and to be administered by the Secretary of the Treasury. For the purpose of providing funds to carry out the provisions of this act the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to borrow from time to time on the credit of the United States, not to exceed $1.100,000,000, and to issue bonds therefor, to be known as emergency construction bonds, in such form as he may prescribe. Such bonds shall be in denominations of not less than $50, shall mature 10 years from the date of their issue, and shall bear interest at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but not to exceed 4½ per cent per annum. The principal and interest of such bonds shall be payable in United States gold coin of the present standard of value, and such bonds shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except estate and inheritance taxes, and surtaxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority.

(b) Such bonds shall be first offered at not less than par, as a popular loan, under such regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury as will give all citizens of the United States an equal opportunity to participate therein. Any portion of the bonds so offered and not subscribed for may be otherwise disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par. No commissions shall be allowed or paid in connection with the sale or other disposition of any such bonds. All amounts derived from the sale of such bonds shall be paid into the emergency construction fund.

SEC. 3. This act may be cited as the "emergency construction act of 1932."

The statement accompanying the bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

STATEMENT ACCOMPANYING S. 4076

1. By the terms of the Federal employment stabilization act, approved February 10, 1931, the policy of Congress is declared as follows:

bes.

"It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to arrange the construction of public works so far as practicable in such manner as will assist in the stabilization of industry and employment through the proper timing of such construction; and that to further this object there shall be advance planning, including preparation of detailed construction plans, of public works by the construction agencies and the board."

construction agencies and the board."

2. On January 25, 1932, the Federal Employment Stabilization Board transmitted a report to the Senate pursuant to Senate Resolution 127, Seventy-second Congress, first session, submitted by Senator Walsh of Montana. The following is a recapitulation of the estimated cost of authorized construction abstracted from that report, which is based on the 6-year advance plans submitted by the Federal construction agencies pursuant to the Federal employment stabilization act.

POWER TRUST HIDES ASSETS TO BALK PROBE—DEFIANCE OF CONGRESS LINKED TO EFFORT TO CURTAIL WORK OF FEDERAL TRADE COM-

By M. L. Ramsay

Brazen deception and defiance of Congress and other Government agencies by the Power Trust through the last seven years underlie the threatened curtailment of the Federal Trade Commission's utilities investigation.

This is revealed starkly in official records of the investigation, which is only now bringing to light the secrets of high finance and profiteering that have been persistently concealed from Congress and from the public.

The Power Trust's own account books, reports, and letters hitherto closed to every public agency have been examined by the hundreds. Even where these have been withheld Federal auditors have searched out many of the facts and patiently reconstructed deals and devices which the power magnates long have held inviolate.

Together these records show that consumers of electricity are being systematically gouged through a multitude of devices of high-finance character and all but infinite ingenuity.

They portray the power combines, in their ruthless campaign to protect this profiteering system from exposure, as first making false statements about it, then resorting to concealment and respectively to conceament and suppression of facts.

From these records emerges the first disclosure of what the Power Trust has hidden and defended by means of the mighty power lobby in Washington and the most far-reaching and insidious peace-time propaganda ever known.

TO EXPOSE PLANS

In this article and others to follow Universal Service will show: Outright or partial defeat of every governmental attempt to expose a fee system which yields millions in excessive profits to holding companies; collects those millions from the public.

Concealment of vast stock-watering operations by suppression of information Congress needed; accompanied by slanderous attacks upon critical Senators.

A proposal to compel accountants to estimate figures in an attempt to prove power financing sound.

Alleged misrepresentation to the Government of the reasons for creation of holding companies, directly contradicted by Trade Commission findings.

Power Trust exploitation of eulogistic statements by President Hoover, while Secretary of Commerce, to protect its system of profitering.

Repeated professions of eagerness to give the public "the true facts," followed by withholding of the only records which could

UP TO CONGRESS

The full extent of utility profiteering and other abuses remains to be disclosed. Its disclosure depends upon the funds and the working force Congress provides to carry the Trade Commission's inquiry through to June, 1933. That date has been set for its completion.

President Version 1933.

President Hoover recommended a 30 per cent reduction of commission funds, which, according to testimony made public by a House Appropriations subcommittee, would have stopped the investigation "right in the middle of the stream." The recommended reduction was much larger than that for any other permanent agency.

The Appropriations Committee accepted the Hoover figures. But after protests at the summary and mysterious "killing the investigation, it "earmarked" for the utilities and chain-store inquiries $300,000 of the commission's funds. No part of the 30 cent cut was restored, nor was a fixed sum assured for the utilities inquiry alone.

ASK MORE FUNDS

Congressional friends of the investigation, urging more funds. fear a repetition of the Government's previous failures when it tackled the Power Trust without adequate appropriations and competent men.

All the deception, political manipulation, and profiteering the Trade Commission has thus far brought to light are rooted in the enormous volume of financing—estimated at approximately $12,-000,000,000—which has accompanied the power industry's magic expansion.

The commission staff has in general approved the utilities' management. It has even praised the financing in one big system, found free from all grosser abuses, yet prospering mightly. As to many others, the results sustain sweepingly the charges of Senator Walsh of Montana; Senator Norms, of Nebraska, and numerous other critics, that utility capital has been prodigiously "watered" and that consumers are forced to pay dividends on the "watered" securities in executive the "watered". the "watered" securities in excessive rates.

Promoters and financiers of the industry stand revealed as writing up capital to dizzy heights merely by engineering merger deals and setting down big figures on new sets of books to supplant smaller figures on the old books.

ARE ARBITRARY

The "write-ups" are shown to have been for the most part arbitrary and unregulated.

In pursuance of these "write-ups," a flood of new securities has been poured out. Some of these have been sold to investors. The been poured out. Some of these have been sold to investors. The rest have been taken over by the promoters and financiers, free—as "promotion profit" and what not.

Because the cost of generating and distributing electricity has been declining swiftly, while its sales increased by leaps and bounds, promoter-financiers have been able to do more than main-bounds, promoter-inanciers have been able to do more than maintain dividends on the stocks they have sold. They have profited vastly from dividends on the free stock they kept.

But to pay these dividends, the commission's reports make it clear, the promoters have had to fix rates to consumers at a high point. Then it was necessary either to keep the rates at that point or to reduce them only enough to increase their sales and thus keep their profits up.

DEFENSES BUILT

Meanwhile towering political and financial breastworks which long appeared impregnable were built up to defend this system of profiteering from attacks by Congress or any other agency.

Investment and commercial bankers were organized to support the utility promoters. Pressure was exerted on State legislatures to modify laws restricting investment in utility securities by trust and savings banks.

and savings banks.

The bankers were called upon to help maintain the rates and profits, to defeat "objectionable" legislation. Insurance companies were encouraged to invest and to bring their great influence to bear as a restraint upon consumers and voters.

Although all these devices enjoyed large success, none ever silenced completely the criticism of the Power Trust in Congress.

(The trust's maneuvers to outwit its congressional critics and paralyze other governmental attempts at restraint will be described in succeeding articles.)

FALSIFICATION OF REPORTS OF POWER TRUST CHARGED-COMMISSION Annals Reveal How It Has Suppressed Data Meant to Open THE EYES OF CONGRESS

By M. L. Ramsay

How the Power Trust has boldly suppressed reports intended to enlighten Congress about its gouging of electric consumers and allegedly furnished false information for other reports is revealed in records of the Federal Trade Commission investigation.

These maneuvers have until recently paralyzed every attempt to prove existence of this profiteering.

The most striking example is the concealment of many millions of dollars of profit collected by the giant holding companies every

CONSUMER PAYS IT

Directly these fees are paid by operating power companies, subsidiaries of the holding companies which collect them. Theoretically in whole, and actually in part, they are compensation for managing the subsidiaries, for building plants for them, and for supplying engineering services.

Money to pay these fees to the holding companies is collected by the subsidiary power companies in turn from consumers and investors. Some is taken from consumers in the shape of an addition to the subsidiary's operating expenses. Other is collected from from investors by adding it to the company's capital and then issuing securities upon the expanded capital.<sup>3</sup>

The fees always have been beyond the reach of State utility commissions, because the companies collecting them class themselves as nonutilities and set up shop beyond State boundaries.

Senate records disclose that Chief Accountant William V. King, of the Federal Power Commission, refused to approve such fees, of the Federal Power Commission, refused to approve such fees, totaling millions, as early as 1925.

NORRIS ACTED FIRST

Then Senator Norris, of Nebraska, progressive leader, forced the first Power Trust investigation by the Federal Trade Commission. But the commission at that time, short of funds and auditors, made no examination of books. It relied upon utility manuals and similar sources, and upon information given by power company officials.

According to the commission's subsequent report of findings, the Electric Bond & Share Co. then represented its fees as approximately covering only the cost of services performed for them and as yielding it no profit.

70th Cong., 1st sess., pp. 246-8.

Investigation of Federal Regulation of Power, Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, 71st Cong., 2d sess., pt. 2, pp. 170-175;

The commission embodied these representations in its report, making the fees appear to Congress, the State commissions, and the public as non profit making. Its report summed up:

"From the foregoing account it will be seen that the Electric Bond & Share Co. regards this service staff as an auxiliary organization that does not directly produce more than a nominal

CALLED FALLACIOUS

In a new report on its present searching investigation the commission said:

"An analysis of even the limited information available in the form of an income statement proves conclusively the fallacy of these assertions." 5

The available information still is "limited," because the moment the fee system was menaced the Electric Bond & Share Co. hid the pertinent records and fled to the Federal courts.

it has tied up the commission for more than three years.

But the commission got enough information to report that certain fees were "very largely clear profit," as King had said, and to show that the profit on the fees as a whole could not be less than 106 per cent. *

KING HOLDS OUT

Meanwhile King has stuck to his guns in the Power Commission. In January, 1928, that commission sent an official report to the House of Representatives, which would have revealed similar profiteering in fees by other companies. One group of fees cited for illustration totaled $3,250,000; another nearly $450,000.

This report reached Congress just as the lines were being drawn for the Senate fight over Senator Walsh's resolution for a new and thoroughgoing investigation of power financing and propaganda.

It might have brought swift victory to Walsh, besides exposing the fee system and many other tricks of high finance.

But the fact of its existence "leaked" to the power interests. Representatives of the Niagara Falls Power Co., whose financing was mercilessly dissected, hot-footed it to Washington to force its withdrawal before Senators and Representatives could detect the "dynamite" in it.

ANOTHER DANGER ZONE

Failing twice, the Niagara Falls interests at last prevailed upon the power commissioners to call back the report, expunge all the examples of profiteering, and resubmit the report in emasculated form.

Thus another dangerous threat to the fee system was removed. While the power leaders were working frantically to block the disclosure through the Power Commission the Electric Bond & Share refusal of fee records came up for hearing before the Trade Commission.

Now the commission is about to complete its court case against Electric Bond & Share, with every expectation of success—if it has the funds to go through.

Meanwhile the big profits from fees mount up. Electric Bond & Share's minimum possible profits from this source since its organization are shown as $17,035,809.8

The American Gas & Electric Co., affiliated with Electric Bond & Share, has collected more than $16,000,000 in fees, of which more than $12,000,000 was profit. Its profit is nearly 300 per cent on the cost of servicing.9

In the New England Power Association, another big system, the commission found, on incomplete information, a minimum fee profit of approximately 40 per cent.

FIVE HUNDRED MILLIONS IN "WRITE UPS" DISCLOSED IN POWER IN-QUIRY—INFORMATION SUPPRESSED BY UTILITY TRUST TO KEEP FINANCE METHODS SECRET FROM THE PUBLIC

By M. L. Ramsay

Concealed in the books of power companies and their holding companies the Federal Trade Commission has found more than $500,000,000 of "write-ups" of utility capital, serving in large part as the basis for "watered" stock and fictitious surpluses. 10

These ".write-ups" have been disclosed in little more than a These "write-ups" have been disclosed in little more than a third of the industry, and in general without digging below the topmost layer of mergers that have been heaped one upon another recent years.

FACTS SUPPRESSED

To prevent this high finance from coming to light—until the Trade Commission recently uncovered it—the Power Trust boldly suppressed information Congress needed, and slandered Senators who persisted in efforts to get this information.

It was proposed that auditors be compelled to "estimate" figures in an attempt to prove certain power financing sound. And much of the draining off of profits actually was concealed by bookkeeping devices. Trade Commission, records show.

The most formidable move against high finance and profiteering came in 1927, when Senator Walsh of Montana proposed to investigate it.

A few months later, and while the great force of the power lobby was being massed to defeat this resolution, Walsh was scathingly attacked at a meeting of the New Jersey Utilities Association as an "uneducated member of the proletariat."

WALSH SLANDERED

Lamenting that it would cost the electrical industry millions to "educate" WALSH, who is a law graduate of the University of Wisconsin and a foremost Senate authority on constitutional law, wisconsin and a foremost Senate authority on constitutional law, a speaker proclaimed:

"It is like asking the chief vestal virgin in Rome to come out and justify her purity before the Senate."

Senator Norris, of Nebraska, who had fathered the earlier investigation in which the power interests subsequently were alleged to have made false reports, was characterized contemptuously as "overheated." II

The author of this time.

The author of this tirade was Theodore J. Grayson, attorney for certain New Jersey utilities and treasurer of the New Jersey association. Long afterwards the trade commission disclosed that ciation. Long afterwards the trade commission disclosed that Grayson had been paid $250 each by the power lobby for speeches opposing Government ownership.<sup>12</sup>

These speeches were handed to the press as the utterances of a professor at the University of Pennsylvania. Grayson held a professorship in conjunction with his other activities.

At about the time Grayson denounced the power industry's critics in New Jersey, Bernard J. Mullaney, Samuel Insull's right-hand man, spoke in Tennessee. He denounced supposed "insidious" efforts to change the character of the Government, assisted by "some United States Senators."

Deploring efforts of "subversionists" to "put the Government more and more into business." Mullaney declared one phase of more and more into business." Mullaney declared one phase of these efforts was the "'sweeping investigation' of the entire public-utility industry, as proposed by Senator Walsh of Montana."

COMMUNISM HINTED

He then classed all such efforts as "masked approaches toward communism.'

Thousands of copies of Mullaney's address were sent over the country by the power lobby.<sup>13</sup>

Subsequent disclosures by the trade commission show that Mullaney and the Insull interests had more at stake in an investigation than theories of government. One such disclosure was that the great Insull holding company, Middle West Utilities had on its books a $33,000,000 surplus which in part represented only a marking up of security values and certain other operations which, in the opinion of the commission examiner did not represent "earned surplus." 14

Another was that Mullaney and two associates, undertaking to censor standard public school textbooks, forced the deletion of an account of Samuel Insull's $200,000 campaign gifts to senatorial candidates of both parties.<sup>13</sup>

URGED LAW PROBE

While Walsh was being attacked furiously in all sections of the country, the Power Trust leaders began advocating another Federal Trade Commission inquiry instead of the senatorial investigation Walsh proposed, in case they should fail to block an investigation altogether.

They sought this substitution at least eight months before an amendment to put it into effect was offered in the Senate. The records indicate a hope—since proved woefully unfounded—of a "whitewash" from the trade commission. The net result, for the utilities, has been a disastrous boomerang.

POWER TRUST LOBBY ACTIVE WHEN INQUIRY WAS QUASHED—CON-GRESS UNAWARE OF COMMISSION'S REPORT ON UTILITY PROFITEER-ING, HITHERTO CONFIDENTIAL RECORDS REVEAL

By M. L. Ramsay

By M. L. Ramsay

When the Federal Power Commission's revealing report of utility profiteering reached Congress in 1928, only to be suppressed before the legislators could learn its contents, the Power Trust's mightiest lobby was running full blast.

The slaughtering of Senator Walsh's projected investigation or the substitution of a supposedly milder inquiry was only one of its aims. Hitherto confidential records reveal that another was to procure a clean bill of health for utility financing.

The kind of financing that was going on was shown in the Power Commission's report before it was emasculated. This report gave concrete examples of the capital "write-ups," which have run into hundreds of millions. Scores of these have since been unearthed by the Federal Trade Commission. been unearthed by the Federal Trade Commission.

" WRITE-UPS " SHOWN

One example in the Power Commission report portrayed the Niagara Falls power system as having written up its capital from $4,000,000 to $16,000,000. Then later the Government was handed a valuation claim of $77,000,000 upon an investment alleged to have amounted to only $20,500,000.<sup>17</sup>

At that time Walsh and his supporters had not been able to get at deals of this kind. Suppression of the facts accordingly shut off an ammunition supply. It also helped to starve the accounting organization of the Power Commission, which had sought to contact the contact of the facts account. to enlighten Congress not only as to high finance and profiteering but as to the menace these presented to the Nation's ownership of water-power sites leased to the trust.

Hence the suppression of facts protected the system of profiteering on both fronts.

Meanwhile the power interests as their first step toward "killing" the Walsh resolution or deflecting it to the Trade Commission fought to have it referred to the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, presided over by Senator James E. Watson, of Indiana.

LOBBY GETS CREDIT

It was so referred. George Roberts, prominent New York lawyer and authority on utility financing, gave all the credit for this to the power lobby. Roberts had been in the fight from the outset. He had been sent to Washington to convince Walsh that there could not be $2,000,000,000 of "water" in utility securities, as the prosecutor of the oil scandals had charged. He had falled.<sup>13</sup>

In a letter to Josiah T. Newcomb, Washington head of the power lobby, the day after the reference of the Walsh resolution, Roberts said:

"My most hearty congratulations on the vote in the Senate my most hearty congratuations on the vote in the Senate yesterday. I know how much this was due to your personal work and strategy, and I think it is a great triumph."

Roberts's letter then revealed other plans:

"I hope that this success will not give the controlling interests in the various holding companies the feeling that they can relax in the preparation of the constructive case for the industry.

RAPS ACCOUNTANTS

"I do not know what Mr. Ericson did with the additional questionnaire in regard to tracing the proceeds of security issues. I inclose another copy of this questionnaire and I am positive that, in spite of the accounting difficulties in the way, the result can be obtained if the companies would only cooperate and insist that their accountants make a report even if certain figures are estimated. estimated.

"The trouble is that these wretched accountants, in dealing with figures involving many millions, won't make any report if their figures can not be reconciled with the books to the extent their figures can not be reconciled with the books to the extent of a few thousand dollars, but it does seem that we ought to be able to control these accountants."

Commission reports contain no explanation of this letter. In its own experience in "tracing the proceeds of security issues," the commission has found a large share of them in the pockets of banking and promoting interests. Part has been lost in customary but concealed bankers' discounts. Uniformly, however, the power companies' books purport to show that the full face value of the securities has been received by the companies and made a part of their assets. their assets.

The Memphis Power & Light Co., for example, issued $5,550,000 of bonds.

Electric Bond & Share Co. and an investment banking firm received, in commissions and profits on resale, $801,000. A discount to a New York bank accounted for $825,000 more. But the Memphis company, actually receiving only $3,863,000, entered upon its books as received the full $5,500,000.

It even reported to the Trade Commission, in the present investigation, the receipt of $5,500,000. But the Trade Commission, which nowadays takes nothing for granted, went to the holding company higher up and got the facts.<sup>20</sup>

SIX-YEAR BATTLE TO AIR POWER DEALS TRACED—RISE OF TOTTERING COMPANIES, REJUVENATED BY THE HOLDING FIRM METHOD, ALSO

By M. L. Ramsay

In its earlier Power Trust investigation half a dozen years ago, the Federal Trade Commission inquired into the "why" of the giant holding companies, as it is inquiring, on a far vaster scale, to-day.

Were these financial mammoths intended primarily to provide security for investors and better service and rates for consumers, as the power leaders thundered through every instrument of propaganda? Or were they primarily great profit-making machines, gouging the consumer?

REPORT ON AFFILIATE

Having neither funds nor men to make first-hand investigation as it is now doing, the commission asked the Electric Bond & Share Co. how its huge affiliate, American Gas & Electric Co., came to be formed.

Subsequently the commission reported to Congress:

"According to S. Z. Mitchell (then president and now chairman of Electric Bond & Share), the managers of these companies were not far-seeing as managers of public utilities; the companies had been unable to raise additional capital funds with which to provide additional facilities.

"The Electric Co. of America, he alleged, was drifting rapidly toward a receivership."

These statements the commission quoted afresh in a report on its present investigation. Then, without comment, it inserted a memorandum stating that the Electric Co. of America, in the three years preceding the deal in question, had increased its dividends from 5 to 7 per cent.

from 5 to 7 per cent.

Its surplus grew in the same period from $608,000 to $1,099,000. Its total assets increased substantially, and the earnings of its underlying companies jumped from $1,191,000 to $1,692,000.<sup>m</sup>

In the years after American Gas & Electric took over these companies and added greatly to them, it piled up profits of more than $53,000,000 on common stock, in which only $1,000,000 of cash ever was invested. Much of this profit went to the Electric Bond & Share Co. as owner of a large part of the common stock.<sup>22</sup>

A LATER VENTURE

A much later Electric Bond & Share enterprise, National Power & Light Co., was built around the American Cities Co. system, whose properties actually were in receivership. The Trade Commission's report on its first investigation attributed to Mitchell information that his company was urged to undertake this deal after other efforts to protect American Cities' investors had failed.<sup>23</sup>

But it did not disclose that Electric Bond & Share, according to the own minutes exemined in the present investigation had the

its own minutes examined in the present investigation, had furthered its plans by restricting the market for American Cities bonds.

The minutes read:

"He (Mitchell) reported that in order to better control the market in handling these matters he had arranged with a number of the control that it is a control to the market in handling these matters he had arranged with a number of the control to the contro of people who were seeking to buy American Cities collateral trust bonds to keep out of the market, with the understanding that the Electric Bond & Share Co. would give such persons an opportunity to participate at cost in its acquisitions of the securities of National Power & Light Co. through the aforesaid transactions, and he requested authority to carry out this arrangement." he requested authority to carry out this arrangement."

ALLOWED TO ACT

The authority was given.24

The authority was given. Moreover, the reports show, the chairman of the protective committee for the holders of these American Cities bonds was at that time assisting Electric Bond & Share in connection with the reorganization. He was paid $100,000. The commission sought to learn what other persons had helped in this deal, and received stock at bargain prices, as the minutes promised. It was stopped in its tracks by a secret code. Those receiving the stock were listed merely as "A. E. Smith account, No. 1, A. E. Smith account, No. 2," and so on. Their identity was never disclosed.

Their identity was never disclosed.

HOOVER HELPED POWER TRUST IN PROPAGANDA—50,000 COPIES OF ADDRESS PRAISING UTILITIES OBTAINED FROM COMMERCE DEPART-

By M. L. Ramsay

Four months after the Federal Trade Commission began its earlier Power Trust investigation—partly nullified by alleged Power

Trust falsification as well as by scant funds—Herbert Hoover credited the power industry with "glass pockets."

Mr. Hoover, then Secretary of Commerce, made this and other laudatory declarations in a keynote address to the National Electric Light Association, the "mouthpiece" of the companies under investigation."

ADDRESS EXPLOITED

His address was exploited by the industry not only through ordinary news and publicity channels but by a special distribution of 50,000 copies by the light association. The copies were obtained from the Department of Commerce.28

Mr. Hoover said his own department had made a study of the

Mr. Hoover said his own department had made a study of the effectiveness of State regulation. He continued:

"It is my belief from this investigation that the public service commissions, with very little just criticism, are proving themselves fully adequate to control the situation."

Praising the majority of the power leaders as belonging to "a new school of public understanding as to the responsibilities of big business to the people," Mr. Hoover added:

"The industry does not resent constant inquiry and constant public concern for public interest. Glass pockets are the safety of the industry as well as the public."

Three years later, in his Madison Square Garden speech of the 1928 campaign, Mr. Hoover again referred to "glass pockets" as

Within 12 hours before he spoke the Electric Bond & Share Co. had refused for the second time to disclose to the Government the profit in its fee system, allegedly misrepresented in the first investigation as non profit making.29

Regarding regulation, the Trade Commission received in evidence later a standard chart, offered by the power industry's own counsel. This showed that seven of the State commissions have no authority over power companies. Fifteen have no control over accounting, and 22 no authority over capitalization and securities.

Mr. Hoover's "glass pockets" idea has been publicly proclaimed by the power magnates through the years in slightly different language.

language

Soon after the present investigation began, H. T. Sands, then president of the light association, told its convention:

"We are anxious that the true facts be given to the public, that the people of the country may see and understand the make-up and habits of the organizations that furnish them the lights for their homes and the power for their factories."

LOCKED UP RECORDS

Sands is a vice president of Electric Bond & Share, which a few months later locked up its fee system records as "wholly private and confidential." It also kept secret its correspondence on "relations with Government, Federal, State, and municipal." Its subholding company. American Power & Light, yielded records revealing "write ups" of $68,000,000, or 124 per cent, in the capital of its subsidiaries. But records which would have shown whether there was more and earlier "water" underneath were refused. Another subholding company and the state of the subholding company and the state of the subholding company.

Another subholding company surrendered the records of a 30 per cent "write up" in Arkansas, but held out records of more than 100 per cent "write ups" in Louisiana and Mississippi. The commission made good by resort to income-tax returns.

Despite these incidents, the motive of Power Trust propaganda still is represented as a yearning to inform the public fully.

"OUR FREEDOM"-ARTICLE BY JOHN W. DODGE

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an editorial appearing in the Jacksonville Journal of March 8, entitled "Our Freedom," written by Judge John W. Dodge.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Jacksonville (Fla.) Journal, March 8, 1932]

OUR FREEDOM

By Judge John W. Dodge

Open, honest, unshackled utterance of opinion and thought, although resulting in fierce and hostile conflicts, is not only a right but a duty under our form of government, it is the only safe and permanent foundation thereof; without freedom of speech and thought we shall perish both as a nation and as organized and orderly government. There is progress.

The greatest problem which confronts America, yea, the world, is not debts, finances, economics, not even moral questions. It is the unfettered right and exercise of freedom of speech and of thought, the unshackled control and use of the various means and instrumentalities whereby freedom thereof may be exercised, such as the radio, press, books, news dispatches, and all other means and instrumentalities for conveying, disseminating, and distributing free speech and thought.

Controlled, subsidized, manipulated, and suppressed thought and speech in every form is a sure step toward slavery. Truth

Controlled, subsidized, manipulated, and suppressed thought and speech in every form is a sure step toward slavery. Truth disseminated will overcome error eventually.

John Stuart Mill once said: "Not the violent conflict between parts of the truth, but the quiet suppression of half of it, is the formidable evil; there is always hope when people are forced," or we might say permitted "to listen to both sides; it is when they attend only to one that errors harden into prejudices, and truth itself ceases to have the effect of truth by being exaggerated into falsehood."

The basis of more than half the first suppression of the same statement of the same suppression.

The basis of more than half the frauds perpetrated on us has been the false half truths uttered, the suppressed and subsidized other truths concealed by fraud, power, and influence exerted in business, finance, economics, morality, and even religion.

With more freedom, and laws to punish fraud, deceit, and the concealment of truth, we shall live forever, and in prosperity and happiness as a Nation. Licentiousness must be curbed; Machiavellian machinations must be uprooted and exposed; truth must not be crushed; fraud must be exposed and punished; facts must be heralded; therein lie our liberty and freedom.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

O. R. YORK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2335) for the relief of O. R. York, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike "$3,248.10" and insert "$1,562.63," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to credit the accounts of O. R. York, postmaster at High Point, N. C., with the sum of $1,562.63, or so much thereof as may be necessary to cover the shortage in his accounts resulting from the theft, embezzlement, or robbery of funds while in the custody of one William B. Clinard, then a postoffice clerk.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1856) to provide for the relief of farmers in any State by the making of loans to drainage districts, levee districts, levee and drainage districts, irrigation and/or similar districts, other than Federal reclamation projects, or to counties, boards of supervisors, and/or other political subdivisions and legal entities, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 36) to change the name of the island of "Porto Rico" to "Puerto Rico" was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

ADAM AUGUSTUS SHAFER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2062) for the relief of Adam Augustus Shafer, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the word "December." to strike out "5, 1905" and insert "1, 1906," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits on persons honorably discharged from the United States Navy Adam Augustus Shafer shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a warrant machinist. United States Navy, on December 1, 1906: Provided, That no pension, pay, or bounty shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT ROSS

The bill (S. 2059) for the relief of Albert Ross was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think we should have a brief explanation about that bill and a statement of the facts relating to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill was reported by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE].

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, Albert Ross was honorably discharged from the Marine Corps, thereby granting him the usual benefits and rights conferred upon men honorably discharged from the military service.

In 1895 Mr. Ross enlisted in the Marine Corps to serve for a period of five years; he served throughout the Spanish-American War on board the U. S. S. New York, and participated in all engagements in which that vessel took part. In 1900, upon the expiration of his 5-year enlistment, he was given an honorable discharge, with character "excellent." Two months after the expiration of his enlistment he reenlisted, served nine months under the second enlistment when he absented himself. He had a total service in the Marine Corps of approximately six years, under two enlistments, and received one honorable discharge and absented himself from one enlistment.

The committee is of the opinion that in view of his honorable service and record throughout the period of the Spanish-American War, and under a 5-year enlistment, during which time he actively participated in war, that he should be granted the benefits which this bill seeks to give him.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Nevada whether the report of the Secretary of the Navy was favorable or adverse.

Mr. ODDIE. Adverse.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. On page 2 of the report it is observed-

In view of the foregoing, the Navy Department recommends against the enactment of the bill.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the report was adverse, and the committee understood it that way; but there are several cases that the committee discussed and acted on in which much the same objection arose. In view of the fact, however, that this man and several others of similar standing served actively in the war and made good records at other times, the committee felt that the bill should be reported favorably.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether this was a case of complete desertion or just absence from one roll call?

Mr. ODDIE. Constructive desertion; absence from the roll call.

Mr. JONES. Was the man dismissed with a charge of desertion?

Mr. ODDIE. Some charges were brought against him. He did wrong in a technical way; but he made such a splendid record at other times that the committee thought he should be granted this relief.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, in all of these cases of correction of the record of a man, the department invariably reports adversely; but the committee, in going over these specific matters, determined that this was a case where clemency should be shown.

Mr. JONES. Is it the general rule of the committee that even though a man may have finished his first enlistment satisfactorily, a bill is favored to discharge him honorably when he deserts from his second enlistment?

Mr. HALE. No; but this is a case where the man served during a war; and on account of his having had a good war record, and having received one honorable discharge, we felt that we were willing to waive this charge of desertion.

Mr. JONES. I understand that; but am I to understand that it is the rule of the committee that though a man may serve honorably through his first enlistment, if he happened to be in a war and then enlists again and deserts in a week or two, he is given an honorable discharge?

Mr. HALE. We feel that he should be given some credit for having served his country during a war, Mr. President; and we are willing to forgive what he did later on.

Mr. JONES. That is the general rule of the committee?
Mr. HALE. We have done that in a great many cases;
yes. That is the general rule of the committee.

Mr. JONES. Well, I do not know that I shall make any objection.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Marine Corps, Albert Ross shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a private, United States Marine Corps, on June 18, 1901: Provided, That no pension, pay, or bounty shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

OTTO SCHLUTER

The bill (S. 2060) for the relief of Otto Schluter was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think this bill should be explained.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, this bill is very similar to the one we have just passed. The man had made an excellent war record. He served approximately seven years in the Navy under honorable conditions and throughout the period of the Spanish-American War. In view of his predominant honorable service the committee is of the opinion that he should be granted the benefits which this bill seeks to give him.

Mr. JONES. Does that have the disapproval of the de-

Mr. ODDIE. That has the disapproval of the department, the same as in the other case.

Mr. JONES. It is in accord with the general rule of the committee, however?

Mr. ODDIE. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is noted from the report that the sailor deserted on November 1, 1899, and continued in desertion until February 15, 1930. I am going to ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, before introducing this bill I made rather careful inquiry, and I reached the conclusion that it was a just and meritorious proposition. I hope, upon further consideration, there will be no objection to its passage.

I fully agree with the sentiment expressed by the Senator from Nevada, and I am aware also of the general attitude of the department. It may be termed a technical one in accordance with their sense of duty; but we are the legislative branch of the Government, in part, and in matters of this character I do think it is a wise as well as a just policy to recognize the long and patriotic service of men in Army and Navy, even though thereafter they may be guilty of some infraction of the law. So I hope that when the matter comes up again the Senate will consent to the passage of this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Arkansas if he will not withdraw his opposition to this bill? Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let the bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ROSCOE MEADOWS

The bill (S. 2375) for the relief of Roscoe Meadows was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, what are the facts in regard to this matter?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill was reported by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, this is a bill that was considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs at the last session, recommended favorably, and passed by the Senate at that time. The committee have again reported the bill favorably.

It seems that this officer went in as a chaplain, and enlisted first as though he were in the regular Navy; but it was afterward held that he was merely on probation for a commission as lieutenant. After his retirement—and he is now drawing compensation for 40 per cent disability-on account of technicalities that were considered by the Comptroller General it was held that he was not entitled to retirement pay as a regular naval officer. Then the question came up about his having compensation as an emergency naval officer. The Veterans' Bureau held that he was entitled to compensation as an emergency officer, and he is now drawing his compensation. What this bill seeks to do is to allow him to have his retirement pay. It is purely a technicality, I think, that deprives him of that privilege. He has a disability of 40 per cent, and served two and a half years as a chaplain in the Navy.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that he allow this measure to go over, because all matters dealing with individual rights under the emergency officers' retirement laws have been considered by the Finance Committee. If there is not any danger of this bill establishing a precedent contrary to the policy laid down by that committee, I think the bill should pass; but I suggest that the bill be passed over for the time being, in order that the Finance Committee may consider if it contemplates the adoption of a policy that may be a precedent that will be followed in other cases where special bills are introduced.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I might state to the Senator from Massachusetts that I know this gentleman, and I know something about this bill. It had very careful consideration before the committee last year. I do not think it establishes any new policy.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the trouble with a good many of these bills is that once one special act is passed it opens the door to the introduction of a great many other special bills. This may be an isolated case, and there may be no danger of establishing any precedent, but one of the things we have had to consider very seriously in the subcommittee of the Finance Committee dealing with individual veterans' cases has been the danger of establishing a precedent that would permit hundreds of other applicants through special bills to receive the benefit of a special act if the precedent is once established. I think the bill ought to go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, before the Senator from Massachusetts asks that the bill go over—

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I withhold the request.

Mr. BLACK. Will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield to the Senator from Alabama. He is probably more familiar with the facts than I am.

Mr. BLACK. Before the Senator asks that the bill go over, I think he will find that it does not establish any precedent; that it is a bill, wholly upon its own merits, to correct a situation in which a man found himself by reason of being technically placed in an erroneous classification. My understand is that it applies to nobody else.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I shall be very glad to consider that aspect of the matter. I ask that it go over for the day.

Mr. BLACK. I should be glad if the Senator would permit it to be passed without objecting, with the understanding that he will look into it to-day or to-morrow, and if there is any danger of its being a precedent it can be agreed that it will be reconsidered.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think it ought to go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2914) to authorize appropriations to pay in part the liability of the United States to the Indian pueblos herein named, under the terms of the act of June 7, 1924, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DILL. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1153) to provide for the incorporation of credit unions within the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I have objected to this bill two or three times. I am seeking some amendments that I hope will clear up some difficulties with reference to the legislation; and I hope it will be satisfactory to let it go over once more.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I hope by the time the calendar is considered again the Senator will be able to present his amendments.

Mr. DICKINSON. I expected to have the amendments by the early part of this week, but I have not them to-day. I did not expect the bill to be called.

Mr. CAPPER. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Iowa if his amendments refer to the provisions relating to deposits?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Mr. BLAINE. I have all of those amendments, I may say to the Senator. They are very simple and very brief.

Mr. DICKINSON. I have submitted them to parties interested, and I wanted to get their approval of them first, so I have not them in my hands now. I am familiar with what they are supposed to cover; but there is another amendment with reference to the authority of the comptroller. I wonder if the Senator has that?

Mr. BLAINE. I think I have it. If the Senator desires to present the amendments relating to credit unions receiving deposits, my understanding is that those interested in this legislation have no objection to striking out that provision. I was inquiring if that satisfied the Senator.

Mr. DICKINSON. It was that provision and one other provision to which the amendments related. I should like to have the Senator let the matter go over until I have time to check these amendments through, and then I think there will be no trouble about it.

Mr. BLAINE. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CAPT. JACOB M. PEARCE, UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1003) for the relief of Capt. Jacob M. Pearce, United States Marine Corps, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment to strike out lines 3 to 8, inclusive, on page 1, and to insert: "That the President is authorized to appoint Capt. Jacob M. Pearce, United States Marine Corps, after qualification by examination, a major in the United States Marine Corps, with rank and position on the common list for promotion as such immediately after Maj. Thomas Eugene Bourke, United States Marine Corps," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint Capt. Jacob M. Pearce, United States Marine Corps, after qualification by examination, a major in the United States Marine Corps, with rank and position on the common list for promotion as such immediately after Maj. Thomas Eugene Bourke, United States Marine Corps: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to entitle Capt. Jacob M. Pearce, United States Marine Corps, to any back pay, allowance, or other emoluments in this permanent rank.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE EDWIN GODWIN

The bill (S. 1009) for the relief of George Edwin Godwin was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask who introduced this bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill was introduced and reported by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings].

Mr. McNARY. In the absence of the author of the bill, I ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ACCEPTANCE OF FOREIGN DECORATIONS

The bill (S. 1469) to authorize certain officers of the United States Navy and Marine Corps to accept such decorations, orders, and medals as have been tendered them by foreign governments in appreciation of services rendered was announced as next in order.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed], who is unable to be in attendance to-day, I ask that this bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PRINTING OF MOONEY-BILLINGS REPORT

The resolution (S. Res. 166) to print the pamphlets entitled "Draft of Mooney-Billings Report" and "Appendix Containing Official Documents" was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, it seems that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings] submitted minority views on this resolution, and as he is not here I ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

COMPENSATION AND MILEAGE OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

The bill (S. 2494) to amend section 4 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, passed and approved March 4, 1925, relating to the compensation of Members of and Delegates to Congress was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That bill was adversely reported.

Mr. KING. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

The bill (S. 2495) to repeal section 17 of the act passed and approved July 28, 1866, relating to mileage of Members of Congress, which had been reported adversely from the Committee on Civil Service, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I desire to inquire what became of Order of Business 251?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution went over.

Mr, BORAH. May I ask what was done with reference to Order of Business 252, Senate bill 2494?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That was indefinitely postponed on motion of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. King].

Mr. KING. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. BORAH. I thought the Senator from Utah asked that it go over.

Mr. KING. I did not know that was the bill. I supposed it was the Mooney-Billings resolution. I have no objection to that bill, and I withdraw the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed will be reconsidered.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this, and the bill following on the Calendar, which has been adversely reported, of course, we can not dispose of now under the rule under which we are proceeding, and I ask that Senate bill 2494 may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over. Does the Senator make the same request with respect to Senate bill 2495?

Mr. BORAH. I make the same request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That bill will be passed over.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT

The bill (S. 95) to amend the second paragraph of section 6 of the civil service retirement act of May 29, 1930 (relating to persons retired for disability), was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Utah whether he will not withdraw his suggestion that that go over, because it grows out of several acute cases, particularly of civilian employees in the Military Establishment, who, having been retired by reason of disability arising from nervous breakdowns, subsequently, after medical treatment and a year or two of rest, have fully recovered? There is no provision under the law by which they may be reinstated. Several of them have been reinstated, but the reinstatements had to take place without a specific provision of law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have understood that there was a general bill to be offered changing and modifying in some respects the present retirement act.

Mr. MOSES. That is true, but it does not apply to this class of reinstatements.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this is a very worthy bill, and I hope the Senator will allow it to pass.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

Without objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Civil Service with an amendment, on page 2, line 6, after the word "made," to insert the words "but nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the removal or transfer of any person employed by the department at the time such appointment is made, nor to authorize the creation of any new office or position in the department," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of section 6 of the civil service retirement act of May 29, 1930, is hereby amended by striking out the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"If an annuitant retired under this section shall recover before reaching retirement age, and be restored to an earning capacity which would permit him to be appointed to some appropriate position fairly comparable in compensation to the position occupied by him at the time of his retirement, he shall be appointed to such a position in the department of the Government in which he served at the time of his retirement as soon as practicable after the date of the medical examination showing such recovery, and payment of the annuity shall be continued until such appointment is made; but nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the removal or transfer of any person employed by the department at the time such appointment is made, nor to authorize the creation of any new office or position in the department. Upon completion of such medical examination, notice thereof shall be sent to the appointing power of the department in which the annuitant served at the time of his retirement."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REINSTATEMENT OF MIDSHIPMEN

The bill (S. 3051) to reinstate Lawrence L. Myatt and Miller S. Burgin as midshipmen in the United States Naval Academy was announced as next in order.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, in the absence of the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed], I ask that this bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

HOSPITAL ON CROW INDIAN RESERVATION

The bill (S. 276) for the construction and equipment of a hospital on Crow Indian Reservation was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs whether his committee considered this item; and if so, why it was not included in the Interior Department appropriation bill?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this is a bill which was introduced by the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler]. There is no question but that there is need for this building. The Indian Bureau, however, felt that there were so many more urgent requests than this one appears to be, and in view of the fact that there was a shortage of money, they would not put it in their regular bill, and they have reported against these measures. The Senator from Montana is very anxious to have action on it.

Mr. JONES. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

HOSPITAL ON BLACKFEET INDIAN RESERVATION

The bill (S. 2987) providing for the construction and equipment of a hospital upon the Blackfeet Indian Reservation in the State of Montana was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

INCREASE OF THE UNITED STATES NAVY

The bill (S. 51) to authorize the building up of the United States Navy to the strength permitted by the Washington and London naval treaties was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ROBERT SMITH WATSON AND WILLIAM L. V. WATSON

The bill (S. 140) to extend certain benefits to Robert Smith Watson and William La Velle Watson, which had been reported adversely from the Committee on Finance, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move that that bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

WALTER S. ROGERS

The bill (S. 505) for the relief of Walter S. Rodgers, which had been reported adversely from the Committee on Finance, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that that bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this bill proposes to give some relief to an ex-service man. The committee has reported adversely upon it. There being no chance at this session to get this relief, I have no objection to the bill being indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

HARVEY WILSON

The bill (S. 1835) granting disability allowance to Harvey Wilson, which had been reported adversely from the Committee on Finance, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I ask that that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BENJAMIN F. JOHNSON

The bill (S. 2826) for the relief of Benjamin F. Johnson, which had been reported adversely from the Committee on Finance, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I move that that bill be indefinitely post-poned.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

LANDING OF PONCE DE LEON

The bill (S. 3014) to provide for the commemoration of the landing of Ponce de Leon in the State of Florida was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bingham] objected to the bill at the last call of the calendar and specified what he conceived to be a very sound reason for its going over for the present. I suggest, in his absence, that the bill be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

AMENDMENT OF WORLD WAR VETERANS' ACT

The bill (S. 1603) to amend section 19 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, which had been reported adversely from the Committee on Finance, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I move that that bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

PUBLIC-SCHOOL BUILDING ON THE COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION

The bill (S. 3323) to provide funds for cooperation with the school district at Nespelem, Wash., in the construction of a public-school building to be available to Indian children of the Colville Indian Reservation was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Pennsylvania is not in the Chamber at present, and in his absence I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SECOND POLAR YEAR PROGRAM

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 182) authorizing an appropriation to defray the expenses of participation by the United States Government in the Second Polar Year Program, August 1, 1932, to August 31, 1933, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 2377 be indefinitely postponed, and that House Joint Resolution 182 be passed. I find no report accompanying the joint resolution, but there is a report on the Senate bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator is asking about Order of Business 350, House Joint Resolution 182?

Mr. MOSES. Yes.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator ask that that be passed over?

Mr. MOSES. No; I want to have it passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator explain why it should be passed?

Mr. MOSES. Yes. It is a cooperative effort among some 50 nations of the world to carry on a series of meteorological observations at certain designated points within the Arctic and Antarctic regions for the purpose of observing the effect of certain electrical impulses in the atmosphere which affect adversely radio communication, and telegraphic and telephonic communication. These observations take place once in 50 years.

Mr. McKELLAR. Can we not call on our friend, Doctor Cook, to give us the facts upon that subject?

Mr. MOSES. We might, but I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that inasmuch as this has to be done only once in 50 years, if he now will withdraw any objection he may have to the joint resolution under discussion, 50 years hence, when he is still a leading Member of this body, he can take the question up again.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, when the Senate bill was reached before on the calendar, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] asked to have the matter go over.

Mr. MOSES. I think the Senator from Idaho must have done so because of the notation on the calendar in regard to Order of Business 350.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think he did, but he wanted to consider both measures, I suppose.

Mr. MOSES. If House Joint Resolution 182 is passed, the subject will be disposed of, whereas if the Senate bill had been dealt with, there would have been the question of the substitution of one for the other. The matter was under consideration in the Committee on Foreign Relations more than once, it was very actively pressed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess], who is not here now, but there are some other members of the Committee on Foreign Relations who are on the floor, who will corroborate what I am saying about this highly meritorious scientific measure.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can see that the measure has

Mr. MOSES. It has great merit.

Mr. McKELLAR. But I wonder why it is necessary to create a bureau here in Washington in order to help it along? Could we not pay the expenses of those delegates without organizing a bureau to do it?

Mr. MOSES. I do not understand that the proposal is to create a bureau. My understanding is that all this work is to be done by officials who are now in Washington engaged in scientific work for the Government and who are to be assigned to do this work. The money which is to be appropriated is to defray the expenses of locating and maintaining the observation stations, and the chief observation station which is to be located by the Government of the United States is that famous station at Fort Conger, which was the base of the Greely expedition 50 years ago.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will look at lines 5 and 6, he will see this language: "An appropriation of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized for personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere."

I can understand how we would have to have some one at Fort Conger, but I do not understand why it will be necessary to establish a bureau here to look after this matter.

Mr. MOSES. I think the Senator is in error about the establishment of a bureau.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Washington, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, is present and will verify what I say that when an authorization of this kind is made, the next thing we get is a list of personal services required and the amounts that will have to be paid to an organization here in the city of Washington.

Mr. MOSES. Fifty years from now it will recur again. Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; it will recur next year, because this bureau, when once established, will never, never be interfered with.

Mr. MOSES. The exception proves the rule, of course; but this was done in 1883 and has not been done since.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not going to object to it myself, but I will say to the Senator that if a request for appropriation comes in to pay these men next year, I shall do my best to defeat the appropriation, and I hope the Senator will join me.

Mr. MOSES. If the fortunes of politics are propitious for the Senator from New Hampshire, he will pledge to the Senator from Tennessee his cooperation next year.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, where are the persons to come from who are to make these observations?

Mr. MOSES. My understanding is that they are to be detailed from the Naval Observatory and other services of the Government, including officers of the Army. At the time of the former expedition the force was under the command of General Greely, who was then a lieutenant in the Signal Corps.

Mr. JONES. This does not create a new bureau at all.

Mr. MOSES. No; I do not understand that it does. There may be personal services required here necessarily of statisticians, clerks, and stenographers, or something like that, but I understand it will create nothing in the line of offices, as we understand that term.

Mr. McKELLAR. Who will have charge of the work?

Mr. MOSES. I think it is to be done under the auspices of the Naval Observatory. The report does not state just who will do it. The last one, 50 years ago, was carried on under the auspices of the Army.

Mr. McKELLAR. Lieutenant Greely was a naval officer.

was he not?

Mr. MOSES. No; Lieutenant Greely was a lieutenant in the Signal Corps.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is right about that.

Mr. JONES. It authorizes the expenditure of how much? Mr. MOSES. Of $30,000. One can readily understand that in establishing and maintaining these stations the money will nearly all be utilized out in the field. The amount of money utilized for services in the District of Columbia will be a very small fraction of the $30,000.

Mr. JONES. I suppose most of the men who will be connected with it will be Government officials who are now drawing salaries?

Mr. MOSES. Oh, yes.

Mr. JONES. This is probably for the payment of the expense of the stations in the field?

Mr. MOSES. Absolutely. My understanding is that no new offices, in the regular understanding of that term, are to be created.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 2377 will be indefinitely postponed.

WILLIAM D. BARBEE

The bill (S. 1836) for the relief of William D. Barbee, which had been reported adversely from the Committee on Finance, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I note that Senate bill 1836, Senate bill 1879, Senate bill 1881, Senate bill 1884, and Senate bill 1886 have been adversely reported by the Committee on Finance. I have not had opportunity to examine the reports, and I ask that those several bills may

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills enumerated by the Senator from California will be passed over.

ABRAM G. O'BLENESS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 326) for the relief of Julia Kerr O'Bleness, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$5,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$2,500"; in line 6, after the word "to," to strike out the name "Julia Kerr O'Bleness" and insert in lieu thereof the name "Abram G. O'Bleness"; in line 8, to strike out "for" and insert "on account of"; in line 9, after the word "received," to insert the words "by his wife, Julia Kerr O'Bleness, now deceased, on," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $2,500 to Abram G. O'Bleness, of Marietta, Ohio, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States on account of injuries received by his wife, Julia Kerr O'Bleness, now deceased, on November 6, 1928, caused by being struck down by a revolving door in the Federal building at Marietta, Ohio.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, this is the payment of approximate actual expenses made necessary on account of an accident to Mrs. O'Bleness, which occurred in a revolving door in the post-office building at Marietta. Mrs. O'Bleness has since died, and the bill has been amended so as to pay the sum of $2,500 to her husband.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Abram G. O'Bleness."

RELIEF OF UNEMPLOYMENT

The bill (S. 3696) to provide for cooperation by the Fedhardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. It is obvious that that bill can not be considered under the 5-minute rule, and, as the Senator who introduced the bill is not present, I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

REIMBURSEMENT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA

The bill (S. 1317) for the relief of the State of California, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the net balance due the State of California of $6,462,145.33 as certified by the Comptroller General of the United States, August 14, 1930, and printed in Senate Document No. 220, Seventy-first Congress, third session, the same to be accepted in full settlement of all advances and expenditures and interest thereon made by said State.

DES LACS LAKE, N. DAK., DAM

The bill (H. R. 5866) to authorize the construction of a dam across Des Lacs Lake, N. Dak., was considered by the

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, when that bill was reached on the preceding call of the calendar I made some inquiry concerning the purpose of the dam, or the work of construction. I observed that it provided that it should not be utilized to develop waterpower or to generate hydroelectric energy. I was therefore curious to know for what purpose the dam was to be erected, and I was told by the Senator from North Dakota, who does not happen to be in the Chamber at this time, that it is for the purpose of conserving water for a municipal supply. With that understanding I have no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Montana whether this is what might be called an interstate

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand not. I take it that it relates to public lands.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 8397) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. That is the unfinished business. Let it go

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

The bill (S. 3377) to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution and form a government for the Philippine Islands, to provide for the independence of the same, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

The bill (H. R. 9642) to authorize supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction with a view to increasing employment, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bingham] desires to make a statement regarding this bill. It can not be done in the time limit to-day under the 5-minute rule. I ask that the bill go over but intend to call it up for consideration at the first opportunity. I am cooperating with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] in this matter. We hope to arrange for a definite time to be fixed for action on the bill in the very near future.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, this is an emergency measure. It has passed the House of Representatives. It is highly important that it receive early consideration. I wonder if it is not possible to arrive at some unanimous-consent agreement for a time to consider it?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator eral Government with the several States in relieving the from Connecticut [Mr. Bingham] is in charge of the opposition to the bill. He is presently called away from the Chamber on official business. The program prepared by the steering committee does not include the bill, and probably there will not be a new program arranged until after the conclusion of the consideration of the bills which have been considered by the steering committee for the purpose of being brought to the attention of the Senate.

I observe the presence of the Senator from Connecticut now, and I refer the matter to him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon objection of the Senator from Nevada the bill has been passed over. The only question before the Senate is the tentative suggestion of the Senator from Arizona to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement for a time at which to consider the bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, does the Senator from Connecticut think it possible to enter into an agreement to fix a time to vote upon the emergency highway construction bill?

Mr. BINGHAM. When does the Senator wish to take it up?

Mr. HAYDEN. Suppose we say at 2.30 p. m. on Thursday next.

Mr. BINGHAM. To take it up and consider it then?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; to dispose of the bill and all amendments thereto. I think every Senator has made up his mind how he will vote on the bill. There will not be a long debate on the subject.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, why could not the leaders agree to adjourn some day the latter part of the week and give two hours to the consideration of the bill before 2 o'clock on the following day? Then the Senator from Connecticut could use as much of the time as he desired to discuss it. Would not that be a better way than to try to fix a date to consider the bill irrespective of the program of the steering committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair suggest that both party leaders are absent from the Chamber at the moment. It is doubtful, in the opinion of the Chair, whether an agreement could be reached in their absence.

Mr. McNARY. It would be impossible to reach such an agreement in view of the very long program that has been arranged by the steering committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Might we not adjourn some day and would not the Senator from Connecticut agree to take it up during the morning hour on the following day?

Mr. McNARY. At the present time no agreement can be made and I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called for. The clerk will state the next order of business on the calendar.

ALLOTMENTS TO HEIRS OF DECEASED INDIANS

The bill (S. 3508) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposition and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the leasing of allotments, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910, as amended, was considered. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

Be it enacted, etc., That when any Indian to whom an allotment of land has been made, or may hereafter be made, dies before the expiration of the trust period and before the issuance of a fee-simple patent, without having made a will disposing of said allotment as hereinafter provided, the Secretary of the Interior, upon notice and hearing, under such rules as he may prescribe, shall ascertain the legal heirs of such decedent, and his decision thereon shall be final and conclusive. If the Secretary of the Interior decides the heir or heirs of such decedent competent to manage their own affairs, he shall issue to such heir or heirs a patent in fee for the allotment of such decedent; if he shall decide one or more of the heirs to be incompetent, he may, in his discretion, cause such lands to be sold: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior shall find that the lands of the decedent are capable of partition to the advantage of the heirs, he may cause the shares of such as are competent, upon their petition, to be set aside and patents in fee to be issued to them therefor. All sales of lands allotted to Indians authorized by this or any other act shall be made under such rules and regulations and upon such terms as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and he shall require a deposit of 10 per cent of the purchase price at the time of the sale. Should the purchaser fall to comply with the terms of sale prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, the amount so paid shall be forfeited; in case the balance of the purchase price is to be paid on such deferred payments, all payments made, together with all interest paid on such deferred installments, shall be so forfeited for failure to comply with the terms of the sale. All forfeitures shall inure to the benefit of the heirs. Upon payment of the purchase price in full, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be issued to the purchaser patent in fee for such land: Provided, That the proceeds of the sale of inherited lands shall be paid to such heir or heirs as may be competent and held in trust subject to use and expenditure during the trust period for such heir or heirs as may be incompetent as their respective interests shall appear:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to issue a certificate of competency, upon application therefor, to any Indian, or in case of his death to his heirs, to whom a patent in fee containing restrictions on alienation has been or may hereafter be issued, and such certificate shall have the effect of removing the restrictions on alienation contained in such patent: Provided further, That hereafter any United States Indian agent, superintendent, or other disbursing agent of the Indian Service may deposit Indian moneys, individual or tribal, coming into his hands as custodian, in such bank or banks as he may select: Provided, That the bank or banks so selected by him shall first execute to the said disbursing agent a bond, with approved surety, in such amount as will properly safeguard the funds to be deposited. Such bonds shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, after ascertainment of the legal heirs, what provision is made for disposition of the estate? Does it pass automatically to the heirs so discovered?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, under the old law when estates were sold and payments were made on the installment plan and the purchaser failed for some reason to fulfill the contract and make all the payments, all of the payments made except the first 25 per cent were refunded to the purchaser. This measure would change that part of the law so that the purchaser would forfeit all the payments made if he failed to carry out the contract.

Mr. KING. What disposition is made of those estates which pass to the heirs at the decease of the ancestor, with respect to the burdens placed upon such estate under the irrigation systems which have been conducted by the Federal Government? I suppose it does not relieve the heirs of any obligation that rested upon their ancestor.

Mr. FRAZIER. As I understand it, it does not.

Mr. KING. Of course, the Senator knows that under the system which prevails the Indians have had imposed upon them, in violation of the law, great burdens which they can not pay, charges which are not reimbursible, but which have been held reimbursable, and the lands of the Indians under many irrigation projects are loaded down with debt in excess of the value of the lands.

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not think this bill has anything to do with that problem at all.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 439) for the relief of A. C. Messler Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

EMPLOYMENT OF ATTORNEYS FOR CHIPPEWA INDIANS, MINNESOTA

The bill (S. 2364) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to extend or renew the contracts of employment of the attorneys employed to represent the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota in litigation arising in the Court of Claims under the act of May 14, 1926 (44 Stat. 555), was considered. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized to renew the contracts of employment heretofore entered into with the attorneys employed to represent the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota in the suits instituted in the Court of Claims under authority of the act of May 14, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 555), as amended, on a year-to-year basis but not to exceed three years, as the Secretary of the Interior may deem advisable and for the best interests of said Indians. Said attorneys shall be entitled to such compensation for their services, in addition to that heretofore paid to them, as the Court of Claims in its discretion may allow from any amount recovered in any such suit, discretion may allow from any amount recovered in any such sult, which compensation shall not exceed the sum of 5 per cent of any such recovery for the attorney for the Chippewa of White Earth Reservation and a like compensation for the firm of attorneys employed by the other bands of Chippewa Indians of Minnesota: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior shall continue to pay out of tribal funds belonging to the Chippewa Indians all actual and necessary expenses incurred by said attorneys in such litigation as authorized by and subject to the limitations contained in the act of April 11, 1928 (45 Stat. 423): And provided further, That the compensation and expenses of the attorney or firm of attorneys employed under existing law to represent the Red Lake attorneys employed under existing law to represent the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians of Minnesota shall be paid out of any money to the credit of said Indians in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOUNT M'KINLEY NATIONAL PARK, ALASKA

The bill (H. R. 6485) to revise the boundary of the Mount McKinley National Park, in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the boundary of the Mount McKinley National Park is hereby changed so as to read as follows:

National Park is hereby changed so as to read as follows:

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 5 OF CRIMINAL CODE

The bill (S. 2682) to amend section 5 of the Criminal Code was considered. The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 2, line 8, to strike out "thereof;" and insert "thereof," so as to

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of the act of March 4, 1909, chapter 321 (sec. 5, title 18, U. S. C.), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 5. Every citizen of the United States, whether actually resident or abiding within the same, or in any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or in any foreign country, who, without the permission or authority of the Government, directly or indirectly, commences or carries on any verbal or written correspondence or intercourse with any foreign government or any officer or agent thereof, with an intent to influence the measures or conduct of any foreign government or of any officer or agent thereof, in relation to any disputes or controversies with the United States, or to defeat the measures of the Government of the United States; and every person, being a citizen of or resident within the United States or in any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and not duly authorized, who counsels, advises, or assists in any such correspondence with such intent, shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than three years; but nothing in so,000 and imprisoned not more than three years; but nothing in this section shall be construed to abridge the right of a citizen to apply, himself or his agent, to any foreign government or the agents thereof for redress of any injury which he may have sustained from such government or any of its agents or subjects."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSERVATION OF NATURAL RESOURCES

The concurrent resolution, S. Con. Res. 6, was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Whereas under the inspiring leadership of President Cleveland it became the settled policy of this Nation to conserve its natural resources; and

Whereas the establishment of an American conservation week will have the desired effect of bringing the American people to realize, in the words of that great conservationist, President Roosevelt, that "the conservation of our natural resources and their proper use constitute the fundamental problem which undertained to the conservation of the conservation where conservation week will have been conservation of the conserva lies almost every other problem of our national life": Therefore Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is re quested to issue each year a proclamation designating the first week in April as American Conservation Week and inviting the people of the United States to observe that week in schools, churches, museums, parks, and other suitable places, with ceremonies appropriate to the occasion.

The preamble was agreed to.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2190) to amend section 300 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance adversely, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The bill may go over.

AMENDMENT OF INSURANCE CODE OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 3584) to require all insurance corporations formed under the provisions of Chapter XVIII of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia to maintain their principal offices and places of business within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered. The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, on page 2, line 4, to strike out the words "all of," and on page 2, line 8, after the word "obtained," to insert:

Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to apply to the books, records, and files of any such corporation except in a branch-office agency of such corporation, which books, records, and files relate solely to the business transacted by said branch-office agency.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That Chapter XVIII of the Code of Law for

Be it enacted, etc., That Chapter XVIII of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia be, and the same hereby is, amended by adding thereto a new section, which shall provide—

"That hereafter any corporation formed or organized under the provisions of Chapter XVIII of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia to engage in an insurance business either under the provisions of Subchapter V or Subchapter XII thereof shall maintain its principal office and place of business within said District and shall keep its books, records, and files therein and shall not remove from said District either its principal office and place of business or its books, records, or files without the permission of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia first had and obtained: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be constructed to apply to the books, records, and files of any such corporation kept in a branch-office agency of such corporation, which books, records, and files relate solely to the business transacted by said branch-office agency.

acted by said branch-office agency.

"Any corporation violating any of the provisions hereof shall forthwith forfeit its charter, which forfeiture shall operate as a revocation of its license to do business within said District.

"Any officer, agent, or employee of any such corporation who shall violate any of the provisions hereof shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall pay a fine of not less than $300 or be imprisoned for not more than 90 days, or both such fine and imprisonment. All prosecutions hereunder shall be upon information filed in the police court of the District of Columbia in the name of the District of Columbia by the corporation counsel thereof or any of his assistants.'

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSERVATION OF RAINFALL

The bill (S. 2290) for the conservation of rainfall in the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah to withhold his objection for the moment? The bill carries no appropriation. It merely calls for a study.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is necessary for the Senator from Utah to withdraw his objection.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] believe it is necessary, in view of studies being made by committees or commissions or bureaus of the Government now, to enact this legislation?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, my attention was diverted for the moment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. All the bill does is to provide for a study of the conservation of rainfall in the United States. It merely gives the present program of study the force of law and does not carry any appropriation.

Mr. McNARY. The committee after very deliberate consideration reported the bill unanimously. A similar measure was reported out last year by the committee and passed the

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to develop effective methods for the control of rainfall, for the prevention of erosion of farm, pasture, and woodlands, and for the conservation of the soil fer-tility of fields, pastures, and watersheds; to minimize the depositinty of fields, passates and the overwash of inert sands and gravels upon farm lands; to reduce the discharge of water and silt into streams from fields, pastures, and watersheds; and, in general, to aid in developing the best means of controlling, con-serving, and utilizing the rain water that falls upon the land, the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to make such studies and investigations as he may deem necessary to carry out these purposes.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 15) to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of the Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals, in the State of Alabama, to authorize the letting of the Muscle Shoals properties under certain conditions, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. In the absence of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], I ask that the joint resolution may be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over.

MEDITERRANEAN FRUIT FLY

The bill (S. 266) to provide for an investigation and report of losses resulting from the campaign for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruit fly was announced as next

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, on the last call of the calendar this bill went over at my request. Personally I am still out of harmony with the legislation. The amendment proposed by the committee would save $40,000 of the appropriation, but would still spend $10,000. The legislation still creates another bureau. The legislation, while it relieves actually from liability involving the receipt of claims for losses, nevertheless obviously anticipates ultimate claims for losses and their assumption by the Government.

But I heartily sympathize with the statement made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] last week when he indicated his disappointment that any one Senator should hold up the legislation. If I am the only Senator in the Chamber in disagreement with the legislation, I decline to be put in that position. Therefore I shall not object at the moment if every other Senator in the Chamber is satisfied with the proposal.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am very grateful for the statement of the Senator from Michigan, and hope no one else may object.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, probably I should make a very brief statement. When the matter was proposed in the nature of an amendment to the Agricultural Department appropriation bill I invoked the rule, and properly it was held that it could not be incorporated in that measure. I told the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] that it might have early consideration by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry as a matter of legislation. The bill has been amended. Some language which the department found objectionable has been stricken out. The amount has been reduced to $10,000. I think it proper with the small amount of money that might be had for the purpose of making a survey, without any indication of liability on the part of the Federal Government. For that reason the committee unanimously reported the bill with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments, on page 2, line 11, to strike out "(2) receive claims for losses sustained by such persons in the State of Florida by reason of such campaign, supported by such proof as the board by regulation may prescribe; (3) report the facts and make findings upon such claims as to the amount of actual and necessary loss sustained; and (4)" and insert "and (2)"; in line 17, to strike out "February" and insert "October"; in line 18, after the word "survey," to strike out "and its findings in respect of claims for such losses"; in line 22, to strike out 'March 1" and insert "December 12"; and on page 3, line 15, to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$10,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That a board is hereby created, to be known as the Mediterranean Fruit Fly Board, to be composed of five individuals, to be appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture, two of whom shall be representatives of the Department of Agriculture (one to be chairman of the board), two citizens of the State of Florida, and one man at large. Any vacancy occurring in the board shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. Each member of the board, other than members holding office under the State or Federal Government, shall receive compensation at the rate of $10 per day while actually employed on the business of the board. The board shall cease to exist upon transmitting its report under section 2 of this act.

2. The board is authorized and directed to (1) conduct a complete investigation and survey of all losses sustained by growers and farmers in the State of Florida resulting from the campaign to eradicate the Mediterranean fruit fly in such State, and (2) transmit to the Secretary of Agriculture not later than October 15, 1932, a report of the survey: Provided, That such report and finding shall serve as information only and not be binding on the Secretary of Agriculture or Congress. The Secretary of Agriculture shall not later than December 12, 1932, transmit such report of survey to Congress together with such recommendations as he may, in his judgment, deem advisable.

SEC. 3. The board may, with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, appoint and fix the compensation (without regard to the civil service laws and regulations or to the classification act of 1923, as amended) of such employees, and may, with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, make such expenditures, including expenditures for travel and subsistence expenses, for personal services at the seat of government and elsewhere, and for printing and binding, as are necessary for the efficient execution of its functions under this act. All expenses of the board shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the board and the Secretary of SEC. 4. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALLOCATION OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION FUNDS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 116) relating to the allocation of funds to the Secretary of Agriculture under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act was considered, the pending question being the amendment of the Senator from "purposes," to insert "which shall include summer fallowing in 1932 for the crop of 1933," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 2 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act relating to the allocation of funds to the Secretary of Agriculture for making loans or advances to farmers during the year 1932, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to advance to the Secretary of Agriculture for such purposes which shall in to the Secretary of Agriculture for such purposes, which shall include summer fallowing in 1932 for the crop of 1933, the total amount authorized to be allocated and made available to him under such section, irrespective of the amount of notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations of the corporation that may be substantial. outstanding.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I want to say preliminarily that I am very strongly in favor of the adoption of the amendment, but the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] stated that he wanted to be present when the matter came up for consideration. I have sent for him, as he was called from the Chamber a moment ago on official business. Unless the Senator from South Carolina will agree temporarily to pass it over, I must suggest the absence of a

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I want this disposed of today, because everyone recognizes that it is an emergency matter, and if it is not disposed of so as to permit the farmers to have the benefit of the appropriation, the whole opportunity will lapse.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] has just reentered the Chamber, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington, which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 9439) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the Judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

LITTLE TRUCKEE RIVER RESERVOIR

The bill (S. 3744) for the construction of a reservoir in the Little Truckee River, Calif., and for such dams and other improvements as may be necessary to impound the waters of Webber, Independence, and Donner Lakes, and for the further development of the water resources of the Truckee River, was considered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Oddie], in view of the depleted condition of the reclamation fund and its exhaustion, and the service having been compelled at the last session of Congress to appeal to the Treasury and having received an appropriation of $5,000,000, whether it is a propitious time to authorize further a new reclamation project calling for an appropriation of $750,000, and also calling for the Secretary to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, water rights, and to enter into contracts for such purposes?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, this is an authorization. The bill provides that nothing can be done about this matter until an agreement is made between certain water users on the Truckee River system in Nevada to repay the Government. It is an authorization. No money is to be appropriated under the terms of the bill at this time. When it comes time to ask for an appropriation that matter can be taken up. This is not strictly a new enterprise. It is for the completion and saving of the very first reclamation project under the law, the Newlands reclamation project. The passing of the bill will assist in the carrying out the agreement that is being worked out and that is practically completed between the three vital interests on that river system. It will be of great help if the bill can be passed.

Washington [Mr. Jones], on page 1, line 9, after the word | It is a question between the States of California and Nevada. It will benefit both States if the bill can be enacted into law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator accept an amendment, in lines 3 and 4, striking out the words "and directed "? I do not like the idea of directing the Interior Department, in view of the tremendous responsibilities resting upon that department.

Mr. ODDIE. I am willing to do that.

Mr. KING. I move that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the amendment be

The amendment of the Senator from Utah was, on page 1, lines 3 and 4, to strike out the words "and directed," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to provide for the construction of a reservoir in the Little Truckee River, State of California, and for such dams and other improvements as may be necessary to impound the waters of Webber, Independence, and Donner Lakes, and for the further development of the water resources of the Truckee River for the development of the water resources of the Truckee River for the irrigation of lands along the Truckee River in the State of Nevada and the Newlands reclamation project.

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby further authorized to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, such water rights, rights of way, and lands as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

No funds shall be expended under this act until a contract or contracts satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior shall be executed by an irrigation district or districts, or other agencies organized under State law, for the repayment of the sums expended for the purposes of this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from the special fund in the Treasury known as the reclamation fund the sum of $750,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of sum of $750,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JERRY O'SHEA

The bill (S. 3536) for the relief of Jerry O'Shea was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Jerry O'Shea, of Blackwater, N. Dak., the sum of $275 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for damages arising out of the destruction of his crops in August, 1930, by a herd of horses belonging to Indians of the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation.

REGULATION OF DISTRICT REAL-ESTATE BROKERS, ETC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2355) to define, regulate, and license real-estate brokers and realestate salesmen; to create a real-estate commission in the District of Columbia; to protect the public against fraud in real-estate transactions, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, on page 10, line 24, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,500," and on page 14, line 2, after the words "shall be," to strike out "$25" and insert "$15," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted etc.,

ENACTMENT AND PROHIBITION CLAUSE

SECTION 1. That on and after 90 days from the date of enactment of this act it shall be unlawful in the District of Columbia for any person, firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation to act as a real-estate broker or real-estate salesman, or to advertise or assume to act as such, without a license issued by the real estate commission of the District of Columbia.

The commission, with due regard to the paramount interest of the public, may require other reasonable proof of the honesty, truthfulness, and integrity of the applicant.

The commission is expressly vested with the power and authority to make and enforce any and all such reasonable rules and regulations connected with the application for any license as shall be deemed necessary to administer and enforce the provisions of this act. sions of this act.

PROCEDURE WHEN LICENSE IS REFUSED APPLICANT

SEC. 6. The commission, after an application in proper form has been filed, shall before refusing to issue a license set the application down for a hearing and determination as hereinafter provided in section 9.

DETAILS RELATING TO LICENSE

SEC. 7. The commission shall issue to each licensee a license in such form and size as shall be prescribed by the commission. Every license shall show the name and address of the licensee, and if licensee is a member or officer of a firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation, the full name and address of such firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation shall also be shown on said license. Licenses issued to real-estate salesmen shall in addition show the name and address of the real-estate broker by whom the said salesman is or will be employed. Each license shall have imprinted thereon the dress of the real-estate broker by whom the said salesman is or will be employed. Each license shall have imprinted thereon the seal of the commission, and in addition to the foregoing shall contain such matter as shall be prescribed by the commission. The license of each real-estate salesman shall be delivered or mailed to the real-estate broker by whom such real-estate salesman is employed and shall be kept in the custody and control of such broker. It shall be the duty of each real-estate broker to conspicuously display his license in his place of business.

At any time within six months, but not thereafter, after the issuance of an original license the commission may, upon its own motion, and shall, upon the verified complaint, in writing, of any person, provided such complaint, or such complaint together with evidence, documentary or otherwise, presented therewith, shall make out a prima facic case that the licensee is unworthy to hold such license, notify the licensee, in writing, that the question of his honesty, competency, truthfulness, and integrity will be reopened and determined de novo. Such written notice may be served by delivery thereof personally to the licensee or by mailing same by registered mail to the last known business address of the licensee. Thereupon the commission may require and procure further proof of the licensee's trustworthiness and competency, and if such proof shall not be satisfactory such license shall be recalled and shall thereafter be null and void. Upon the recall of any such license it shall be the duty of the licensee to surrender to the commission such license.

The fee for an original real-estate broker's license and every the commission such license.

The fee for an original real-estate broker's license and every renewal thereof shall be $15.

No fee shall be charged for any original license or renewal thereof issued to any firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation all of whose members or officers actively participating in the brokerage business thereof have been issued a broker's license.

The fee for an original real-estate salesman's license and every

The fee for an original real-estate salesman's license and every annual renewal thereof shall be $5.

Every license shall expire on the 1st day of July of each year, except that the original or initial licenses first issued under the provisions of this act shall expire on the 1st day of July, 1933, subject, however, to revocation as hereinbefore provided.

The commission shall issue a new license for each ensuing year, in the absence of any reason or condition which might warrant the refusal of the granting of a license, upon receipt of the written request of the applicant and the annual fee therefor, as herein required. The revocation of a broker's license shall automatically suspend every real-estate salesman's license granted to any person by virtue of his employment by the broker whose license has been revoked, pending a change of employer and the issuance of a new license. Such new license shall be issued without charge if granted during the same license year in which the original license is granted.

No person, firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation engaged in the business or acting in the capacity of a real-estate broker or a real-estate salesman within the District of Columbia shall bring or maintain any action in the courts of the District of Columbia for the collection of compensation for any services performed as a real-estate broker or a real-estate salesman or enforcement of any contract relating to real estate without alleging and proving that such person, firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation was a duly licensed real-estate broker or real-estate salesman at the time the alleged cause of action arose.

Every real-estate broker shall maintain a place of business in the District of Columbia. If a real-estate broker maintains more than one place of business within the District of Columbia, a duplicate license shall be issued to such broker for each branch office maintained; and there shall be no fee charged for any such duplicate license

Notice in writing shall be given to the commission by each licensee of any change of principal business location, whereupon the commission shall issue a new license for the unexpired period without charge. The change of business location without notification to the commission shall automatically cancel the license theretofore issued.

When any real-estate salesman shall be discharged or shall terminate his employment with the real-estate broker by whom he is employed, it shall be the duty of such real-estate broker to immediately deliver or mail by registered mail to the commission such real-estate salesman's license. The real-estate broker shall, at the time of delivering or mailing such real-estate salesman's at the time of delivering or mailing such real-estate salesman's license to the commission, address a communication by registered mail to the last-known residence address of such real-estate salesman, which communication shall advise such real-estate salesman that his license has been delivered or mailed to the commission. A copy of such communication to the real-estate salesman shall accompany the license when mailed or delivered to the commission. It shall be unlawful for any real-estate salesman to perform any of the acts contemplated by this act, either directly or indirectly, under authority of said license from and after three days following such delivery or mailing of the said license by said broker to the commission.

There shall be no additional fee for the reissuance of a salesman's license necessitated by the change of employers, nor shall such change work a revocation or require a renewal of the salesman's bond.

SUSPENSION OR REVOCATION OF LICENSE FOR CAUSES ENUMERATED

Sec. 8. The commission may, upon its own motion, and shall, upon the verified complaint in writing of any person, provided such complaint or such complaint together with evidence, documentary or otherwise, presented in connection therewith, make out a prima facie case, investigate the conduct of any real-estate broker or real-estate salesman, or any person who shall assume to act in either such capacity within the District of Columbia, and shall have the power to suspend or to revoke any license issued under the provisions of this act, at any time where the issued under the provisions of this act, at any time where the licensee has by false or fraudulent representation obtained a license; or where the licensee, in performing or attempting to perform any of the acts mentioned herein, has

(a) Made any substantial misrepresentation;
(b) Made any false promises of a character likely to influence, persuade, or induce;

(c) Pursued a continued and flagrant course of misrepresentation, or making of false promises through agents or salesmen, or advertising or otherwise;

 (d) Acted for more than one party in a transaction without the knowledge of all parties for whom he acts;
 (e) Accepted a commission or valuable consideration as a realestate salesman for the performance of any of the acts specified in this act from any person, except an employer who is a licensed real-estate broker;

(f) Represented or attempted to represent a real-estate broker other than the employer, without the express knowledge and consent of the employer;

(g) Failed, within a reasonable time, to account for or to remit any money, valuable documents, or other property coming into his possession which belong to others;
(h) Demonstrated such unworthiness or incompetency to act as real-estate broker or salesman as to endanger the interests of the public;

the public;

(i) Paid or offered to pay a commission or valuable consideration to any person for acts or services in violation of this act, with knowledge of such violation or where reasonable diligence has not been exercised to acquire such knowledge; or

(j) Been guilty of any other conduct, whether of the same or a different character from that hereinbefore specified, which constitutes fraudulent or dishonest dealing.

PROVISION FOR HEARING BEFORE APPLICATION IS REFUSED OR LICENSE SUSPENDED OR REVOKED

SUSPENDED OR REVOKED

Sec. 9. The commission shall, before denying an application for license, or before suspending or revoking any license, set the matter down for a public hearing, and at least 10 days prior to the date set for the hearing it shall notify the applicant or licensee in writing of any charges made and shall afford said applicant or licensee an opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel in reference thereto. Such written notice may be served by delivery of same personally to the applicant or licensee or by mailing same by registered mail to the last-known business address of such applicant or licensee. If said applicant or licensee be a salesman, the commission shall also notify the broker employing him, or whose employ he is about to enter, by mailing notice by registered mail to the broker's last-known address. The hearing on such charges shall be at such time and place as the commission shall prescribe. The commission shall have the power to subpœna and charges shall be at such time and place as the commission shall prescribe. The commission shall have the power to subpema and bring before it any person in the District of Columbia, or take testimony of any such person by deposition in the same manner and with the same fees and mileage as prescribed by law in judicial procedure in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in civil cases. It shall also have the power to require the production of books, records, papers, and documents by subpema or otherwise. Any party to any hearing before the commission shall have the right to the attendance of witnesses in his behalf at such hearing upon making request therefor to the commission and designating the person or persons sought to be subpenaed. If the commission shall determine that any applicant is not qualified to receive a license, a license shall not be granted to said applicant; and if the commission shall determine that any licensee is guilty of a violation of any of the provisions of this act, his or its licenses shall be suspended or revoked. All evidence before and findings of fact made by the commission and questions of law involved in any final decision or determination of the commission shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia upon a writ of certiorari, mandamus, or by any other method permissible under the rules and practices of said court or the laws of the District of Columbia, and the said court may make such further orders with respect thereto as justice may require: Provided, however, That application is made by the aggrieved party to the court within 30 days after any determination by the commission or within 60 days after formal termination by the commission or within 60 days after formal request shall be made upon it for action. Such application shall operate as a stay of any action or finding of the commission revoking or suspending a license, and until final decision by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia such licensee shall have the right to continue in business.

An appeal may be taken from the judgment of the said court on any such appeal on the same terms and conditions as an appeal is taken in civil actions.

NONRESIDENT BROKERS AND SALESMEN

SEC. 10. A nonresident of the District of Columbia may become a real-estate broker or a real-estate salesman in the District of Columbia by conforming to all of the conditions of this act, except that the application of such person for a license need not be accompanied by the recommendation of real-estate owners in the District of Columbia prescribed in paragraph 2 of section 5 of this act, but in lieu thereof the commission shall require the filing of like recommendations by similarly qualified real-estate owners of property in the State, Territory, or country of such applicant's residence.

(2) The commission may recognize, in lieu of the recommenda-tion and statements otherwise required by this act to accompany an application for a license, the valid and existing license issued an application for a license, the valid and existing license issued to a nonresident to act as a real-estate broker or salesman by any State having a law for the licensing of such brokers and salesmen similar to this act, upon payment of the license fee prescribed by this act and the filing by the applicant with the commission of a duly authenticated copy of applicant's license issued by such State: Provided, however, That every nonresident applicant shall file an irrevocable consent that suits and actions may be commenced against such applicant in the proper courts of the District of Columbia by the service of any process or pleadings authorized by the laws of the United States applying to the District of Columbia on the secretary of the commission, said consent stipulating and agreeing that such service of such process or pleadings on said secretary shall be taken and held in all courts to be as valid and binding as if due or personal service had been made upon said applicant in the District of Columbia. Said instrument containing such consent shall be duly acknowledged and if made by a corporation shall be authenticated by the seal thereof. All such applications, except from individuals, shall be accompanied by a duly certified copy of the resolution of the proper officers or managing board, authorizing the proper officer to execute the same. managing board, authorizing the proper officer to execute the same. In case any process or pleadings mentioned in the act are served upon the secretary of the commission, it shall be by duplicate copies, one of which shall be filed in the office of the commission and the other immediately forwarded by registered mail to the residence address given by the applicant against which said process or pleadings are directed: And provided further, That every nonresident of the District of Columbia shall file a bond in form and contents the same as is required of applicants under section 5 of this act.

POWER TO OBTAIN EVIDENCE

SEC. 11. Each member of the commission and its duly authorized representatives may administer oaths to witnesse

In case of the refusal of any person to comply with any subpæna issued hereunder or to testify to any matter regarding which he may lawfully be interrogated, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia or any judge thereof, on application of any member of the commission, shall issue an order requiring such person to comply with such subpœna and to testify or either, and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof.

OTHERS EXEMPT

Sec. 12. It shall not be necessary for any trustee or auctioneer acting under authority of a power of sale in a mortgage, deed of trust, or similar instrument securing the payment of a bona fide debt, nor any bank, trust company, building and loan association, or any land-mortgage or farm-loan association, organized under the laws of the United States, when engaged in the transaction of business within the scope of its corporate powers and provided by law, to obtain a license under this act.

PUBLICATION OF LIST OF LICENSEES

Sec. 13. The commission shall publish at least annually a list of the names and addresses of all licensees licensed by it under the provisions of this act and of all persons whose license has been suspended or revoked within one year, together with a succinct report of its work during the year. Such list shall be mailed by the commission to any person in the District of Columbia upon request.

FRAUDULENT TRANSFERS OR LOANS

SEC. 14. It shall be unlawful for any person, copartnership, association, or corporation to enter into or become a party to any conciation, or corporation to enter into or become a party to any contract, agreement, or understanding, or in any manner whatsoever to consider, combine, conspire, or act with another or others, (a) to execute a deed conveying real property in the District of Columbia that is not a bona fide sale, but is instead a simulated sale of such property, executed for the purpose and with the intent of misleading others as to the value of such property, and which in fact does so mislead and/or defraud others, to their detriment; or (b) to execute a mortgage or deed of trust upon real property situated in the District of Columbia that does not in fact represent security for a bona fide indebtedness, but which is in reality a simulated transaction, executed for the purpose and with the intent of misleading or deceiving others as to the value of the property and which does mislead, deceive, or defraud others to their detriment.

CONVICTION OF CRIME

Sec. 15. Where during the term of any license issued by the commission the licensee shall be convicted in a court of competent jurisdiction in the District of Columbia or any State (including Federal courts) of forgery, embezzlement, obtaining money under false pretenses, extortion, criminal conspiracy to defraud, or other like offense or offenses and a duly certified or exemplified copy of the record in such proceedings shall be filed with the commission, the commission shall revoke forthwith the license by it theretofore issued to the licensee so convicted. issued to the licensee so convicted.

issued to the licensee so convicted.

In the event that any licensee shall be indicted in the District of Columbia or any State or Territory (including Federal courts) for forgery, embezzlement, obtaining money under false pretenses, extortion, criminal conspiracy to defraud, or like offense or offenses, and a certified copy of the indictment be filed with the commission, or other proper evidence thereof be to it given, the commission shall have authority, in its discretion, to suspend the license issued to such licensee pending trial upon such indictment. No license shall be issued by the commission to any person known by it to have been, within five years theretofore, convicted of forgery, embezzlement, obtaining money under false pretenses, extortion, criminal conspiracy to defraud, or other like offense or offenses, or to any copartnership of which such person is a member, or to any association or corporation of which said person is an officer, director, or employee, or in which as a stockholder such person has or exercises a controlling interest either directly or an officer, director, or employee, or in which as a stockholder such person has or exercises a controlling interest either directly or indirectly. In the event of the revocation or suspension of the license issued to any member of a copartnership, or to any officer of an association or corporation, the license issued to such copartnership, association, or corporation shall be revoked by the commission, unless, within a time fixed by the commission, where a copartnership, the connection therewith of the member whose license has been revoked shall be severed and his interest in the copartnership and his share in its activities brought to an end or copartnership and his share in its activities brought to an end, or where an association or corporation, the offending officer shall be discharged and shall have no further participation in its activity.

SEC. 16. Any person or corporation violating any provision of this act shall upon conviction thereof, if a person, be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or by imprisonment for a term not to exceed six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court; and if a corporation, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000. Any officer, director, employee, or agent of a corporation, or member, employee, or agent of a firm, partnership, copartnership, or association, who shall personally participate in or be accessory to any violation of this act by such firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation, shall be subject to the penalties herein prescribed for individuals.

This act shall not be construed to release any person, partnership, association, or corporation from civil liability or criminal prosecution under the laws applying to the District of Columbia.

All prosecutions for violation of this act shall be begun in the police court of the District of Columbia in the name of the District of Columbia and under the direction and charge of the cor-trict of Columbia and under the direction and charge of the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia. The corporation counsel of the District of Columbia and his assistants shall also be counsel for the commission in all suits to which it may be a party, and shall advise the commission and at its request attend any and all hearings which it may hold in the performance of its duties hereunder.

SAVING CLAUSE

SEC. 17. If any section, subsection, sentence, clause, phrase, or requirement of this act is, for any reason, held to be unconstitutional or invalid, such decision shall not affect the validity of the remaining portions thereof. The Congress of the United States hereby declares that it would have passed this act, and each sec-tion, subsection, sentence, clause, phrase, and requirement thereof irrespective of the fact that any one or more sections, subsections, sentences, clauses, phrases, or requirements be declared unconsti-tutional or invalid.

REPEALING CLAUSE

SEC. 18. All laws or parts of laws in conflict with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 19. This act, except as otherwise provided herein, shall take effect on and after 90 days from the date of its enactment.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin just how far this bill goes in imposing punishment for individuals who might in a casual way make disposition of property or solicit a person to purchase a piece of property in which they were directly or indirectly in-

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the penalty clauses are very mild. A fine of $500 and imprisonment for not more than six months is provided, and in the case of a corporation it is double the fine.

Mr. KING. The Senator doubtless has learned of the fact that in this city there are a number of persons, some of whom are widows of persons who have been in public life, or other ladies who have no employment and no means of support, who, without maintaining an office, learning of some friend or some other person who desires to purchase a piece of property, form contacts with such person or persons and act as agents. Does the bill bring them within its provisions and subject them to punishment if they fail to take out a license?

Mr. BLAINE. Possibly, technically, it would. The license fee in those cases is $5. The punishment might be a dollar. I doubt very much if any attempt would be made to prosecute a mere casual sale such as the Senator describes.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PREVENTION OF FRAUD IN SALE OF STOCKS, BONDS, ETC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3362) to present fraud in the promotion or sale of stocks, bonds, or other securities sold or offered for sale within the District of Columbia; to control the sale of the same; to register persons selling stocks, bonds, or other securities; to provide punishment for the fraudulent or unauthorized sale of the same; to make uniform the law in relation thereto; and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, on page 9. line 19, after the word "laws of," to insert "the District of Columbia or the United States or of any State"; on page 22, line 13, after the words "less than," to strike out "$20" and insert "$5"; and, on page 26, line 9, after the words "less than," to strike out "$20" and insert "$5," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc.,

II. PROCEDURE FOR REGISTRATION BY NOTIFICATION

Securities entitled to registration by notification shall be registered by the filing by the issuer or by any registered dealer interested in the sale thereof in the office of the commission of a verified statement under oath with respect to such securities containing the following:

(a) Name of issuer, location, and, if incorporated, place of incorporation.

(b) A brief description of the security, including amount of the Amount of securities to be offered in the District of Columbia.

(d) A brief statement of the facts which show that the security falls within one of the classes in this section defined: Provided, That in any case where there is a requirement herein as to assessed value of property, such value shall be shown by the filing of a certificate of the assessor or other proper public official: And provided further, That if by law, ordinance, official regulation, or other governmental provision, assessment is on a fixed basis less than 100 per cent of fair or full market value, adjustment of such assessment shall be allowed for the purposes hereof to the full and fair market value basis.

(e) The price at which the securities are to be offered for sale to the public.

In the case of securities falling within the class defined by subsection (1), a copy of the circular and/or advertisement to be used for the public offering shall be filed in the office of the commission with the statement or within two days thereafter, or within such further time as the commission shall allow.

In the case of securities falling within the classes defined by subsections (2), (3), (4), and (5), the circular and/or advertisement to be used for the public offering shall be filed with the statement.

The filing of such statement in the office of the commission and the payment of the fee hereinafter provided shall constitute the registration of such security. Upon such registration such securities may be sold in the District of Columbia by any registration. tered dealer giving notice in the manner hereinafter provided in section 11, subject, however, to the further order of the commission as hereinafter provided.

If at any time in the opinion of the commission the information contained in the statement or circular filed is or has become misleading, incorrect, inadequate, or incomplete, or the sale or offering for sale of the security may work or tend to work a fraud, the commission may require from the person filing such statement such further information as may in its judgment be necessary to establish the classification of such security as claimed in said statement or to enable the commission to ascertain whether the registration of such security should be revoked on any ground specified in section 10, and the commission may also suspend the specified in section 10, and the commission may also suspend the right to sell such security pending further investigation by entering an order specifying the grounds for such action, and by notifying by mail, or personally, or by telephone, confirmed in writing, or by telegraph, the person filing such statement and every registered dealer who shall have notified the commission of an intention to sell such security. The refusal to furnish information required by the commission within a reasonable time to be fixed by the commission shall be proper ground for the entry of such order of suspension no further sales of such security shall be made until the further order of the commission further order of the commission.

In the event of the entry of such order of suspension the com-mission shall upon request give a prompt hearing to the parties interested. If no hearing is requested within a period of 20 days from the entry of such order, or if upon such hearing the commission shall determine that any such security does not fall within a class entitled to registration under this section, or that the sale thereof should be revoked on any ground specified in section 10, it shall enter a final order prohibiting sales of such security, with its findings with respect thereto: Provided, That if the finding with respect to such security is that it is not entitled to registration under this section, the applicant may apply for registration by qualification by complying with the requirements of section 8. Intil the entry of such final order the suspension of the right to sell, though binding upon the persons notified thereof, shall be deemed confidential, and shall not be published, unless it shall appear that the order of suspension has been violated after notice. appear that the order of suspension has been violated after notice. Appeals from such final order may be taken as hereinafter provided. If, however, upon such hearing, the commission shall find that the security is entitled to registration under this section, and that its sale will neither be fraudulent nor result in fraud, it shall forthwith enter an order revoking such order of suspension, and such security shall be restored to its status as a security registered under this section as of the date of such order of suspension.

At the time of filing the statement, as hereinbefore prescribed in this section, the applicant shall pay to the commission a fee of one-twentieth of 1 per cent of the aggregate par value of the securities to be sold in the District of Columbia for which the applicant is seeking registration, but in no case shall such fee be less than $5 or more than $500. In the case of stock having no par value, the price at which such stock is to be offered to the public shall be deemed to be the par value of such stock.

REGISTRATION BY QUALIFICATION

SEC. 8. All securities required by this act to be registered before being sold in the District of Columbia and not entitled to registration by notification shall be registered only by qualification in the manner provided by this section.

The commission shall receive and act upon applications to have securities registered by qualification, and may prescribe forms on which it may require such applications to be submitted. Applications shall be in writing and shall be duly signed by the applicant and sworn to by any person having knowledge of the facts, and filed in the office of the commission and may be made either by the issuer of the securities for which registration is applied or by any registered dealer desiring to sell the same within the District of Columbia.

The commission may require the applicant to submit to it the The commission may require the applicant to submit to it the following information respecting the issuer and such other relevant information as the commission may in its judgment deem necessary to enable it to ascertain whether such securities shall be registered pursuant to the provisions of this section:

(a) The names and addresses of the directors, trustees, and officers, if the issuer be a corporation or association or trust; of all partners, if the issuer be a partnership, and of the issuer, if the issuer be an individual.

At the time of filing the information, as hereinbefore prescribed in this section, the applicant shall pay to the commission a fee of one-tenth of 1 per cent of the aggregate par value of the securities to be sold in the District of Columbia for which the applicant is seeking registration, but in no case shall such fee be less than $5 or more than $500. In case of stock having no par value the price at which such stock is to be offered to the public shall be deemed to be the par value of such stock.

If upon examination of any application the commission shall find that the sale of the security referred to therein would not be fraudulent and would not work or tend to work a fraud upon the purchaser, and that the enterprise or business of the issuer is not extremely hazardous or based upon unsound business principles, it shall record the registration of such security in the register of securities, and thereupon such security so registered may be sold by the issuer or by any registered dealer who has notified the commission of his intention so to do, in the manner hereinafter provided in section 11, subject, however, to the further order of the commission as hereinafter provided.

CONSENT TO SERVICE

Sec. 9. Upon any application for registration by notification under section 7 made by an issuer, and upon any application for registration by qualification under section 8, whether made by an issuer or registered dealer, where the issuer is not domiciled in the District of Columbia, there shall be filed with such application the irrevocable written consent of the issuer that in suits, proceedings, and actions growing out of the violation of any provision of this act, the service on the secretary of the commission of any notice, process, or pleading therein, authorized by the laws of the District of Columbia, shall be as valid and binding as if due and personal service had been made on the issuer. Any such action personal service had been made on the issuer. Any such action shall be brought either in the county of the plaintiff's residence or in the District of Columbia. Said written consent shall be authenticated by the seal of said issuer, if it has a seal, and by the acknowledged signature of a member of the copartnership or company, or by the acknowledged signature of any officer of the incorporated or unincorporated association, if it be an incorporated or unincorporated association, duly authorized by resolution of the board of directors, trustees, or managers of the corporation or association, and shall in such case be accompanied by a duly certification. fied copy of the resolution of the board of directors, trustees, or ned copy of the resolution of the board of directors, trustees, or managers of the corporation or association, authorizing the officers to execute the same. In case any process or pleadings mentioned in this act are served upon the commission it shall be by duplicate copies, one of which shall be filed in the office of the commission and another immediately forwarded by the secretary of the com-mission by registered mail to the principal office of the issuer against which said process or pleadings are directed.

REVOCATION OF REGISTRATION OF SECURITIES

SEC. 10. The commission may revoke the registration of any security by entering an order to that effect, with its findings in respect thereto, if upon examination into the affairs of the issuer such security it shall appear that the issuer-

 Is insolvent; or

(3) Has been or is engaged or is about to engage in fraudulent transactions; or

(4) Is in any other way dishonest or has made any fraudulent representations in any prospectus or in any circular or other literature that has been distributed concerning the issuer or its securities: or

(5) Is of bad business repute; or

Does not conduct its business in accordance with law; or That its affairs are in an unsound condition; or

(8) That the enterprise or business of the issuer or the security is based upon extremely hazardous or unsound business principles. In making such examination the commission shall have access to and may compel the production of all the books and papers of such issuer, and may administer oaths to and examine the officers of such issuer or any other person connected therewith as to its business and affairs and may also require a balance sheet exhibit-ing the assets and liabilities of any such issuer or his income statement, or both, to be certified to by a public accountant either of the District of Columbia or of any State where the issuer's business is located, approved by the commission.

Whenever the commission may deem it necessary it may also require such balance sheet or income statement, or both, to be made more specific in such particulars as the commission shall point out or to be brought down to the latest practicable date.

If any issuer shall refuse to permit an examination to be made by the commission, it shall be proper ground for revocation of registration.

If the commission shall deem it necessary, it may enter an order suspending the right to sell securities pending any investigation, provided that the order shall state the commission's grounds for taking such action.

Notice of the entry of such order shall be given by mail, or personally, or by telephone, confirmed in writing, or by telegraph, to the issuer and every registered dealer who shall have notified the commission of an intention to sell such security.

Before such order is made final the issuer or dealer applying for registration shall on application be entitled to a hearing.

Such registration shall cease upon the termination of the employment registration shall cease upon the termination of the employment of such salesman by such dealer.

The names and addresses of all persons approved for registration as dealers or salesmen and all orders with respect thereto shall be recorded in a register of dealers and salesmen kept in the office of the commission, which shall be open to public inspection. Every registration under this section shall expire on the 31st day of December in each year, but new registrations for the succeedof December in each year, but new registrations for the succeeding year shall be issued upon written application and upon payment of the fee as hereinafter provided, without filing of further statements or furnishing any further information unless specifically required by the commission. Applications for renewals must be made not less than 30 nor more than 60 days before the first day of the ensuing year, otherwise they shall be treated as original applications. The fee for such registration and for each annual renewal shall be $25 in the case of dealers and $5 in the case of salesmen.

Changes in registration occasioned by changes in the personnel of a partnership or in the principals, copartners, officers, or directors of any dealer may be made from time to time by written application setting forth the facts with respect to such change.

Every registered dealer who intends to offer any security of any issue, registered or to be registered, shall notify the commission in writing of his intention so to do. The notice shall contain the name of the dealer and shall state the name of the security to be offered for sale, and whenever a dealer shall have prepared such notice and shall have forwarded the same by registered mail, receiving a prepared and properly addressed to the commission, such such notice and shall have forwarded the same by registered mail, postage prepaid, and properly addressed to the commission, such dealer, as to the contents of such notice and the filing thereof, shall be deemed to have complied with the requirements of this paragraph. Any issuer of a security required to be registered under the provisions of this act selling such securities except in exempt transactions as defined in section 5 hereof, shall be deemed a dealer within the meaning of this section 11 and required to comply with all the provisions hereof. REVOCATION OF DEALERS' AND SALESMEN'S REGISTRATION

SEC. 12. Registration under section 11 may be refused or any registration granted may be revoked by the commission if after a reasonable notice and a hearing the commission determines that such applicant or registrant so registered:

(1) Has violated any provision of this act or any regulation made hereunder; or

(2) Has made a material false statement in the application for registration; or

(3) Has been guilty of a fraudulent act in connection with any sale of securities, or has been or is engaged or is about to engage in making fictitious or pretended sales or purchases of any of such securities or has been or is engaged or is about to engage in any practice or sale of securities which is fraudulent or in violation of the law; or

(4) Has demonstrated his unworthiness to transact the business of dealer or salesman.

In cases of charges against a salesman notice thereof shall also be given the dealer employing such salesman.

Pending the hearing the commission shall have the power to order the suspension of such dealer's or salesman's registration: Provided, That such order shall state the cause for such suspension.

Until the entry of a final order the suspension of such dealer's registration, though binding upon the persons notified thereof, shall be deemed confidential, and shall not be published, unless it shall appear that the order of suspension has been violated after notice.

In the event the commission determines to refuse or revoke a registration as hereinabove provided it shall enter a final order herein with its findings on the register of dealers and salesman; and suspension or revocation of the registration of a dealer shall also suspend or revoke the registration of all his salesmen. It shall be sufficient cause for refusal or cancellation of registration in case of a partnership or corporation or any unincorporated association, if any member of a partnership or any officer or director of the corporation or association has been guilty of any act or omission which would be cause for refusing or revoking the registration of an individual dealer or salesman.

INJUNCTIONS Szc. 15. Whenever it shall appear to the commission, either upon complaint or otherwise, that in the issuance, sale, promotion, negotiation, advertisement, or distribution of any securities in the District of Columbia, including any security exempted under the provisions of section 4, and including any transaction ex-empted under the provisions of section 5, any person, as defined in this act, shall have employed or employs or is about to employ any device, scheme, or artiface to defraud or for obtaining money or property by means of any false pretense, representation, or promise, or that any such person shall have made, makes, or attempts to make in the District of Columbia fictitious or pretended purchases or sales of securities or shall have engaged in or engages in or is about to engage in any practice or transaction or engages in or is about to engage in any practice or transaction or course of business relating to the purchase or sale of securities which is in violation of law or which is fraudulent or which has operated or which would operate as a fraud upon the purchaser, any one or all of which devices, schemes, artifices, fictitious, or pretended purchases or sales of securities, practices, transactions, and courses of business are hereby declared to be and are hereinafter referred to as fraudulent practices or that any person is acting as dealer or salesman in the District of Columbia without being duly registered as such dealer or salesman as provided in this act; the commission may investigate, and whenever it shall believe from evidence satisfactory to it and whenever it shall believe from evidence satisfactory to it that any such person has engaged in, is engaged or is about to engage in any of the practices or transactions hereinbefore referred to as and declared to be fraudulent practices, or is selling or offering for sale any securities in violation of this act or is acting as a dealer or salesman without being duly registered as provided in this act, the commission may, in addition to any other remedies, bring action in the name and on behalf of the commission against such person and any other person or persons concerned in or in any way participating in or about to participate in such fraudulent practices or acting in violation of this act, to enjoin preliminarily, temporarily, and/or permanently such person and such other person or persons from continuing such fraudulent practices or engaging therein or doing any act or acts in furtherance thereof or in violation of this act. In any such court proceedings the commission may apply for and on due showing be entitled to have issued the court's subpema requiring forthwith the appearance of any defendant and his employees, salesmen, or agents, and the production of documents, ployees, salesmen, or agents, and the production of documents, books, and records as may appear necessary for the hearing of such petition, to testify and give evidence concerning the acts or conduct or things complained of in such application for injunction. In such action the equity courts shall have jurisdiction of the subject matter, and a judgment may be entered awarding such injunction as may be proper.

REMEDIES

SEC. 16. (1) Every sale made in violation of any of the pro-visions of this act shall be voidable at the election of the pur-chaser; and the person making such sale and every director, officer, or agent of or for such seller, if such director, officer, or agent shall have personally participated or aided in any way in making such sale, shall be jointly and severally liable to such purchaser in an action at law in any court of competent jurisdiction upon tender of the securities sold or of the contract made for the full amount paid by such purchaser, with interest, together with all taxable court costs and reasonable attorney's fees: Provided, That no action shall be brought for the recovery of the purchase price after three years from the date of such sale: And provided further, That no purchaser otherwise entitled shall claim or have the benefit of this section who shall have refused or failed within 60 days from the date thereof to accept an offer in writing of the seller to take beek the security in question and the fall. to take back the security in question and to refund the full amount paid by such purchaser, together with interest on such amount for the period from the date of payment by such purchaser down to the date of repayment, such interest to be computed-

VALIDITY OF PORTIONS OF ACT

SEC. 32. If any provision of this act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance, shall be held invalid, the remainder of this act, or the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

UNIFORMITY OF INTERPRETATION

SEC. 33. This act shall be so interpreted and construed as to effectuate its general purpose to make uniform the law of those States which enact it.

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 34. This act may be cited as the "uniform sales of securities act."

REPEAL AND CONSTRUCTION

REPEAL AND CONSTRUCTION

SEC. 35. This act supersedes and repeals the act of Congress approved May 29, 1916, entitled "An act to prevent fraudulent advertising in the District of Columbia," and any and all other laws and clauses of laws in conflict with this act, to take effect upon the day this act goes into force, to the extent only and in so far as such act of May 29, 1916, and other laws or parts of laws relate or apply to acts, transactions, or omissions with reference to securities as defined in this act, subject, however, to the limitations provided in subdivisions (b) and (c) following:

(b) The provisions of all laws which are repealed by this act shall remain in force for the prosecution and punishment of any person who, before the effective date of this act, shall have violated the provisions of any law in force at the time of such violation, and such person may be prosecuted and punished under the law as it existed when such violation occurred.

(c) In the case of sales, contracts, or agreements made prior to the effective date of this act, the civil rights and liabilities of the parties thereto shall remain as provided by the law as it existed the time such sales contracts or agreements were made, and parties thereto shall remain as provided by the law as it existed at the time such sales, contracts, or agreements were made, and all parts of laws repealed by this act shall remain in force for the enforcement of such rights and liabilities.

SEC. 36. All fees and other money paid to or coming into possession of the commission by virtue of the provisions of this act shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sum as is necessary for the administration of SEC. 37. This act shall take effect 60 days after its enactment.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EASTERN DISPENSARY AND CASUALTY HOSPITAL

The bill (S. 1307) providing for an appropriation toward the alteration and repair of the buildings of Eastern Dispensary and Casualty Hospital was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the Federal Government in like manner as other appropriations of the District of Columbia, the sum of $50,000 for the alteration and repair of the present buildings of Eastern Dispensary and Casualty Hospital in the District of Columbia, and for retiring the present existing indebtedness on such buildings: Provided, That not more than $20,000 of this appropriation may be used for the alterations and repairs under the supervision of the municipal architect.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think the title probably should be amended. It is an act authorizing an appropriation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing an appropriation for the alteration and repair of the buildings of Eastern Dispensary and Casualty Hospital."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3440) for the relief of Nick Wagner was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

CONFEDERATE CEMETERY, FAYETTEVILLE, ARK.

The bill (S. 1406) to provide for the improvement of the approach to the Confederate Cemetery, Fayetteville, Ark., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Mildren Lee Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, the sum of $3,200, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the construction of a suitable hard-surfaced road from the end of the paved portion of East Rock Street, Fayetteville, Ark., and running along the unpaved portion of said street to the entrance of the Confederate cemetery in said city, such road to be constructed under the supervision of the Secretary of War. No payment shall be made under this act until the city of Fayetteville has consented to the construction of such road.

CLARENCE R. KILLION

The bill (S. 2148) for the relief of Clarence R. Killion was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Clarence R. Killion, who served in Company M, One hundred and sixty-eighth Regiment United States Infantry, Forty-second Division, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of said division on the 1st day of December, 1919: Provided, That no back pay, compensation, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

APPLICATION OF IMMIGRATION LAWS TO INSTRUMENTAL MUSICIANS

The bill (H. R. 8235) to clarify the application of the contract labor provisions of immigration laws to instrumental musicians was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the contract labor provisions of the immigration laws shall be applicable to alien instrumental musicians, whether coming for permanent residence or for a temporary

SEC. 2. No alien instrumental musician shall, as such, be considered an "artist" or a "professional actor" within the meaning of the fifth proviso of section 3 of the immigration act of 1917

(U. S. C., title 8, sec. 136 (h), second proviso) unless—
(1) He is of distinguished merit and ability as an instrumental musician, or is a member of a musical organization of distinguished merit and is applying for admission as such; and

(2) His professional engagements (or, if the exemption is claimed on account of membership in an organization, the professional engagements of such organization) within the United States are of a character requiring superior talent.

SEC. 3. In the case of an alien instrumental musician coming for a temporary period, who is exempted from the contract labor provisions of the immigration laws by the fifth proviso of section 3 of the immigration act of 1917 as limited by section 2 of this act, his admission to the United States shall be under such conditions as may be by regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor (including, where deemed necessary, the giving of bond with sufficient surety) to insure that at the termination of his contract he will depart from the United States.

TITLE TO LANDS GRANTED IN AID OF SCHOOLS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3570) to amend the act entitled "An act confirming in States and Territories title to land granted by the United States in the aid of common or public schools," approved January 25, 1927, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 2, after line 8. to insert:

Sec. 2. This amendatory act shall take effect as of January 25, 1927; and in any case in which a State has selected lieu lands since such date under the act approved February 28, 1891 (26 Stat. 796), and still retains title thereto, such State may, within 90 days after the date of the enactment of this act, relinquish to the United States all right, title, and interest in such lands and shall thereupon be entitled to all the benefits of the act of January 25, 1927, as amended by this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (c) of section 1 of the act entitled "An act confirming in States and Territories title to land granted by the United States in the aid of common or public schools," approved January 25, 1927, be amended to read as

"(c) That any lands included within the limits of existing reservations of or by the United States, or specifically reserved for water-power purposes, or included in any pending suit or proceeding in the courts of the United States, or subject to or included in any valid application, claim, or right initiated or held under any of the existing laws of the United States, unless or until such reservation, application, claim, or right is extinguished, relinquished, or canceled, and all lands in the Territory of Alaska, are excluded from the provisions of this act."

SEC. 2. This amendatory act shall take effect as of January 25, 1927; and in any case in which a State has selected lieu lands since such date under the act approved February 28, 1891 (26 Stat. 796), and still retains title thereto, such State may, within 90 days after the date of the enactment of this act, relinquish to the United States all right, title, and interest in such lands and shall thereupon be entitled to all the benefits of the act of January 25, 1927, as amended by this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF IMPROVEMENTS ON GEORGIA AVENUE

The bill (H. R. 361) to provide for the extension of improvements on the west side of Georgia Avenue, north of Princeton Place, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the owner of lot 14, square 2897, in the District of Columbia, be, and said owner is hereby, authorized to use for building purposes a strip of land in front of said lot 14, square 2897, so that the front face of the front wall of the building or improvements so erected shall be in a direct line with the front face of the front wall of the building immediately north thereof located on lot 835, square 2897, said strip herein authorized to be used and occupied being described as follows: Beginning for the same at the northeast corner of lot 14, square 2897, and running thence with the extension of the northerly line of said lot 14, easterly 3.64 feet; thence southerly 24.45 feet to a point in the extension of the northerly line of Princeton Place, 60 feet wide; thence with said extension, westerly 3.52 feet to the southeast corner of said lot 14; thence with the easterly line of said lot 14, northerly 25 feet to the point of beginning: Provided, That the piece or parcel of land herein described shall be occupied, used, and owned by the owner of said lot 14, square 2897, its successors and assigns, subject to any and all assessments and general and special taxes which may be levied or charged thereon the same in all respects as other private property in the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the calendar.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8297) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is that offered by the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar].

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have sent to the Treasury Department for some figures. They have not yet come. At the request of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan], who has some amendments to present, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment for the present, and to let it be pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator withdraws his amendment.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 109, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "$450,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$475,000."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think I had better make a statement regarding that matter.

The Senator from Colorado has just offered an amendment which is in order, because the Budget had estimated for the $475,000. There are two other provisions, I think, that were stricken out in the House, to which a point of order would not lie, and the amendments could be offered by the Senator from Colorado at this time.

I shall ask that this amendment of the Senator from Colorado, as well as two others which I think he has to offer, be agreed to, and let the items go to conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the Senator from Utah, may I at this time send the other amendments to the desk and ask that they be stated?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let us dispose of one amendment at a time.

Mr. SMOOT. I was about to explain all of them at once, so that there will be no question about them. These amendments conform to the estimate that was sent to the House by the Budget Bureau. They do not increase the amount of the Budget estimate.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to say a word or two before the amendment is agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be stated. The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 109, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "$450,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$475,000."

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I opposed the increasing of appropriations carried in the House bill, and I base my opposition upon the general policy more than I do the specific amount involved. The Howard University is not a Government school but merely a private institution. As far as I know it is the only private educational institution in the District of Columbia or in the United States to which Government funds are contributed. I ask the chairman of the committee, Senator Smoot, if I am not correct? I would like to know whether there is any other private school in the United States toward the maintenance of which the Federal Government makes any direct gift.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not recall one, and I want to say that Howard University is a private institution.

Mr. TRAMMELL. It is a plain case of discrimination and favoritism. I am opposed to this appropriation, and the other Federal bounties made in this bill for that institution. To select only one private college in the United States for Federal aid, I think, is an entirely reprehensible policy. It is a course which is not justified under our system of Government, and is violative of the spirit of the American Constitution.

If it is proper to make a contribution to this private institution, then it is equally justifiable for any other private educational institution throughout the country which is in need of funds to expand and enlarge, to come to the Congress and ask for an appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I have been on the Committee on Appropriations for over 20 years, I have been in the Senate for nearly 30 years, and when I came to the Senate appropriations were made for the Howard University. I have never looked up to find how long they were made before that.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I know this practice has prevailed for a long time, but in my opinion that does not justify the policy. Would you say that because the Chinese for many centuries were accustomed to destroy their surplus baby girls that this barbaric practice should not have been discontinued? I repeat, I am strongly opposed to the policy. It is unquestionably the height of discrimination for the Government to make a contribution to this one private school only for the purpose of not only academic education, but professional education as well. I am opposed to the increasing of the amount, and I am opposed to the entire inexcusable system of the Government giving millions to this private school.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I hope my friend from Florida, and any others who may be disposed to be in opposition, will give serious thought to the justice of this claim. As one who has had experience in educational matters, I realize how extremely difficult it is for colored young people to find a place in the other institutions affording this kind of education, which are largely white.

It has been our practice for many, many years to support Howard University. That institution has rendered a noble service. It has provided, as the Senator from Florida pointed out, professional education, it has prepared doctors and nurses, doctors and nurses who have gone out to treat persons of their own race.

I can think of no one activity which is so valuable to the colored race, no other institution which is so valuable, and, as the Senator from Utah has pointed out, it has for a period of at least 30 years been receiving these appropriations, and I have never heard any general protest against them.

I hope the Senate will deem it wise to accept the amendments and let them go to conference, and there let it be determined whether or not these additional sums are needed. I think they are. The president of the institution, a very scholarly man, a highly respectable man, made clear that they sent away on sabbatical year a number of their teachers and had contract arrangements with others. Those teachers are back now, and there is a moral obligation, and doubtless a legal obligation, upon the part of the university to continue those teachers in their work. It would be a shame, under these conditions, in these times, to hamper this institution. Every educational institution, as the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] has said, has suffered from the effects of the hard times. Other privately endowed institutions have an appeal which this institution does not have, because it has not a constituency able to contribute the funds necessary.

I think from every standpoint it is wise and proper for us to accept the amendments and let them be considered by the

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, in view of the indicated present attitude of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. Smoot], it appears unnecessary to make an extended statement.

The work of Howard University is admirable and, indeed, indispensable, so far as the educational leadership of millions of Americans is concerned, and it is the purpose of the three amendments which are being offered by me, the first of which has been sent to the desk, to retain and promote the efficiency of this exceptional institution, which is highly regarded everywhere by educators.

Protests against the cuts in Budget appropriations made by the committee, to which these amendments relate, have been received here from all parts of the country. As a result the Senate must now decide whether a serious blow is to be dealt to the unique and efficient services of Howard University, which is the only educational institution of its kind supported by the Federal Government.

I shall content myself for the time being by supplementing what has been stated by the Senators from New York [Mr. COPELAND] and Utah [Mr. SMOOT] with the request that, in connection with each amendment, the review of reasons therefor, heretofore submitted by the Secretary of the Interior and incorporated in the hearings of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate under the head "Howard University," be printed as part of my

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOWARD UNIVERSITY

Howard University is the only complete university organization in the United States ministering directly to the colored people. There were 2,473 students from 39 States, including the District of Columbia, in attendance last year, with 325 graduates. Only about one-fourth of the students registered from the District of Columbia.

The first Federal appropriation for maintenance at Howard University was made in 1879. Since then appropriations have been continuous. Many of the buildings have been built by Federal funds

The amount contributed toward the institution is small in com-parison with the more than $176,000,000 expended annually by parison with the more than $176,000,000 expended annually by State and Federal Governments for the support of colleges and universities, many of which are entirely closed to Negro students. The total amount contributed by all State and Federal Governments to the college and professional education of the Negro people is less than the annual expenditure of any one of several of the 228 institutions primarily attended by white students and receiving such aid. In 1928 the Federal Government contributed to a single college in Lower more money than it contributed to the to a single college in Iowa more money than it contributed to the higher education of the 9,000,000 colored people in 17 Southern

The developing life of the colored people in the United States is in need of trained leadership in education, medicine, law, economic life, and social organization. By its support of Howard University, the Government is rendering a far-reaching and indispensable service to them and is exercising a creative inspiration in all the States of their residence.

Following the suggestion of the chairman of the subcommittee on appropriations for the Interior Department, a long-term financial program was prepared by the university with the assistance of the Office of Education. The plan was approved by the Secretary of the Interior and presented to the Subcommittee on Appropriations (see heavings Interior Department empropriation bill 1932) tions (see hearings, Interior Department appropriation bill, 1932, pp. 672-675). This program was designed to place this institution on a basis similar to that now recognized for land-grant colleges, and was aimed to give established support from the Federal Government over a certain period of years, gradually diminishing in amount until the university could be supported entirely from its own endowment.

The Budget estimates for 1933 recognized that existing conditions would not permit the university to go forward with the fourth step of the program, which would call for an appropriation of $332,914 more than the Budget estimates. Yet certain urgent items were included to protect plans and obligations already authorized. The decrease of 33 per cent by the House committee is a reversal of the appropriation commitments made on the financial program for 1932.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The first amendment proposes to increase the university salary allowance in the amount of $25,000. In support of this increase the Secretary of the Interior says:

While the $25,000 reduction in salaries by the House committee while the $23,000 reduction in sataries by the House committee places the 1933 appropriation at the same figure as was appropriated for 1932, the purpose of the additional amount is to prevent the university from retreating embarrassingly below the 1932 objectives (normal 1933 objectives were excluded by the economies already in the Budget estimate), as it will otherwise be obliged to do because of losses in private income, due to the prevailing abnormalities in our economic situation.

prevailing abnormalities in our economic situation.

Private income is expected to fall short by more than $100,000. The agreed-upon program of the university requires that private gifts function during these early years primarily in the field of physical plant extension, which is being done according to schedule. They can not be transferred to the area of current expenses. Further, the university is already obligated by contract to nine teachers and one librarian now on leave of absence and under fellowship grants, who will return for work in 1933. One of these is a dean of the university of long standing; another is a mature and distinguished scientist at the head of the department of botany, and two others are men of prolonged training for highly technical services in the preclinical branches of medicine.

Therefore, without this additional sum, it will probably be necessary to discharge from 6 to 12 members of the university's present staff, adding to the ranks of the unemployed men technically trained who, otherwise, could further the much-needed step in the establishment of efficiency in a situation operating far below the establishment of efficiency in a situation operating far below the level of competence.

The second amendment calls for an increase of $50,000 in the allowance for the university's general expenses. The Secretary of the Interior supports this amendment in the following statement:

The reduction of this item by $50,000 automatically eliminated provision for the proper maintenance requirements of the new chemistry and new classroom buildings erected by the Governenemstry and new classroom buildings erected by the Government, which will be ready for occupancy in 1933 and which would require $34,000 for maintenance at the conservative figure of 4 per cent; reduced the already minimum needs of the various departments of the university for supplies and materials; and prevents the furnishing of urgently needed scientific and educational equipment to able teachers acquired for the staff last year, who until now have not found it possible to function efficiently without

The university is, therefore, faced with the necessity of maintaining two new buildings without available funds and of keeping in its employ able teachers and research men who have no adequate tools for work.

Unless restoration of $50,000 is made, the result will be an undersubsistence of an educational program already authorized and started and of an economic and educational loss greater than the amount of saving contemplated will justify.

The third amendment, without which it appears impossible to supply the university with an efficient light, heat, and power plant, is approved by the Secretary of the Interior in these words:

This appropriation is for a central light, heat, and power plant

This appropriation is for a central light, heat, and power plant to supply all the buildings on the university grounds. The reduction is 34.8 per cent under the Budget figure. We had already reduced the original estimates by $103,109.

The original estimate was made after a careful survey and a detailed report with maps and specifications by Maj. E. A. Hind, mechanical engineer and power-plant specialist of the office of Col. U. S. Grant 3d, E. Frank Heim, consulting engineer, and Albert I. Cassell, architect of Howard University.

The reduction of $103,109 in this estimate was made after careful pruning and rearrangement of these plans by Mr. Barclay.

ful pruning and rearrangement of these plans by Mr. Barclay, fuel conservation engineer of the Bureau of Mines and advisor to the Bureau of the Budget on technical matters affecting the distribution of heat, light, and power.

This pruning made by Engineer Barclay reduced the boilers from six to three and made a corresponding reduction all the way through the estimate, bringing the equipment down to the absolute minimum required to carry the loads involved. The actual equipment for this plant must cost $188,015 and can not be further reduced. The $160,000 reduction, therefore, must fall on the building.

If the $160,000 is taken away from the sum of $271,985 figure set for the building itself, the money left for the building will be reduced to $111,985. This means that Howard University would be called upon to construct a building containing a minimum of $271,000 points of fort for the content of the state of the stat 777,100 cubic feet for 14 cents per cubic foot or reduce the size of the building by 40 per cent. Neither of these can be done. The size of the building is determined by the equipment and the services to be rendered.

If the appropriation is allowed to stand at $300,000, therefore, the university will be obliged to construct the building and post-pone the purchase of equipment until another year. This means the actual postponement of the plant for a period of two years from date, when the present service furnished by Freedmen's Hospital has now reached the maximum performance. The university has already been notified that it may fail to supply adequate heat if extremely cold weather comes during this winter. Two more buildings are now in process of construction, and they positively can not be cared for if the construction of the complete power plant with equipment is not immediately put under way.

As will be observed, the several portions of the letter of the Secretary of the Interior to which I have referred deal expressly and separately with the amounts involved in the respective amendments. The committee reduced by $25,000the amount allowed by the Budget for salaries. The first amendment is designed to restore to the Budget level the salary appropriation for Howard University.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I have not raised the question of the character of work being done in this school. While I may not approve of every detail of the management, I believe in many respects it is serving a good purpose. My criticism is of the policy of the Congress making a contribution, a very substantial contribution, toward the maintenance of a private educational institution, this being the one exception made throughout the entire United States. I think that the States, if there is a demand and a necessity for the character of work which is being conducted in this institution-and no doubt there is some-should maintain institutions for the purpose of giving proper education to the negroes. It is not a question of Howard University. I would be just as much opposed to Congress making a contribution to some other private school which might be used for religious instruction."

set up here in the city of Washington. I am against the policy, while I realize, of course, that the institution has done much good work, and probably also made some mistakes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 110, strike out lines to 3, both inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

For the completion of construction and equipment of a general library building, $400,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, it is my purpose to review the history of Howard University, feeling that it would be of interest to the Senate of the United States to know something about the development of this institution.

Howard University is the only complete university organization in the United States ministering directly to the colored people. It is the only university for the colored people in the United States supported by public funds. The institution was founded in 1867-65 years ago-by Gen. Oliver Otis Howard. In its humble beginnings it had 1 little frame building, 4 students, 1 teacher, and no money. In 65 years that student body has grown to 2,473 students from 39 States, including the District of Columbia. The teachers have grown in number to 271. Its plant has grown from the 1 little frame building to more than 25 buildings, and its assets now exceed $6,000,000, more than $3,000,000 of which have been accumulated during the last five years under its first negro president.

The institution now has more than 8,000 graduates, living in every State of the Union where the negro lives and working in every rank of life. There were 325 graduates at the last commencement.

This institution conducts nine schools and colleges, including schools of medicine, dentistry, pharmacy, law, liberal arts, applied science, education, and music. These schools and colleges all do their work according to standards and ratings prevailing in the educational-accrediting organizations of highest rank in the United States.

In this institution is assembled the largest body of intelligent and capable negro scholars to be found connected with any enterprise of its kind in the civilized world. These scholars have not only been able to teach their subjects but some of them have ventured into the field of creative scholarship and have made original contributions to the knowledge of the world.

The growth of this institution from the humblest beginnings is one of the romantic adventures of American education. It is a monument to the American Negro's capacity for self-development and for responsible self-control.

As President Mordecai W. Johnson stated in his inaugural address on June 10, 1927, this institution is-

A monument of the far-sighted wisdom of the Federal Government which, ever since the emancipation of the slaves, has not ceased to manifest an interest in their educational growth. Howard University has been made possible in its present efficiency very largely because for a period of more than 50 years it has had the discriminating, judicious, far-sighted helpfulness of a sympathetic and understanding Government.

The first Federal Government appropriation was in the amount of $10,000, under the civil act approved by Congress March 3, 1879. Since that time there have been continuous appropriations year by year for the maintenance of the various departments of the university and for the improvement of its buildings and equipment. Up to the year 1928 these appropriations were gratuities founded upon no substantive law, but in December, 1928, the Congress of the United States passed and the President of the United States approved a substantive law (Public, No. 634, 70th Cong., vol. 45, p. 1021), authorizing annual appropriations "to aid in the construction, development, improvement, and maintenance of the university, no part of which shall be This substantive law was passed because the Members of the Congress and the President of the United States were convinced that this institution was worthy of the help of the Federal Government. They saw that it was rendering an indispensable service to the colored people of the United States, not available through any other publicly supported institution within the area of their majority residence. And it is still true to-day that there is not a single State in which negroes have their majority residence which operates a medical school, a law school, a pharmaceutical school, or a graduate school in which negro students may go and prepare themselves for the services which their people need along these lines.

This single institution of Howard University, alone, has furnished approximately 50 per cent of all the negro physicians ministering to the colored people of the United States. The same is true in dentistry and pharmacy, and it now operates the only first-class law school for colored people to be found anywhere in the borders of the United States. Howard law graduates represent at least 25 per cent of all negro lawyers in the country.

The Federal Government has supported the institution further because it has believed in the spirit and purpose with which the institution is conducted. This is nowhere better stated than in the inaugural address of President Johnson above referred to, when he said:

Howard University has been a natural response to the clamant needs of a growing people. The Negro race to-day has needs that can not be satisfied except by men trained in the way that Howard University attempts to train them. There are some needs of the people which may be met by servants trained in a brief period of time. There are other needs of the people which can not be met except by slaves who spend one-third of their lives getting ready their powers to place them at the disposal of the people. When the humble woman in her crude cottage in Mississippi stands by the bedside of her child threatened with death her heart reaches out with a great desire to conquer the disease about to take away her most precious possession. But the mind is not able to respond. It takes 25 years of training to be able to meet the needs of that simple woman's heart. Howard University exists in order that when the simple and the poor cry out for fundamental things that their hearts must have if they are to reach the goal of a normal and happy life, slaves shall be prepared with competent minds to see that the heart's desire of the people shall not fail.

When the substantive law was passed the Members of the Congress and the President of the United States felt that this institution was worthy of help because it was doing a great work under severe handicaps. When the law was passed the student body had increased by 100 per cent within 10 years, while its faculty and equipment had remained at a practical standstill. The teachers were overwhelmed with large classes of students, four and five classes per day. They were obliged to spread their efforts over large fields of knowledge, to teach their students en masse, with scant attention to the individual, and consequently their work was suffering everywhere from a low degree of performance. Moreover, the Members of Congress found that the institution was putting forth its uttermost effort to increase efficiency through self-help.

It was taxing its students in 1926, for example, when the average white student in the 52 land-grant colleges in the United States was paying only 10 per cent of the income of these publicly supported institutions, the students of Howard University, representing the poorest tenth of the population of the United States, were paying 25.6 per cent of the total income of the university, and yet it was manifest that in this, their only publicly supported university in the United States, these negro students were receiving education far below the normal standard prevailing in publicly supported land-grant colleges and universities. The Members of the Congress, therefore, decided that they would increase the appropriations of Howard University so as to enable the administration, with the help of private funds, to develop it into a first-class educational service. This they began to do in the next year, 1929.

There were some who felt that increased governmental appropriations would discourage private support. The contrary has proved to be the case. The records of the university would seem to show that increased private support has been inspired by the program thus far carried through by the Congress, for during the last five years the institution has received from private sources nearly $2,000,000 of support. This is a greater amount for private support than that received in any 20-year period in the previous history of the school.

The Federal Government is justified, therefore, in supporting this institution, because it is the only complete university organization in the United States ministering directly to the colored people; it is the only such organization in the United States for colored people receiving any support so far from State or Federal tax; it is an institution which is carrying forward a comprehensive and fundamental group of services to this large group of our citizens, and is carrying it forward with a purpose and a spirit in keeping with the best traditions of American life, because it is an institution endeavoring to do a great work under severe handicaps and which is evidencing an admirable capacity to develop self-support through student dues and through private funds. It is not only a duty but a privilege of the Federal Government to provide that in times of depression like these the program of such an institution shall not suffer.

The institution has shown a commendable spirit of cooperation with the agencies of the Federal Government in reducing its claims for appropriations in the very beginning of the year. During the normal year, 1933, the institution would have needed from the Federal Government $1,942,000. The administration of the institution cheerfully cooperated with the Bureau of the Budget in cutting away $332,914 of this sum in view of abnormal economic conditions prevailing in the country.

The Budget figure of $1,610,000 was therefore a straightforward and honest figure arrived at through careful thought upon the actual needs of the institution. The amount of $675,000 now standing in the Senate bill represents a cut of 58 per cent.

The total cut from $1,610,000 to $675,000 included the following: $400,000 to complete the library, $460,000 for power plant, $25,000 for salaries, and $50,000 for general expenses, making a total cut of $935,000.

No other appropriation in that bill is called upon to make a similar sacrifice or anything even approaching a similar sacrifice. The fact is that the average cut in the Interior bill, as it now stands before the Senate, is 3 per cent.

I am, therefore, hoping that the amount of $400,000 recommended by the Bureau of the Budget to complete the construction of the library building, long needed by the institution, shall be restored in this bill and favorably passed upon by the Senate. The need for this building was thoroughly canvassed by the Members of the Seventy-first Congress and a sum of $400,000 was appropriated toward its construction and equipment. The Secretary of the Interior was, moreover, authorized by the Seventy-first Congress to construct a building costing $800,000 with equipment; that is, $650,000 for building and $150,000 for equipment. The need of the building will be immediately apparent when I mention the fact that this institution with nearly 2,500 students has a total provision for only 177 study-table seats in the library. This is considered from 398 to 602 studytable accommodations short of the requirements for the university at the present time. This library building was erected in 1910, and to-day is considered a fire trap.

I wish to point out, moreover, that the stack space in the main library is already filled with volumes and that 100,000 additional volumes are stored away in boxes and under other unsatisfactory conditions where they are unavailable for the use of the students, pending the acquisition of a more adequate library building. It would seem that governmental economy should be constructive as well as restrictive, and that the constructive economy in this case requires that this building, already demonstrated to be greatly needed last year, authorized and appropriated for by the preceding Congress should be carried on to completion by this Congress.

In the fiscal year 1928-29 the total Federal contributions to white land-grant colleges were $15,490,127. In the same year the Federal Government's contributions to all 17 negro land-grant colleges were $339,313. In 1928-29 the Federal Government gave to the Howard University $403,758, making a total expenditure by the Government for negro education in 1928-29 of $743.071.

I am told that in the reading room of the Library of Congress the number of negro students using this room is often 50 per cent of those present in the room, and 95 per cent of the negro students are from Howard University, due to the fact that the library facilities at that university are inadequate. It is very inconvenient for the students at Howard University to go to other libraries throughout the city, as these students wish gainful employment during their spare moments as so many of them are working their way through college.

The fact that the university has stored away in basements 122,000 volumes which are inaccessible to the students shows the predicament of the university when a donation of books is offered, as no place is available to properly arrange on shelves any gift of volumes, no matter how necessary and valuable they are.

To show that this $400,000 to complete the library is not for a library on extravagant lines, I wish to point out that even when it is completed it will accommodate only 18 per cent of the students, whereas the capacity of libraries in the colleges throughout the land is from 20 per cent to 33 per cent of the student enrollment.

It must not be thought that the assistance we are rendering to the Howard University is to continue indefinitely, but only for a few years while it is struggling to develop and maintain itself as a first-class university for the colored students of the United States. Now is the time when assistance is needed, and if there is any part of the university that should be developed at once it is the library. At present less than 10 per cent of the student body can be accommodated in the reading room of the present library at that institution; and if one were to visit the library and see the students that are standing up around the wall, trying to obtain the knowledge they so earnestly crave and work for, one would have no hesitancy in voting the necessary funds so that a building commensurate with the needs of the university could be erected so that these negro students may not seek knowledge in vain.

In this country of 123,000,000 people there are 11,891,000 negroes, so I think the least we could do for such a large body of our population is to authorize the proper appropriation for a library in the only first-class university this race possesses, and I am proud to say it is located in the National Capital.

If the Congress should appropriate this sum of $400,000, as I think it should, the full sum recommended by the Bureau of the Budget for all purposes, the amount would still be but a very small portion of the Federal Budget and would be small indeed as compared with the more than $176,000,-000 expended annually by State and Federal Governments for the support of colleges and universities, many of which are entirely closed to negro students.

Mr. President, I know of no class of people under the American flag that has more nobly responded to the opportunities which have been given to them by the American people than the colored group. They have developed from the period of slavery, when practically none of them could read or write, until to-day illiteracy has been almost eliminated from their group. It is nothing more than right that the Congress should take care of the appropriation that was agreed upon by the Seventy-first Congress, which has for its purpose the continued development of Howard University and to take care of the student body which attends that institution in increasing numbers as the years go by.

In conclusion I wish to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record as a part of my remarks a statement taken from the record of the House Committee on Appropriations made by President Johnson of Howard University in January, 1932.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

Howard University's present library facilities have the following distinct disadvantag

1. The space available for undergraduate readers is only 30 per cent of what it should be.

- 2. There are no private studies or studies of other description with direct access to the stacks for use or assignment to graduate students, professors, or accredited scholars.
  - There are no seminar rooms and research-study rooms.
     There are no "reserve-book" rooms for groups of students.
- 5. There is no periodical room.
  6. There are no stack workrooms for the staff and, of course, no proximity of relationship between the card catalogue and the
- 7. There is no browsing or reading room for recreational or
- cultural reading.

  8. There is no "treasure" room for rare and expensive books or those not for general circulation; there is only one room for

- There is no map room of any description.
   There are no well-arranged working quarters for the staff;
   in fact the space assigned to the staff is so small that at times the use a portion of the main reading room.

  11. There is no bibliography room; there is no room for ordinary repairs on books, exclusive of binding.

  12. There is no provision for photostatic or photographic work
- of any description.

  13. There is no section of the building containing a noiseproof
- room for typing, multigraphing, mimeographing, etc.
  14. There are no small rooms for debaters, committees, and other
- voluntary study groups.

15. There is no vault.16. There is no adequate packing and shipping room.

17. The maximum stack and open-shelf capacity of the present library building is 75,000 volumes. Howard University already has on hand 125,000 volumes in excess of this capacity, and to make matters more embarrassing in this respect many additional and absolutely necessary volumes are continually flowing in as a result of gifts from philanthropic funds for the specific purpose of furnishing such books as are necessary to keep track of Howard University's avowed purpose of raising the standard of its scholarship, rets. to the basis of highest efficiency within the next five years. The limited stack and reading space robs the university of the real benefit it might get at the present time out of the books it is forced to hold in storage in inaccessible and nonfire-resisting areas.

18. The building is not fireproof, having wood-joist floors, woodstud partitions, wood-roof framing, and wood stairs.

For the purpose of remedying this defect immediately Howard University should have an appropriation of $800,000, which would be subdivided into approximate amounts of $650,000 for construction of the library and $150,000 for its equipment. The availability of such a sum would enable the university to construct and equip such a building as it needs at the present time, including all of the items which are hereinbefore listed as being lacking in the existing library layout, giving us a building containing approximately 1,000,000 cubic feet, this being based on the assumption that the structure be built and equipped for $0.80 per cubic

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the moment I shall occupy the attention of this honorable body is to be taken to give approval to the amendments proposed by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan], as they have met the approval of the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] in charge of the bill, in behalf of Howard University. I beg the privilege to commend the utterances of the Senator from West Virginia, as well as the views expressed by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] and the commendable tribute of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan].

But, Mr. President, I want to offer for a moment a suggestion that possibly might not be in the minds of those around us due to the fact that they are very greatly engrossed with more serious matters. This is a negro university. This is the university that is being supported by the National Government. It is exceptional in its character, and it has no parallel in the educational institutions of our country. I particularly make that observation as alluding to its form of institution and the class of people to whom it submits and commends its efforts.

Mr. President, in the city of Chicago, where I live, there is a very large population of colored people. There are in excess of 300,000 of citizens of that group who contribute to that State with much industry, with ceaseless efforts, and under the circumstances in which they live really present an example of the noblest citizenship that would be offered by an humble people surrounded with the disadvantages we know the negro is compelled to endure.

For myself, sir, I was born in the South. While born in Virginia, I was reared in Georgia. I was schooled at different institutions, until finally I was enlisted at the University of Virginia.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly.
Mr. LONG. I understood the Senator to state there are 300,000 colored people in Illinois. I wonder if the Senator can tell me how many votes there are?

Mr. LEWIS. Not having much interest in their politics but more in their humanity, I have never had occasion to investigate their attitude in politics. I would love to inform my eminent friend from Louisiana, but due to the fact that I have no profit to seek and very little interest from a party point of view in their political views, I am unable to enlighten him.

I was about to remark, Mr. President, that the negro has remained to me an object of great personal interest and much sympathy. I came to life after the War of the States at a time when the poverty of the South was recognized and adopted as an affliction. The war had depleted all its institutions. Its people were largely bankrupt. It was not able to give its children education. Here in this eminent assemblage I am not loath to confess that it was upon the black bosom of a negro mammy, after my own mother passed out of life, that I drew the earliest inspiration of existence and there was born to me the first knowledge, whispered in the accents of love, of that which we speak of as religion and heaven. The early support that came to such as myself in thousands and thousands from the negro devotions in that land of the South has placed all the children, now in manhood, under debt of obligation and one of continuous gratitude. Wherever we could add to the opportunity to educate them and lift their lives, it is with a sense of duty performed; and if it should be omitted, a form of penalty should follow which should ever tread upon the steps of forgetfulness and ingratitude.

In the community where I live education is the most essential element of all races. Lawlessness in all respects, alluded to on this floor as possessed by some localities in the great West, is due to the fact that education has not been administered in directions and in such quantity and quality as would have repressed the instincts of violence and lawlessness. The education we are giving the negro, that which is being sustained by the Federal Government, has had much to do in establishing a citizenship ever exempt from yielding to the temptations of lawlessness and has helped to bring them to that splendid perfection of citizenship their race and each nationality dreams of enjoying.

Sir, in these very hard times in commerce and industry, the negro is about the most helpless of our citizens. He is not, for reasons too apparent to be referred to, enjoying the membership of labor unions. At a time like this his opportunity to be employed is very limited. If we shall take away from that institution that which we contribute to their education, where shall they go? They can not collect contributions from their afflicted poor. Their people are in need and just at present so deprived of opportunity, because of these universal distresses which are afflicting us all, that there would to them be no recourse whatever. They have no work. They have nothing to contribute. Their friends of their color can not contribute. There is no vocation they can follow and by it earn returns. They stand desolate and helpless. This honorable body does not turn its desires of economy to the particular items that cut away, work destruction of citizenship, and strike hope from their every human heart. I delight to approve of the amendments, as I am pleased to give them my support, and with the votes I give I extend congratulations to those eminent Members of this body who tendered the amendments and gave their voice and services in this exalted undertaking of humanity and justice to a deserving people of a deserving citizenship.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, it is my opinion that every American citizen is entitled to education; that he is entitled to the opportunity which America gives to every man. To enable people to take advantage of that opportunity they must receive some education. Howard University is the only institution in the United States at which the members of the colored race can be educated. It is true that thousands of them are suffering at the present time from unemployment. Part of that comes from a lack of education and lack of training. I hope that the amendment submitted by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] will be agreed to so as to give these people the advantages of the opportunity which they so very richly deserve.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am not opposed to the amendment which has been offered. I feel that inasmuch as the fall time is coming a few words ought to be said as to colored education that could not be in any respect attributed to the nearness of election day.

We have no material colored vote in our State. All of them do not care to register. This donation is to a private institution-Howard University. My understanding is that it is the only private institution receiving a contribution of this kind. If I correctly understand the Constitution of the United States, sectarian and private institutions are not allowed to receive donations from the Federal Treasury. However, if Congress is going to embark on this very noteworthy and, I might say, benevolent course of action, I am reminded that we have recently opened night schools in the State of Louisiana to stamp out illiteracy among the colored race. We had about 138,000 illiterates among the colored people. We have opened schools at the expense of the State for the purpose of eradicating illiteracy among the colored people. If Congress is to embark upon this enterprise by reason of this season of the year and the approaching fall season, I feel that I should simply say to Senators present that I propose to offer an amendment that will be strictly within the confines of the Constitution of the United States. to contribute to the State of Louisiana sufficient of Federal funds that we may continue the work of eradicating illiteracy there, because the depleted condition of the State treasury down there will not further bear the expense of carrying on the work of eradication of illiteracy among them unless we have such assistance.

I wish to say that it is a very notable thing to speak in behalf of education among the colored people. In fact, it would have been a great thing to have made several speeches of that order some time last year. It probably would have been just as well to have made them in November of the year before. [Laughter.] If, however, Congress sees fit to adopt amendments to donate large sums in order that we may have a number of very much merited and well-deserved addresses made here upon the great virtues of the colored vote, or rather the colored population of the country-in which I most heartily join and to which I give my consent— I think we ought to donate the funds so that it will be done without any question as to its constitutionality.

So, Mr. President, if this amendment and others like it are adopted at this particular time, I propose to catch the spirit and offer an amendment to this bill to give the State of Louisiana several hundreds of thousands of dollars, which Congress can constitutionally appropriate, in order that we may continue our work of eradicating illiteracy among the colored population of that State.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, had the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] proposed an amendment to make a contribution of ten, twenty, fifty, or one hundred thousand dollars to add to the depleted school funds of each State in the Union, in order that the thousands and millions of children of school age who are not now able to attend school, mostly on account of the financial depression, may be given better educational opportunities, I would have very gladly supported his amendment. In view of the fact, however, that the amendment is so barren of such nation-wide beneficence and merely provides for a building and for some equipment which is not essential, and contemplates placing an additional burden of $400,000 upon the backs of the taxpayers in the various States—his State, my State, and others—who are unable now to provide funds for the maintenance of their public schools, I can not support the amendment. Why not assist our public schools before making gifts from the Public Treasury for a private school?

There is not a State in the Union, there is scarcely a county throughout the country, whose school funds are not more or less depleted. School terms have been shortened and diminished; and in thousands, even in millions of cases, the patrons of those schools without any fault of their own are so poor that they have not the funds with which to provide schoolbooks or to provide comfortable and suitable clothing for their children to wear when they attend the public schools. With millions of unemployed, agriculture languishing, the wheels of the factories slowed down, the sources of private income and Government revenue terribly diminished, it is high time to help take care of the school children back at home in the States, instead of making a big gift to a private school for the colored for an item which can wait and not deprive a single boy or girl of good educational opportunities.

If we are going into the educational field to make a contribution to one private institution, I should like to see some sympathy and some interest manifested in these thousands and millions of school children in the different States of the Union whose educational opportunities are at this time seriously impaired in these depressed times. I have not seen for them in this body such enthusiasm as some have displayed for the private school in question. Zeal is shown only for this one private institution in the United States. It is proposed even to enter into the field of extravagance to show favoritism-extravagance under the present times and the financial situation which confronts the country. It is proposed to give them $400,000 to put up a building, and to make the funds available immediately, to give them library facilities or opportunities, when the millions of boys and girls back in the States are not even having the coveted opportunity of a full term in the city or rural schools, this being due to the financial distress which prevails throughout the country, causing curtailment in the school terms in thousands of communities.

I can not support an amendment of this kind when we are going to neglect and pass by unobserved and unnoticed these millions of ambitious and deserving boys and girls back in the States who just now do not have in full measure the necessary school privilege. I do not think we should deal lavishly with this institution by providing its students the luxury of library facilities while millions of the youth of the land yearning for that opportunity to which the Senator from Illinois referred, are being neglected and apparently not given even a passing thought or sympathy by some.

I should like to see some legislation to help them. I saw a majority of the Senate refuse to make contributions for the purpose of assisting through the States the unemployed. They were not willing to provide funds that would aid in feeding millions of people in this country who are without food, without shelter, without warm and comfortable raiment. Yet now we have a proposition to contribute practically half a million dollars for the purpose of erecting a magnificent library building to give a few people the privileges they will get through a library in Howard University, the only private institution in America that is honored by munificent contributions from the Federal Treasury.

I want all children to have appropriate educational opportunities, regardless of race or color, but this proposal is the height of discrimination. I want to know why it is that this policy of Federal Government gifts to a private school ever crept into this Government. A far wiser and more just policy would have been to make liberal contributions to all the public schools.

Aside from my general views on the subject, I regard it as grossly extravagant at this time to make this appropriation of $400,000. I should much have preferred to have seen these patriotic Senators, these Senators who have so much love for the education of the youth of the country, propose a measure which would have reached the hundreds of thousands and millions of ambitious and deserving boys and girls of the country back in the State of West Virginia, the State of Florida, the State of Illinois, the State of New York, and all them throughout the entire Union.

I know that the States have made wonderful strides in the advancement of their educational system, and the system is very generously and patriotically supported in every State, so far as I know. It is certainly true in my State. Under ordinary circumstances and the usually prosperous times, the door of educational opportunity stands ajar, bidding the ambitious youth to come in and obtain an education. But our educational activities, as well as all other functions of government, are to-day stricken and suffering on account of the financial depression which prevails throughout America; and for that reason millions of children are not being given the educational opportunity that is extended to them and open to them during normal times.

I will join with the Senator from West Virginia or any others in a plan which will provide some money for taking care of the public schools in the States, to replenish their treasuries or provide credit facilities with which they can obtain funds to carry on their schools for a full term; but under the circumstances, I think, as I see them, it would be absolutely an unwise governmental policy to make a contribution for what is practically a luxury; that is, a luxury considering the present condition of the country.

I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 98, line 12, after the numerals "1933," it is proposed to add:

Provided further, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated the Secretary of the Interior may also approve projects, incur obligations, and enter into contracts for additional work not exceeding a total of $2,500,000, and his action in so doing shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government for the payment of the cost thereof and appropriations hereafter made for the construction of roads in national parks and monuments shall be considered available for the purpose of discharging the obligation so created.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, on page 107, line 20, after the word "institution," I move to insert the following:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of oleomargarine or butter substitutes, except for cooking purposes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I make the point of order on that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the point of order?

Mr. SMOOT. Is it that it is legislation on an appropriation bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair may announce that the amendment is only a limitation on the appropriation.

Mr. CONNALLY. May I have the amendment stated, please?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The legislative clerk stated the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, does the Chair hold that that is a limitation?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is a limitation. Mr. CONNALLY. And therefore in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. And therefore not subject to a point of order.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, while this amendment may be a limitation and technically in order, in spirit it is legislation. It is in fact legislation; and I very much regret to try to legislate.

Last year, when a similar amendment was offered to the military appropriation bill, the War Department protested against it; and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, was successful in preventing the adoption of that amendment.

I hope the Senate will not adopt this amendment. It is a legislative discrimination against a legitimate product. Senate can legislate in the regular way; and if it wants to destroy oleomargarine it may do so. This, however, is not the way to do it; and I earnestly ask the Senate not to take that action by adopting this amendment.

Oleomargarine is already taxed. It is already heavily taxed. It is already discriminated against by law. The Senator from Wisconsin, by law, would prevent people from buying oleomargarine even though they might want to buy it. I have heard him on this floor exclaim in lurid tones about the "personal liberty" of people to do what they want to do; and yet the Senator from Wisconsin proposes to restrict personal liberty in this case in order to help some of his dairy people.

I have dairy people in my State, too. The Legislature of Texas passed an oleomargarine law; but they passed it in the regular, constitutional way, after proper consideration. I do not believe it is just and fair to take this indirect method of penalizing and taxing and driving out of existence that which all the chemists say is a wholesome, healthful article of diet.

Under this appropriation for St. Elizabeths Hospital, why not leave the medical staff to select the diet? The inmates are insane patients. They have to have a special sort of treatment. It may be that they require a particular kind of diet. Can the Senator from Wisconsin say that he knows more about what they ought to eat than the expert physicians who are in charge of that hospital? Is the Senator from Wisconsin better qualified to pass upon the diet of people in St. Elizabeths Hospital than Doctor White, who is a nationally known expert in mental diseases?

I submit to the Senate that this is not a proper or a legitimate amendment to this bill; and I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will withdraw it.

The Senator says in this amendment that oleomargarine must not be bought except for cooking purposes. If it is used in cooking, it will enter the human body just the same as if it is used on the table without cooking. Why does not the Senator prevent its use absolutely if it is so harmful? If it is deleterious, if it is harmful, if it is injurious to these wards of the Government, why permit its use indirectly and poison their systems by permitting them to use it when cooked, while refusing to let them eat it on the table?

I do not understand the mental processes of the Senator from Wisconsin. I do not understand his ratiocination when he provides that oleomargarine may be used when cooked, on the theory that then it will not be harmful, while if it is not cooked it will be harmful.

I am more concerned right now with the proper treatment of people in St. Elizabeths Hospital than I am with a selfish desire of the Senator from Wisconsin to penalize other producers for the benefit of the producers of his own State. Let me say that the Senator from Wisconsin has no monopoly on the dairy producers of the country. They are in every State; and the people who have to eat are entitled to some consideration in this time of stress.

The Senator from Wisconsin a few days ago was declaiming loudly here in behalf of appropriating $375,000,000 to feed the hungry and to clothe the naked; and yet he would, if he could, deny to the poor the right to purchase an article of food that is wholesome, healthful, and cheap, and would seek by law to make them buy some other kind of food which costs them more.

I hope the Senate will reject this amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas evidently overlooks the purpose of the amendment. I call his attention to the fact that in 1931 the Senate passed a that the Senator from Wisconsin embraces this opportunity | similar amendment when the War Department appropriation bill was before the Senate. That was approved February 23, 1931.

The Senate view then was that soldiers were entitled to proper diet. Congress has also prescribed a diet for the Navy, which includes butterfat.

The Senator, when he discusses the right of the poor to purchase what they want, overlooks the fact that the people who are in St. Elizabeths Hospital have no discretion. There are people there who can exercise no discretion. The people in that institution are those suffering from mental and nervous disorders. They are incompetent to exercise any discretion whatever. They are compelled to eat that which the superintendent gives them. They have no voice in the matter.

Let me read to the Senate the character and type of people who are in St. Elizabeths Hospital; but, before doing so, let me call to the attention of the Senator from Texas the fact that, according to the report made, not only as to last year, but as to the prior year, I believe two prior years, perhaps in all the past, the Superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital did not supply one single ounce of butter for the use of those inmates. Not a single ounce of it is served to the men and women who are in that institution. In the cafeteria, where the employees obtain their meals in the institution, those employees who have the right of choice may choose butter or butter substitutes and pay such prices as are charged, but the inmates of the institution, those suffering from mental and nervous disorders. have no choice whatever, nor has the superintendent of that institution furnished them with a single ounce of the necessary and essential part of the diet in the treatment and care of men and women suffering from mental and nervous disorders.

I call the Senator's attention to the fact that on February 8, 1932, I filed with the Senate, and there was inserted in the RECORD, a full statement of the use of butter and butter substitutes in St. Elizabeths Hospital, and that report was furnished by the hospital. Let me call attention now to the men and women who are treated in the hospital.

St. Elizabeths Hospital for the Insane contains persons from the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard; insane inmates of the national homes for disabled volunteer soldiers; those who became insane since their entry into the naval and military service of the United States; insane civilians in the quartermaster service of the Army, insane persons transferred from the Canal Zone who have been admitted to the hospital and who are indigent; American citizens legally adjudged insane in the Dominion of Canada whose legal residence is in one of the States, Territories, or the District of Columbia; beneficiaries of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, and insane beneficiaries of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

Those are the men-and of course there are women-who are treated in that institution, and I dare say that if the two distinguished physicians and surgeons who are Members of the Senate were here on the floor at this time, they would confirm what I say, that it is absolutely necessary and essential to the treatment and care of insane people, and people suffering from nervous disorders, to have that vitamin contained only in butter.

Mr. President, that is a brief statement of what this amendment provides for. There is no purpose in the amendment to discriminate against substitutes. The purpose of the amendment is to compel the use of a wholesome, essential food product necessary in the treatment of the insane and those suffering from nervous disabilities.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wonder whether the Senator from Wisconsin would be willing to add an amendment to this bill to provide that no beef should be purchased at St. Elizabeths Hospital unless it were from beef cattle and not from dairy cattle? The Senator knows that from a beef standpoint the food character of the beef from regular beef cattle is much superior to that from dairy cattle; and I am wondering whether the Senator would be willing to offer an amendment, to become permanent law, that all beef that is sold should be stamped and marked to the effect that it was from dairy cattle when such should be the fact?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the Senator is so extremely facetious that I do not believe his question requires an answer.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought the Senator's answer would be similar to what it was. In other words, he is perfectly willing to deny the experts out at St. Elizabeths the right to say what they think the diet of the patients out there should be; he is willing to set up his judgment as being superior, to theirs as to what the diet of those insane patients and the employees should be; yet when I inquire as to his attitude toward labeling beef from dairy cattle which is sold as beef, the Senator's reply is that such an inquiry is facetious, that that is not serious. He can not conceive why people should not have old, worn-out, broken-down dairy cows foisted upon them as fresh "baby beef"; thinks that it is fine, perfectly consistent to have that sort of fraud practiced on them; but he is willing to deny people the right to buy oleomargarine when it is placarded on the oleomargarine that it is oleomargarine, when it is labeled so that nobody can misunderstand what he is buying, with the Government already discriminating against it by saying that before a person can buy it he has to pay a Federal tax for the privilege of eating it. That is the sort of liberty and freedom and equality the Senator from Wisconsin believes in.

Let me suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that this sort of legislation is so objectionable that I do not know of any way by which we can counteract it except by adopting the same methods to other products he urges as to oleomargarine.

The distinguished senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Kendrick] is a famous cattle man, and he tells me of the foisting on the beef market of dairy cattle which have served their purpose as dairy cattle, old, broken-down, worn-out antiques, which have lost their power of producing butter; that the dairy people then carry them off and sell them to the packers, who butcher them, and then they are sold throughout the country as "baby beef," perhaps.

Oh, the Senator does not favor labeling them. He does not favor letting the guileless purchaser know that that is an old, weather-beaten, broken-down cow. He is willing for them to believe that it is a fresh, young steer. [Laughter.] But in the case of oleomargarine—holy horrors! Do not let a man buy something with his eyes open, when he sees that it is oleomargarine; do not let him do it. Make him, by law, buy butter from Wisconsin. [Laughter.] Put the label on it.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, do these insane patients buy that butter?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; but the Government is buying it for them. The Senator suggests that these patients are insane, therefore they do not buy it. These insane patients do not choose their food. That food is chosen for them by experts, by men trained in the science of mental diseases, and yet the Senator would arrogate to himself a knowledge superior to that of these experts, and he would proceed to tell them in an appropriation bill what kind of food the expert doctors shall feed to the insane.

Why does not the Senator be consistent and go farther? Why does he not tell them how to treat the patients? Why does he not prescribe in this bill the kind of apothecary-shop products which shall be given to these patients? Why does he not outline the recent discoveries in psychiatry and tell them what sort of exercises to give the patients. Why stop at oleomargarine? The Senator's interest is not selfish, the Senator's interest is altruistic. He has no eye on Wisconsin and the coming primaries, or the coming general election. His heart is burning with love for the poor patients out at St. Elizabeths. He does not want their poor systems wrecked by this terrible thing, by accidentally getting a little oleomargarine.

If he is so altruistic, so wrapped up in those patients, and knows more about how they should be treated than the doctors, why does he not prescribe for their treatment? I am amazed that the Senator should overlook the treatment of their minds and devote all his attention to the treatment of their stomachs. They are insane; they can not choose their food, and the Senator wants to choose it for them. That is the position of the Senator from Wisconsin. He sets himself up as the expert to tell experts how to treat poor, insane, unthinking patients.

I shall expect, when the next bill comes in, to have other amendments offered by the Senator. He certainly will not expend all of his energies on this bill. He will be telling the people in Walter Reed Hospital just how the doctors should amputate the limbs of those poor soldiers out there who are wounded. He ought to go farther and tell them how to treat their various ailments, because his interest is purely in the interest of the patients. He has no other interest than to help the poor patients.

I submit that these remarks simply illustrate what a bad practice it is, and how unfair, to use this sort of method of legislating, when the Senate deviates from its regular processes of bringing in bills which have been considered by committees, and an effort is made to tie on a bill a limitation, under the pretext of being a limitation, when it is not, in fact, really a limitation, because what it directs is affirmative. A limitation is negative. This is an affirmative direction, that they must buy butter; not that they shall not buy oleomargarine, but that they must buy butter.

I ask the Senate to reject this amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I just want to suggest that I enjoyed very much the attempted ridicule of the Senator from Texas, but the Senator forgets that the men and women in St. Elizabeths Hospital have no votes in Texas. Therefore his ridicule may be directed elsewhere.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator's comment I can not pass without notice.

The Senator says that I am conscious of the fact that the poor insane out in St. Elizabeths do not vote in Texas. I am aware of that fact. If they voted out in Wisconsin, I am not sure that the Senator's amendment would be offered here at this time.

The Senator has revealed where his eyes are set. His eyes are concerned with the ballot boxes, evidently. His eyes are out in Wisconsin, and he takes opportunity to use the poor insane in St. Elizabeths Hospital to do what he thinks will promote his interests out in Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. Is the Senator making a vigorous attempt to keep his halo on straight?

Mr. CONNALLY. My "halo"? I did not know that the Senator from Wisconsin knew what a halo was. [Laughter.]

Let me say to the Senator from Wisconsin that if I were going to seek to promote my political advantage I would not follow the example of the Senator from Wisconsin, and pick out a lot of poor mental incompetents, men whose minds have been blinded, men and women whose reason has been deranged, poor, unfortunate wards of the Government. I would not select them as the vehicle by which I should undertake to promote my political fortunes. If the Senator from Texas shall ever make political plays that appeal to demagoguery, the Senator from Texas at least shall endeavor to employ an agency that will know of his effort and will understand its consequences. But the Senator from Wisconsin, since he has dragged in politics, makes it perfectly apparent that he is willing to use these poor, dumb creatures as the victims of his own political purposes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I was not recognized by the Chair, though I was on my feet just before the vote was taken on the amendment submitted by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Hatfield] providing an appropriation for the colored students at Howard University, which was just adopted and for which I voted. May I say now very briefly that I feel that the Government has already committed itself to the support of this particular institution and that it would have been very unfair and very unfortunate if this support had been withheld at this time. I am very glad, therefore, that the amendment was agreed to and the appropriation granted, and I am glad also that I was one of those who voted for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Blaine], upon which the yeas and nays have been demanded. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following
Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Couzens	Jones	Robinson, Ark.
Austin	Dale	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Bankhead	Davis	Kendrick	Schall
Barbour	Dickinson	King	Sheppard
Barkley	Dill	La Follette	Shipstead
Bingham	Fletcher	Logan	Shortridge
Blaine	Frazier	Long	Smith
Bratton	George	McGill	Smoot
Brookhart	Glass	McKellar	Steiwer
Bulkley	Goldsborough	McNary	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Gore	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Byrnes	Hale	Moses	Townsend
Capper	Harrison	Neely	Tydings
Caraway	Hatfield	Norbeck	Vandenberg
Carey	Hawes	Norris	Walsh, Mont.
Connally	Hayden	Nye	White
Coolidge	Hebert	Oddie .
Copeland	Hull	Patterson
Costigan	Johnson	Pittman

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Blaine], upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COPELAND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess]. Not knowing how he would vote I withhold my vote.

Mr. HULL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Keyes] and vote "yea."

Mr. PATTERSON (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens]. In his absence and not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Waterman], and vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Glenn]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to announce the necessary absence on official business of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Balley], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black], the Senator from Florida [Mr. Trammell], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Coolinge], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh].

Mr. HATFIELD (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Morrison] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted. Mr. HATFIELD. I have a pair with that Senator, and in his absence, not knowing how he would vote, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. SMITH. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. Watson]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Balley] and vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed], who is necessarily absent. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Coolidge] and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. HATFIELD. I find that I can transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Walcott], which I do, and vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY. I wish to announce the following general

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Cutting] with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh];

The Senator from California [Mr. Shortridge] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Harris];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]; and

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black].

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 32, as follows: YEAS—33

So Mr. BLAINE's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I sent to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 111, line 20, insert the following:

For the State of Louisiana, to be used in the work of eradicating illiteracy among the colored people, the sum of $200,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment that it has not been estimated for, that it has not been reported by a standing committee, and that it would be an increase in the appropriation. For those reasons I contend the point of order will lie against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is clearly of the opinion that the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana is not in order under paragraph 1 of Rule XVI, and therefore sustains the point of order made by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. LONG. I appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. LONG. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I beg the Senator to withdraw the appeal. The ruling of the Chair is absolutely correct, and I hope the Senator will withdraw his appeal.

Mr. LONG. On what point?

Mr. ASHURST. I say that the ruling of the Chair is correct. Even those who might be inclined to favor the amendment would be obliged to vote to sustain the Chair. Let the Senator withdraw the appeal, because, under our rules, the Chair's ruling is absolutely correct.

Mr. LONG. Is it under the rule relating to the relevancy of amendments?

Mr. ASHURST. No. The amendment proposes to make an appropriation which has never been estimated for by the Budget Bureau and has not been reported by a standing

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Louisiana desires, the Chair will be glad to read that paragraph of the rules.

Mr. LONG. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (reading):

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law.

Mr. LONG. I withdraw my appeal, Mr. President.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from North Dakota proposes, on page 6, to strike out lines 1 to 5, inclusive.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the lines that are affected by the amendment are for the expenses of the Board of Indian Commissioners, $11,800, "of which amount not to exceed $6,700 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia."

I may say that the Board of Indian Commissioners is a board appointed under authority of an old, old law-a civilian commission to make investigations of Indian mattersand I believe it reports to the Secretary of the Interior. The members of the Board of Indian Commissioners do not receive any salaries, but are paid their traveling expenses when out on official business; and they have an office force here in the city of Washington.

My object in offering this amendment is not to abolish the Board of Indian Commissioners but simply to cut out the expense of $11,300 at this time, as I believe it is unnecessary, and the money could a great deal better be used for other purposes-for feeding the poor and needy Indians, for furnishing livestock of which they are in need, or for building homes of which the Indians are in need.

The Board of Indian Commissioners consists of some 9 or 10 members, I believe. I have nothing against any of them. Some of them I happen to know are very high-class men and women, and I think they are honestly interested in Indian affairs. I think, however, the general feeling is that they have sided with the Bureau of Indian Affairs; and in some instances that I know of they have been sent out and have reported what seems to me to have been a whitewash.

To cite just one case, when former Senator Pine, of Oklahoma, first came to this body he was interested in having an investigation made in regard to charges against a certain Indian superintendent down in Oklahoma, and also against some attorneys who were accused of grafting in affairs handled for the Indians. He succeeded in getting the Indian Bureau or the Secretary of the Interior to send down the president and secretary at that time of this Board of Indian Commissioners. They went down there and held some meetings, and apparently made some investigations, but reported favorably to this superintendent and also to the attorneys, Senate not to adopt this amendment.

and gave them a clean bill of health. A short time after that a grand jury down there was called to consider the very same charges against the very same people, and the grand jury indicted the Indian superintendent and also some 8 or 10 attorneys, as I recall; and most of them were convicted. I

I mention this as one case. It seems to me that this provision might well be stricken out at this time, in order to keep down expenses.

The Senate committee reduced the expenses in the office here from $9,000 to $6,700. As I understand, that simply cuts out the salary of one stenographer. If the board are to function this year, it seems to me it is a mistake to cut down their office force, as the only real good that they might accomplish would be through reports that they make after making investigations.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what his amendment is? I tried to follow it.

Mr. FRAZIER. The amendment is on page 6, to strike out from line 1 to line 5, inclusive.

Mr. FLETCHER. That does away with the whole board?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator is right about it. Mr. FRAZIER. It does away with the expenses for this

Mr. FLETCHER. I mean the appropriation for it for this year. I think that is right.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the board consists of nine commissioners. Then they have a secretary. The Senate has stricken out a clerk at $2,300, leaving the appropriation of $11,800, of which amount not to exceed $6,700 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

I desire to call attention to at least one case that occurred when General Scott, a member of the board, was called to the State of Utah some years ago. We had an uprising of Indians there. General Scott came to Utah. I want to say to the Senate now that if we had not had General Scott or a representative from the Government there, we would have had bloodshed and destruction of property there the limits of which no one can tell.

The Indians have the greatest regard for General Scott. and, I think, also for the other members of the board; and all that is asked to maintain this board is the sum of $11,800. I can not conceive of a personal pique or a personal feeling that would even suggest such a thing as striking out this provision of the law.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FRAZIER. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah when it was that General Scott went out to Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I should judge about 10 or 12 years ago.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is the time when there was a sort of an uprising and almost a civil war between the whites and the Indians in Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. FRAZIER. I recall that. I was under the impression that it was longer ago than that, however.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that if General Scott had not done anything else-and he is not drawing a cent of compensation for his work on this board—he did a wonderful piece of work on that occasion; and I do not think the Senator will deny the fact that he stands high in the estimation of the Indians of this country.

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, I have a very high regard for General Scott.

Mr. SMOOT. The same thing is true of the other members. I do not know personally as to the other members. but I think they stand in the highest regard among the Indians of the country as well as the whites of the country.

The whole thing comes down to this: All of the commissioners serve without compensation, and the only expense attached to the whole matter is $11,800. I certainly ask the Senator from Utah if he can recall any other outstanding accomplishments of this particular board?

Mr. SMOOT. We did not go into the question of what they had accomplished in past years. I simply mention this instance because I know that to be a fact, because it was in my own State, and I was very deeply concerned about it at the time, as was every person not only in western Colorado but in Utah as well.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator from Utah thinks $11,800 is a very small amount. Looked at in some ways, it is; and yet $11,800 would feed a lot of hungry Indians for many, many days at the rate at which they are furnished rations at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from North Dakota offers the following amendment: On page 18, line 21, strike out "$140,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$113,000."

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this is a reimbursable appropriation for the Klamath Indians of Oregon.

When the bill was before the House committee, one of the representatives of the Klamath Indians went before the committee and succeeded in getting the appropriation reduced somewhat. He also went before the Senate committee and asked for a further reduction of $27,000, which is the amount covered by this amendment; but no further reduction was made.

The Klamath Indians have a great deal of timber. That is their principal asset. For the past several years their sale of timber has averaged about $1,000,000 a year. This year it has fallen down considerably. Under the law the department has made a ruling that 8 per cent of the sales of the timber may be used for what may be termed "operating expenses" of the bureau, hiring scalers and caring for the timber, looking after the contracts, and all that sort of thing.

There is a great deal of money being spent. This 8 per cent during the past 5 or 6 years is more than has been spent by the department for the care of this timber. There has been a balance left each year. They have built roads and telephone lines with the balance.

When the subcommittee visited this reservation some time ago we drove around through this forest and spent an entire day there. There was a network of roads through the forest. One of them was named after the superintendent at that time, called the Arnold Highway. Many of these roads are practically not used by the Indians at all. They are used by the logging companies, and, of course, as firebreaks.

The per capita payment of the Klamaths has been very high. It is practically one of the top per capita payments among the Indian reservations in the way of expenditures by the department for the care of the Indians. In the fiscal year 1930 there was spent, out of the Klamath fund, $254.50 per capita for every man, woman, and child in that Indian reservation. It is, I think, the second highest, next only to the Mescaleros out in New Mexico, in the way of per capita expenditures. It is altogether too high. The sales of timber have fallen off materially during the past summer. The 8 per cent, they figure, is not enough to take care of the situation, to keep on the number of employees that they have there under the present conditions; and the number of their employees is very large.

When the sales of timber averaged about a million dollars per year there was a balance left over. Under some old law that balance reverts to what are known as miscellaneous receipts in the United States Treasury. At the present time, those receipts for the Klamath Indians that have reverted to the United States Treasury amount to something around

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the | $50,000 that has been taken from the fund of the Klamath Indians and put into the United States Treasury.

> It seems to me that this is something that should be taken care of. Last year a bill along this line was introduced, but it failed of passage, and nothing further has been done up to the present time.

> The delegate from the Klamaths recommends this reduction of $27,000, reimbursable. There is a little more left in the fund, with the $27,000 deducted, than the 8 per cent of their sales this year will amount to. I believe the amendment is a reasonable one, and that these other expenses should be kept down.

> Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, last year there was an appropriation for this purpose of $250,000. There was an estimate this year of $150,000, and the House cut the $150,000 down to $140,000.

> We all recognize the fact that the sale of timber from the Klamath Reservation has been less, or will be less, during the coming year than it was last year. This item applies to the coming year. The House, as I say, cut the estimate from $150,000 to $140,000. We were asked to reinstate the larger amount, and the committee refused to do so.

> Of course, the roads there are for firebreaks as well as for roads. It is absolutely necessary to have firebreaks there. If they were not there, if a fire ever broke out there, more than likely the whole standing timber would be destroyed. The roads must be kept up, and this appropriation is for those two purposes. We have cut the amount now from $250,000 down to $140,000. The committee first thought that perhaps they ought to appropriate the amount of the estimate, but we did not change the amount appropriated by the House.

> I certainly hope the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota will be rejected.

> The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER]. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt. Those in favor of the amendment will please rise and stand until they are counted.

> Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if we are going to have a division, I suggest the absence of a quorum. There are very few Senators present.

> The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names; a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier].

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this amendment is to reduce the Klamath Indian appropriation for forest work, a reimbursable amount, by $27,000. There is now in this forestry act $67,420, to be used by the Government in the protection of the forest. It does not include an item for fire prevention or for beetle control. There are other items in the bill for those purposes.

This item is for the payment of men whose names are given in a list. In November there were 50 employees on

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the Senator made a misstatement unwittingly. This is not for fire prevention. The language is:

For expenses incidental to the sale of timber, and for the expenses of administration, including fire prevention, of Indian forest lands from which such timber is sold to the extent that the proceeds of such sales are sufficient for that purpose, $140,000.

Mr. FRAZIER. If the Senator will also note on line 14. page 19, he will find that it is for fire suppression, and so forth. And again, on page 18, there is a similar provision, for the proper care of forests, including fire prevention, and so forth.

Mr. SMOOT. The item to which the Senator refers is with reference to the reservation in Wisconsin.

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, no. It says:

For the preservation of timber on Indian reservations and allotments other than the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is correct. The Senator said it did not include fire prevention, but the Senator is wrong. Mr. FRAZIER. I say that there are other provisions for fire prevention.

Mr. SMOOT. Not on this particular reservation.

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Not other than general appropriations for fire prevention.

Mr. FRAZIER. General appropriations; yes. That is one trouble with this appropriation bill—one can not tell from the items in it what it means.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator must understand that this is the very best stand of timber there is owned by Indians anywhere in the United States.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is all very well.
Mr. SMOOT. I think one of the very splendid ways of expending money for the protection of that timber is as we have provided in this bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. It is being sold off very rapidly.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator owned the timber himself, he would provide means of fire prevention.

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, yes; but no one can find a private timber reserve anywhere that spends as much money as is spent on the Klamath Reservation by the Government.

The junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Walcott], a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, has made quite a study in regard to handling timber, and he made a statement before our subcommittee, at a hearing held on the 25th and 26th of February, 1931, and I want to read a paragraph or two of his statement. The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs were present at the hearing. The Senator from Connecticut said:

I went over some lumber contracts that I, as a white man, I went over some lumber contracts that I, as a white man, having been connected with a large lumber business all my life, would no more think of making, would no more think of cutting the timber, no more think of letting it go, than I would think of cutting off my right arm. Furthermore, I would never think of trying to sell stumpage at this time when it is the lowest in 20 years. Yet I am told by some of the Indians that a large contract may be let between now and next fall. It would be suicided to may be let between now and next fall. It would be suicidal to the Indians to do a thing like that. We should wait until there is a market for stumpage before letting such a contract. I have had this up before two or three other large lumber companies. It is distinctly an unfair contract from the Indians' point of

Mr. SMOOT. That has nothing to do with this particular appropriation.

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, no; of course it has not; but it has to do with the Indians' own money that is being expended by representatives of the United States Government, of the Department of the Interior. They have set aside 8 per cent in the past, which has proven to be too much, and it has reverted to the Treasury of the United States-money that belonged to the Indians from the sale of their property. Fifty thousand dollars of it is in the Treasury now. The Indians want to cut down this appropriation by $27,000 more. I believe they know what they want, and I think they are entitled to have it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 18 of the bill, in line 21, where the figures "$140,000" occur, the Senator seeks to reduce that by $23,000?

Mr. FRAZIER. By $27,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the total amount the Indians received during the last year from the sale of their timber under these various contracts after paying all expenses?

Mr. FRAZIER. Up until last year, it was practically a million dollars.

Mr. SMOOT. It was $1,250,912.

Mr. McKELLAR. But that has been reduced very much since that date.

Mr. SMOOT. That was the figure in 1931.

Mr. FRAZIER. They do not expect it to be that high this year, or they would not ask for this appropriation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have before me the report of the Senate committee hearings, and somewhere it was stated that the entire amount the Indians would receive this year would be $38,000; that they would not receive from the contracts all told more than about $250,000.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the estimate for the coming year will be reduced by several hundred thousand dollars in the sale of timber.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt of that, just the same as every other manufacturer of lumber, or anyone selling stumpage to make lumber.

Mr. FRAZIER. I am satisfied that the 8 per cent they have been using in the past would be sufficient for this year. If it is reduced by this $27,000, it will still leave it above the 8 per cent by several thousand dollars.

Mr. SMOOT. It does seem to me that we have cut the item for fire prevention as far as possible. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that last year it was $250,000, and the estimate was $150,000, which the House cut to $140,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. That nets the Indians only $110,000.

Mr. SMOOT. This is just a little over one-half what it was last year, and the estimate is based on the fact that it is not anticipated that there will be the sale of the timber there has been in the past. That is why the amount was cut.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is noted that the proviso attached to this appropriation is, "That this appropriation shall be available for the payment of reasonable rewards for information leading to arrest and conviction of a person or persons setting forest fires in contravention of law." I wish to inquire what part of the appropriation for last year has been employed in paying rewards under that proviso.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I have not the figures as to

Mr. SMOOT. Nor was the committee furnished with the figures. I can not answer the Senator, because in going through the House report I find no reference to that what-

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is there an itemized statement in the RECORD as to how it is proposed to expend the $150,000 estimated for?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. FRAZIER. Seventy-five thousand dollars is for administration of the agency. That is not included in this. Then there is $67,420 for forestry, $20,000 for beetle control, $5,000 for irrigation, and $9,000 for education. If the appropriation for forestry of $67,420 were reduced by $27,000, it would leave a balance of $40,420 for looking after fires out there. The department has the reservation networked and cobwebbed with roads for fire protection, and they have a force of men there. The sum of $40,420 ought to be enough to take care of that matter, when they are selling but little timber, as they will be this coming year.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in my opinion the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota should meet with the approval of the entire Senate. It is justified by the facts and finds support in the report made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier], former Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Pine], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas]. These Senators, charged by the Senate with the duty of making a searching investigation into the condition of the Indians and the conduct of the Indian Bureau, visited the Klamath Reservation and made a fair and impartial examination of all matters within the scope of their authority. They also visited other reservations, examined many witnesses, and assembled a volume of facts concerning the Indians, the treatment accorded them by the Government, and the administration of the Indian Bureau in handling Indian affairs. A number of reports have been submitted, among them being one dealing with the Klamath Reservation. This report condemned some of the reservation employees, particularly Superintendent Arnold, who has been promoted-for reasons which only the Indian Bureau can assign—to a more important position in the Indian Service.

I need not state what all Senators know, that the investigation has been conducted by men of honor, integrity, and their findings can not be ignored by the Senate. Before reading from the Klamath report, submitted by the Senators named, I desire to make a few remarks concerning the reservation. It is not in an agricultural district but situated in a mountainous part of southern Oregon. The Indian Bureau, following its policy of folly in dealing with irrigation projects, inaugurated a reclamation project there. Several hundred thousand dollars have been expended in this unwise enterprise, all of which was a charge upon the Indians. The Preston-Ingle report states that the present investment in the Modoc Point unit is more than the land is worth, and that the actual cost per acre based on lands irrigated under the entire project is $110.20 per acre. Attention will be called before the bill is passed to other irrigation projects, forced upon the Indians by the Indian Bureau, some of which are complete failures and most of which were too costly and impose a burden upon the Indians which they can not meet.

When we come to a discussion of some of the irrigation projects. I shall challenge attention to the Klamath project and to the report made by competent engineers of the Government, and to their recommendations for the abandonment of a number of these so-called irrigation projects, and the transfer of others to the Reclamation Service of the United States.

In view of the claim made by my colleague and the bureau as to the alleged favorable conditions upon this reservation, I invite attention to a letter appearing in the hearings dated October 10, 1931, addressed to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs by Mr. Blair, the new superintendent at the Klamath Reservation. The committee, as I shall show in a moment, reported conditions found at this reservation and recommended in effect that the superintendent be transferred. He was promoted, however, and Mr. Blair has taken his place. Mr. Blair, with a degree of fairness that is commendableand, may I say regretfully, not always found in Indian agents-wrote to the commissioner as follows:

I have office letter of September 28, 1931, giving information in response to my radiogram of September 25 to the effect that the total resources in the Treasury of tribal funds of the Klamath Indians on June 30, 1931, were $793,967.

The funds are being depleted. There will be a further depletion by reason of the extravagance and unwise policy of the Indian Bureau in handling the reservation.

On June 30, 1930, the tribal resources were $1,085,687.42, showa reduction in resources during the last fiscal year of nearly $300,000.

May I add by way of parenthesis, as was indicated by my colleague [Mr. Smoot] last week during the discussion, that the Klamath Reservation contains valuable timber resources, but the lumber business is suffering from the depression as are other industries in the United States. The result is that revenues derived by the Indians from the sale of timber this year will be insignificant in amount.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was stated by one of the witnesses before our committee, and I am looking for his exact words in the hearings, that last year the income from timber sold by the Indians amounted to only $250,000, and for the present year, if these appropriations are made, will amount to about $38,000 instead of about $1,000,000, as it did a year or two ago.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, my colleague has apparently not noted that instead of $250,000, as appropriated last year for this particular purpose, it has been reduced to $140,000.

Mr. KING. I had noted that item, but I think the Senator is referring to the general appropriation and does not include other items which relate to various activities which are charged to the reservation.

Mr. SMOOT. It is for this particular item, the sale of timber and all connected with it.

Mr. KING. There are other items in the bill relating to the Klamath Reservation, and also the 8 per cent deducted from timber sales and used by the bureau, in part at least, upon the reservation. Let me proceed with the letter from the present superintendent, who, by the way, has been here for two or three weeks, presumably brought here to aid in fortifying the Indian Bureau in its persistent effort to secure appropriations entirely too large for the Klamath Reservation:

The proceeds from timber sales from January 1, 1931, to the present date are approximately $328,000.

All logging camps have closed down. We are making a per an logging camps have closed down. We are making a per capita payment this month of about $270,000. If one is made next spring, it will amount to approximately $200,000. Adding the operating costs for the fiscal year, there is going to be very little left on June 30, 1932. It is indicated below:

Per capita payment, October, 1931 Per capita payment, April, 1932, estimated Operating expense, fiscal year 1932, estimated
Total	645, 000
Tribal funds, June 30, 1931Estimated expenditures	793, 967 645, 000

Balance_

To which should be added timber sales, for fiscal year 1932, estimated not to exceed $250,000, making a total of $398,967.

It will be seen that not more than $400,000 can possibly be available for operating expenses of this agency and per capita payments during the fiscal year 1933. Does this not indicate a critical situation? I do not believe your office wishes to take the last available dollar out of tribal funds. As far as I am able to learn, the lumber market is in bad shape, and it is going to be some time before there will be any considerable recovery. It seems apparent to me that your office will need to ask for supplementary assistance in operating this agency next fiscal year from gratuity appropriations.

The tribal funds will be exhausted, resources derived from the sale of timber inadequate to support the Indians, and then resort will be had to the Treasury of the United States. In the face of this record, and this appeal of their own representative, the bureau with a persistency that is not commendable demands large appropriations to maintain upon this reservation considerably more than 100 employees in the timber and upon the reservation.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. FRAZIER. I invite the attention of the Senator to the fact that, as I understand it, out of the present appropriation there is only $1,800 of gratuity appropriations for the Klamath Indians. That is one-half of the salary of the day-school supervisor.

Mr. KING. I continue reading from Mr. Blair's letter:

I feel it is my duty to call this situation to your attention at this time when appropriations are being considered by the committees of Congress. I realize that during times like this it is essential for the Federal appropriations to be reduced rather than increased.

This is one of the few reports that I have seen from persons in the bureau suggesting a reduction in appropriations. I think Mr. Blair ought to be commended and promoted for sound and eminently proper counsel which he gives to the bureau, but which counsel, of course, will not be

However, I feel that serious consideration must be given to the immediate future at Klamath. I have tried to show in this letter how the income of this tribe is being reduced. The following figures will probably throw additional light on the situation:

Timber sales during September, 1929, approximately $222,000.
Timber sales during September, 1930, approximately $102,000.
Timber sales during September, 1931, approximately $22,000.

Now the logging camps are all shut down. From what source are the Indians to derive their income? That is not so important apparently as it is to provide jobs for scores of white employees, most of them having but little to do. But they are loaded upon the Indians and fed from the diminishing revenues. Most of them are there against the will of the Indians and the constant violent protests which they have constantly made. They have a representative now in Washington who has been appealing to the bureau to eliminate a large number of these employees and to reduce the salaries of others. The demands are treated with indifference.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. The examination of Mr. Dodd, on page 151 of the Senate Appropriations Committee hearings, might throw some light on what the Senator is now talking about.

That comes from the tribal funds of the Klamath Indians, and we feel that such a reduction will result in serious curtailment of the activities on this reservation.

Senator McKellar. What kind of curtailments, Mr. Dodd?
Mr. Dodd. In the maintenance of our regular administrative work, the maintenance of the hospital, and the many activities that are now being handled, including the distribution of tribal funds that is made twice a year.

Bear in mind there will be no tribal funds to distribute this year if this huge appropriation is made.

A little later, on page 152, I asked Mr. Dodd:

Where are we going to get all this money? I asked that question this morning.

Mr. Dopp. This money does not come from the Treasury, Senator; it is a part of the fund derived from their timber sales.

He might as well have said, "Senator, you need not have any concern about this. This is Indian money, and we are building up just whatever organization we think may be necessary or which we may please to build in order that we may get as much of this Indian money as possible." think that explains why they take this attitude.

Mr. KING. Mr. Blair, in his letter, states, there will have to be resort to the Treasury for a gratuity, because of the absorption of all the revenue in these enormous expenditures which have characterized the Indian Bureau in the past and which, if Congress does not intervene to protect the Indians, will continue indefinitely. There are more than 6,000 Government employees in the bureau, and they must be continued, even though the Indians' farms are depleted, and the taxpayers of the United States must be further

May I say at this point, before proceeding to the con-sideration of the committee report, that the Indian Bureau has pursued such as unwarranted course with respect to these Indians that it has resulted in a diminution of the revenues which they might have obtained from their property. As I indicated a few moments ago there are two available sources of income—first, from the sale of timber, and, secondly, from raising of cattle and a limited number of sheep upon the reservation.

The reservation is about 40 by 60 miles in area, and contains several towns in which live 5,000 or 6,000 white persons and between 1,300 and 1,400 Indians of full blood and mixed blood, all of whom live in permanent homes. An extensive system of costly roads has been built, largely at the expense of the Indians. Many of the roads are unnecessary, or at least of no utility to the Indians, but were built for the benefit of the whites who have contracts to obtain timber upon the reservation. Instead of building their own roads, the contracting white lumbermen have had the benefit of funds taken from the Indians for the construction of roads. Against the protest of the Indians their lands have been grazed by sheep owned by white people. Leases have been made against the protests of the Indians to a large number of white persons who had large flocks of sheep. They have overgrazed the reservation until to-day its capacity to sustain animals has been materially reduced and the lands seriously injured. The bureau, with despotic attitude, expressed its purpose to continue to grant leases to sheepmen. In so doing it would, in my opinion, violate the law, as it has in the past, in executing leases without the consent of the Indians.

I should add that the bureau has with a finesse and sophistication that excite wonder if not admiration called leases "permits."

Finally, after this evasion of the law was challenged, as I am told, the bureau has within the past few days announced that so far as the Klamath Reservation is concerned it will not execute leases or "permits" for the grazing of sheep, at least for the coming year. The Indians have been injured by the leasing policy of the bureau. Many of them have cattle, but their herds have been reduced or not increased as they normally would have been if the white sheepmen had not taken their ranges. It is obvious that when sheep graze right up to the homes of the Indians and encroach upon the lands used by them for the grazing of their animals they will suffer serious losses. In my opinion, the bureau's course in this matter has not been just or fair to the Indians.

The committee consisting of the Senators named a few moments ago made a careful study of the Klamath Reservation and submitted a report, a part of which is as follows:

The subcommittee finds an extravagant administration both of the agency activities and the timber-supervision work carried on by the Indian Bureau.

One would suppose, in view of these factual findings, that the committee action would have had some influence with the bureau officials. Quite the reverse. One of the responsible officials of the bureau said, in substance, that "Senators can make all the reports they please, but we are running the reservations." Apparently that is true—Senators may make reports and engineers may make reports, but the bureau continues to run the reservations.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would give the date of the report.

Mr. KING. This report was submitted in February, 1930. Mr. NORRIS. Was the committee appointed by virtue of a resolution of the Senate for the purpose of making that investigation?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it a unanimous report?

Mr. KING. It was a unanimous report of the subcommittee.

Mr. NORRIS. What action, if any, has the full committee taken on it?

Mr. KING. They approved it; that is, the investigating committee. Will the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier] state whether the names I read-Messrs. Frazier. Pine, WHEELER, LA FOLLETTE, and Thomas of Oklahomaconstituted the entire investigating committee?

Mr. FRAZIER. They constituted the full investigating committee.

Mr. KING. This is the report of the committee named by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs and charged with the duty of making the investigation under the following resolution, which was adopted by the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate is authorized and directed to make a general survey of the conditions of the Indians and of the operation and effect of the laws which Congress has passed for the civilization and protection of the Indian tribes; to investigate the relation of the Bureau of Indian Affairs to the persons and property of Indians and the effect of the acts, regulations, and administration of said bureau upon the health, improvement, and welfare of the Indians; and to report its findings in the premises, together with recommendations for the correction of abuses that may be found to exist, and for such changes in the law as will promote the security, economic competence, and progress of the Indians.

Mr. NORRIS. The committee that really did the investigating, as the Senator has read their names, was a subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I understand. Is that correct?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. What I am trying to find out is where this matter stopped. I supposed the subcommittee reported to the full committee. Did the full committee then agree to the report?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I will say that under a resolution adopted by the full committee the subcommittee were not to report to the full committee. Their report was not necessary to be adopted by the full committee; but they were to report directly to the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. They did report to the Senate, as I understand

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; they did.

Mr. NORRIS. And that is their report?
Mr. FRAZIER. That is the report they made.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I understand that the committee has not completed its work. The task assigned them was enormous. They were required to investigate the Indian situation, visit all reservations, study conditions upon the reservations, examine into the health and physical and educational conditions; indeed, they were to study the Indian problem and report their findings with recommendations for needed legislation.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me-

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, I realize very fully the enormous task that they had before them. That is what caused me to make the inquiries I have made. I think the names of the committee the Senator has read, when they have agreed unanimously, constitute a sufficient recommendation of their findings. They do to me, anyway, not knowing anything about the matter outside of their report. Their findings, until evidence to the contrary was offered, at least, would be sufficient to convince me of the absolute truth of the assertions which they make.

Mr. KING. I share the views expressed by the Senator. No more honorable men can be found in this or any other legislative body than the Senators whose names I have read. No one can charge that they are animated by any sinister motives. They desire only to do their duty; a very important duty; their findings ought to be accepted, certainly at their face value, in the absence of any countervailing proof, and acted upon by this body.

When the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier]-a man of integrity and honor-stands here and challenges some of these appropriations, basing his views upon personal investigations made by him and his colleagues, I feel that we would be treating them unfairly, to put the matter in its mildest form. We might just as well cease to have investigations if, when they are fairly made—the testimony is taken, and the conclusions are stated-we are to ignore them, as the Indian Bureau has ignored them.

I might add, Mr. President, that when the Republicans were in control in the House of Representatives a number of years ago an investigation of the Indian Bureau and its activities was conducted by a House committee. A report was made, as I recall, by Mr. Snyder, an eminent Republican Congressman from New York. I may call attention to that report, or to some observations which he made in support of it in the House, in which he referred to the abuses of the Indians by the Indian Bureau and challenged attention to the mistakes which it has made, and to the disregard of constant recommendations for reforms which had been made by the Congress of the United States.

The reports which have been submitted by the distinguished Senators whose names I have read, based upon personal investigations and testimony taken on many reservations, which testimony is found in a large number of printed volumes, certainly are entitled to the serious consideration of the Senate.

Returning to the report:

The subcommittee finds:

An extravagant administration both of the agency activities and the timber-supervision work carried on by the Indian Bureau.

They charged it with extravagance, and still it is extravagant. Only a few years ago the appropriations for the Indian Bureau were but six or seven million dollars. They jumped to $17,000,000; and last year, when Mr. Cramton was the chairman of the Interior Department subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, he reported a bill that carried, as I recall, over $28,000,000. No small part of that sum was in execution of policies imposed upon the Indians against their will, and which were either of no benefit or were injurious to them.

I might add in passing that Mr. Cramton-and I am not saying this by way of criticism at all, because he is a man of ability-is now employed in the Interior Department. I would not refer to that except for the statement by Secretary Wilbur, in his long letter which was inserted in the RECORD by my colleague, in which reference is made to the services of Mr. Cramton in the Indian Department. I do not know from what fund he is paid. It is believed by some who are familiar with the Indian Bureau that his influence is still potential in shaping its policies.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what salary he receives?

Mr. KING. My information is only hearsay, and I do not care to repeat it. Mr. Cramton is an able man, and undoubtedly can render important service in many executive agencies.

Recurring to the report-

Uncontradicted testimony shows a continued increase of total reservation cost and of the ratio of cost to gross income from all sources through the fiscal year 1930 and into the Budget estimates of the Indian Bureau for 1931.

These expenditures were wholly distinct from any per capita payments or other payments to individual Indians from the tribal

The Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler] a day or two ago called attention to the fact that in the Klamath Reservation and others where there were tribal funds, the expenses of the bureau chargeable to such funds were much greater than upon those reservations where there were no tribal funds. The policy seems to have been to engage in wasteful enterprises when there were tribal funds. If appropriations were to be met from tribal funds, there was but little concern. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Mc-Kellarl a moment ago read from the statement made by Mr. Dodd, of the bureau, apparently excusing the large appropriations because they did not come from the Treasury of the United States. Many of these appropriations, however, are a charge upon the Treasury. Indeed, as the tribal funds are diminished and exhausted, there is no alternative but to resort to the United States Treasury. More than $10,000,000 carried in this bill for schools comes out of the Treasury as a gratuity, not out of tribal funds; and the bill carries over $24,000,000, as against the modest sums which were appropriated a number of years ago.

Many persons believe that but little progress has been made by the Government in aiding and civilizing the Indian.

More than one-half billion dollars has been expended by the Government during the last 60 years, and it must be confessed the results have been most disappointing.

The committee further finds:

Protection has been extended by Superintendent Arnold to various employees whom the subcommittee finds gravely at fault.

He protected employees who were paid by the Government and who at the same time were receiving compensation from those who had contracts to obtain the timber from the reservation. They were serving two masters. Superintendent Arnold "extended protection to them," the committee finds.

The committee finds that C. R. Trowbridge, an inspector of the Indian Bureau, reported that the financial clerk exercises a practical dominance over the superintendent, L. D. Arnold, and that Mr. Trowbridge has recommended the transfer of T. W. Wheat away from Klamath Reservation.

Naming him-

Mr. Trowbridge was an inspector in the employ of the bureau, whose duty it was, when designated by the bureau to make an investigation, to do so, and to submit a report. There are a number of inspectors, and they visit reservations, report upon conditions there found and derelictions of employees, and make suggestions for reforms in the bureau administration.

Then the committee says:

This recommendation has not been heeded by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The Modoc Point irrigation project, built at a cost of nearly $200,000 taken from Klamath tribal funds, is a complete failure for Indians and whites alike.

Yet in this bill there is an appropriation carried for this project, which is a complete failure. Continuing the report states:

At least through the year 1928 the reservation hospital, maintained from tribal funds, was boycotted by practically all the Indians because of the inefficiency of the doctor in charge. This doctor was supported by Superintendent Arnold and was even reemployed by Superintendent Arnold after having resigned under criticism.

The subcommittee finds an extreme laxity in the handling of grazing permits on the reservation and in the control of the grazing range, which is leased to outside sheep owners without tribal consent and in the face of tribal protest, although the law requires tribal consent before such permits are issued.

consent and in the face of tribal protest, although the law requires tribal consent before such permits are issued.

The subcommittee finds that Mr. Trowbridge reported that Grazing Supervisor Wiley, supported through thick and thin by Superintendent Arnold, was probably dishonest in his operations, although conclusive legal proof was wanting.

The experimental farm maintained at the reservation is a com-

The experimental farm maintained at the reservation is a complete failure, indeed a mere extravagant pretense; but the superintendent has continued to urge appropriations from the tribal funds for maintaining this acknowledged failure.

The Five-Mile sawmill should be abandoned. It is run at a continuous loss to the tribe, while, at the same time, no Indian is given employment, only whites being employed.

I want to say that the bureau at last and finally have accepted the view of their own representatives, and have ceased operating the sawmill, which cost the Indians no small amount with no benefits derived therefrom.

No Indian is employed as permanent employee in the entire Indian Bureau force of the Klamath Reservation, although the Indian Bureau pay roll, met from Klamath tribal funds, exceeds $160,000 a year, with approximately 50 permanent employees.

The bureau officials talk about trying to help the Indians, but give them but little employment. Preference is given the whites. The Klamath Indians are among the most intelligent and civilized of any of the tribes in the United States. Their children, five or six or seven hundred in number, attend the public schools. More than 150 of the adults pay taxes to the State and county. The children attend school with white children. Payment is made by the Indians for the education of the children in the public schools. Many of the men and women in the tribe are competent to perform many of the duties assigned to white persons. Some are good carpenters and others are familiar with various crafts and with stock raising. They know about timber and lumbering and road building, and should be given employment upon their reservation in preference to the whites.

My attention has been called to an Indian who has a farm and pasture land, amounting to five or six hundred acres, from which he derives considerable revenue.

It is not just to deny employment to Indians, and it is manifestly wrong to exhaust the revenues of the Indians in giving jobs to scores of white people.

For these white employees there are 50 automobiles, and other advantages are enjoyed by them. There are nearly 96 "irregular employees," as they are called, in addition to a large list of permanent employees. This tremendous burden of costs rest upon the backs of the Indians. They have protested, but their protests have been in vain. They have been demanding for years that they be permitted to incorporate and operate their affairs as a corporate entity. Only recently have the department and the bureau exhibited any tolerance of the suggestion. It is the view of many that the Indians of the Klamath Reservation would be better off if the hand of the Government were removed, if there were turned over to them the lands which they own, and they were permitted to manage their own affairs. Many believe that it would be the dawn of a brighter day to these Indians if the strong hand of the Indian Bureau were withdrawn from them.

I have on my desk a statement showing the large number of loans which the white sheepmen having leases on the reservation have made from banks in or near the reservation. The bankers and many of the white people in the same district are insisting upon large appropriations for the Indians. The whites are the beneficiaries of the Indian appropriation. It ought to be said in extenuation of what I consider to be the unwise course of the bureau toward the Indians that the white people are not free from blame. They insist upon these large appropriations. If a boarding school is in their vicinity, pouring out hundreds of thousands of dollars per annum, they object to a policy restricting appropriations or converting boarding schools into reservation day schools. The white people benefit from the millions of dollars that are taken from the tribal funds and from the Treasury of the United States for expenditure upon or without Indian reservations.

The bureau might learn something from the modern method employed in Mexico in dealing with the Indian question. I referred a few days ago to the course of Canada, where 104,000 to 110,000 Indians under the jurisdiction of the Dominion Government are making great progress in industrial and educational development. The policy pursued there seems more advanced and produces better results than the one followed by our Government.

Returning to the report:

The subcommittee finds that Inspector Trowbridge-

That is the bureau's inspector, sent there to make a report—reports the number of employees in the forestry branch to be excessive, and, further, that he reports:

"Gross ignorance of the regulations, both in the forestry and the agency branches."

I have here the testimony given before the Senate and House committees during this session of Congress. In the House hearings I find the names of many employees on the Klamath Reservation—more than 100.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there must be some mistake in that. I am quite sure there is a mistake.

Mr. KING. If there is a mistake, I shall be the first to concede it. First let me read from page 620 of the House hearings.

April pay roll, Klamath Agency, Oreg., 1931: Leroy Arnold, superintendent.

There has been no change in the permanent employees since then, as I recall. I will come to that a little later.

Harold L. Schilling, day-school representative.

I will read only the names of the permanent employees.

Leroy D. Arnold, superintendent; Harold L. Shilling, day-school representative; Orra E. Patterson, physician; Carl A. Gossett, principal clerk; Mildred D. Neáve, clerk; Florence J. Edwardsen (temporary clerk); Vera T. Lamb, jr., clerk; Burney O. Wilson, assistant clerk; Willard N. Hamilton, financial clerk; Dorothy K. Dillstrom, clerk; Clara L. Allen, jr., clerk; Alice G. Andrews, assistant clerk; John W. Libby, forest ranger; Louis C. Mueller, special officer; William A. Bourell, carpenter; Floyd Lovelace, stockman; Bertha D. Wallace, field matron; Zillah Mathias, field nurse; David Chocktoot, private; Warren B. MacMillan, forest examiner; Harry I. Nettleton, forest examiner; Carl D. Rawie, sr., forest ranger; Silos O. Davis, forest ranger; Edward Neave, forest ranger; Nicholas Welter, junior forester; Arlie W. Toole, forest assistant; Harold Weaver, forest assistant; Floyd H. Phillips, forest assistant; Alfred E. Hart, forest guard; Marion J. Gober, forest guard; Clarence A. Middlebusher, scaler; Opie K. Pace, scaler; Britton Clair, scaler; George C. Hepworth, scaler; Frank G. Maness, scaler; Clarence Whitaker, scaler; Allen F. Space, sr., forest ranger; Frederick R. Moffat, forest supervisor; Philip J. Duffy, scaler; Roy Rice, scaler; Clyde W. Flinn, scaler; Lloyd E. Lamb, scaler; Stanley J. Johnson, sr., forest ranger; Earl L. Silvers, sr., forest ranger; Inez Rucker, nurse; Lucille L. Shilling, nurse (temporary); Florence Miller, nurse (permanent to take Mrs. Shilling's position); Pearl I. Clark, nurse; Matie Lemmon, cook; Anna Foust, laborer (housekeeper at hospital).

On the irregular pay roll for the month of April, 1931, there is a long list. I will not take the time to read them. I think there are between 70 and 90. I saw in the testimony somewhere that there were 96.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is the testimony before the committee:

Mr. Scattergood. In compliance with the request of the committee, we submit a statement showing forestry employees for the month of January, 1932; copy of a letter dated February 3, 1932, and addressed to the Comptroller General with reference to travel expenses on the reservation, and there is also submitted copy of a timber-sale contract providing for fixed increases in stumpage prices on the Klamath Reservation.

I could go over the list of the positions and the salaries paid. There is a total of 25 forest employees on the Klamath Reservation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, notwithstanding what my colleague says-and I know that he believes that he has stated the facts

Mr. SMOOT. I am only stating what Mr. Scattergood testified before the committee.

Mr. KING. I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. It is printed in the hearings, and I took it for granted it was correct.

Mr. KING. I think my colleague is justified in assuming that. I read from the House hearings, may I say?

Mr. SMOOT. Were those the hearings of this year, or for last year?

Mr. KING. Hearings on the Interior Department appropriation bill, 1933. The hearings started December 15, 1931.

Mr. SMOOT. The 1931 hearings? Mr. KING. They started December 15, 1931, since Congress met last December.

Hearings conducted by the subcommittee, Messrs. Edward T. Taylor (chairman), William W. Hastings—

And so forth.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask my colleague to excuse me for interrupting him.

Mr. KING. I have no objection at all. I know my colleague desires to have the facts, and I am sure that is all I desire, and if he finds I have made an error at any time, I shall be glad to have him or others invite my attention to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say that we wanted to know why the appropriation was cut from $250,000 down to $140,000, and the reason appears in the testimony. The number of employees is shown in the testimony. There were a great many more employees a year ago than there will be this year, and my colleague knows why. There is hardly any sale for timber, or very little sale, even though the timber cut on the Klamath Indian Reservation is the finest timber in the United States.

I did not want it to appear that we had cut the appropriation from $250,000 down to $140,000 and kept the same number of people on the reservation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have here a statement, handed me day before yesterday by Mr. Crawford, the representative the Indian tribes sent here, commissioned by them, which shows 50 permanent employees, and he informed me that there are so-called irregular employees considerably in excess of 50. These employees are now drawing compensation; they have been in the reservation all winter, but with little, if anything, to do. So that these Indians are compelled to pay not only for these 50 permanent employees, but also the compensation of an army of so-called temporary, or so-called irregular employees. None of the permanent employees are Indians, notwithstanding their competency to discharge important duties now performed by permanent employees who are under the civil service.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I would like to know what reason there is for not employing the Indians. It would seem to me that if there are Indians who are competent they ought to be given the positions.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator. I can find no reason. There is much talk about educating Indians and qualifying them for service, but when they are qualified they are not employed. One of the Indians informed me that the and approved.

effort of the bureau was to get whites there who have no civil-service status, to induct them as irregular employees, and then advance them until they have a civil-service status. By this course few Indians found employment in permanent positions. Doubtless the claim is made that the Indians are not competent for responsible positions.

Mr. SMOOT. If my colleague desires, I am perfectly willing to have a recess taken at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to offer an amendment, to have it printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received and lie on the table.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I remind Senators that the senior Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] notified the Senate a few days ago that he would want to speak on another subject to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7912) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Sandlin, and Mr. Simmons were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

AMENDMENT OF WORLD WAR VETERANS' ACT

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I move that the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 929) relating to the taking of depositions in cases arising under section 19 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered and lie over one day.

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 15, 1932, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 14, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord and Father of us all, with our waiting breath we lift to Thee our prayer of gratitude. In our sins and in our failures do Thou remember mercy. May we wear worthily the badge of our station and be earnest, brave. and true in these vital days of the Republic. Endue us with the love that envies not, that seeks not its own but labors and suffers for the advancement of all good. May our love of country be an adult and a noble desire to make it of the greatest possible service to citizens of all sections. Persuade us always that reliance on physical force alone is the road to ruin and that cooperation, brotherhood, and unselfishness can stand all tests under all circumstances and never be ashamed. Do Thou remember our Speaker, every Member and officer of this Congress. Touch all of our firesides and fill them with the sweetest joy. Amen.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNELL. In regard to the division of time, I should expect the chairman of the Judiciary Committee to have the 10 minutes in opposition to the motion. I would like to ask him if he will yield five minutes to this side of the aisle?

The SPEAKER. The rule is specific. The gentleman making the motion is entitled to 10 minutes, and if the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary is opposed to the motion, he would be entitled to 10 minutes. If he is of the same opinion as the gentleman from Maryland on this particular motion, the Chair would recognize some one on the committee who desired to oppose it. Whether the gentleman from Texas will yield is a question for the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SNELL. It seemed only fair that this side should have some time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he will not yield some time. I think it is fair that the time should be divided.

The SPEAKER. That is a question for the chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have given some consideration to the question asked by the gentleman from New York. In regard to 10 minutes that is assigned to the gentleman from Maryland, I assume that that time will be, if it has not already been, allotted by the gentleman from Maryland. I would not be disposed to yield just five minutes to the other side of the aisle. I would be glad to yield time to any gentleman on the other side of the aisle who is going to support the position of the committee.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. To be perfectly fair with the gentleman, I want some control over the disposition of the time that goes to the other side of the aisle.

Mr. SNELL. Those that I had in mind who desired to speak are opposed to the resolution.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I have already told the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Moore] that I would yield him three minutes. He is a member of the committee.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman can yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVENPORT], I would like to have him do it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The Speaker announced that he would recognize no Member for any purpose. Does that preclude a Member from asking unanimous consent to extend the time for debate under the rule?

The SPEAKER. The rule limits the time and provides that there shall be 10 minutes on a side.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended 10 minutes on each side.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that it is his duty to protect the rule. Being a Member of the House, he will say himself that he would object to any additional debate, taking as much responsibility as he can in the premises.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. The Committee on the Judiciary of the House, which it is sought to discharge from further consideration of this joint resolution now before the House, voted 9 to 14 upon the resolution. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Sumners], the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, is to control the time upon one side of this issue, is it not in order that the minority ranking member on the committee in favor of this legislation should control the time otherwise?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Linthicum] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself two minutes. In the very short time I have it will be difficult for me to have very much to say. The crucial time in the history of this proposition has arrived. To-day, after 12 years, we have reached a chance to vote upon whether the eighteenth amendment shall be submitted to the people. Scripture tells us that he who is not with us is against us, and I say that he who votes against this resolution to-day is not willing to submit the question to a vote of the people.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

Mr. LINTHICUM. I yield for a short question.

Mr. BACHMANN. If the House votes to consider this resolution to-day, will the gentleman support the Tucker amendment, inserted in the resolution by the Committee on the Judiciary, to prohibit the return of the saloon?

Mr. LINTHICUM. If I believed that the old saloon was coming back in case the eighteenth amendment was repealed, I should not be for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. [Applause.] Further, if the House gives us a chance to consider the resolution and an amendment is offered by which no saloons can again appear in this country, I shall support that amendment and shall use my influence with my friends for its adoption.

My construction is that the drys in this House can vote for this discharge and subsequently for the resolution without injury to themselves, because it is a mere submission to the will of the electorate. Certainly, with the thousands upon thousands expressing themselves as opposed to the present state of affairs, they should have a right to express their views. This question can never be settled until it is settled right, and it can never be rightly settled until it is submitted to the direct vote of the people.

Certainly no one can say that this "noble experiment" has not had a fair trial. It has been weighed in the balance and found wanting. After 12 years of attempted enforcement, the whole land finds itself in great distress. Since January, 1920, to July 30, 1931, there have been 700,000 people arrested, and 500,000 convicted, and our jails are crowded. Liquor mash to the extent of over 266,000,000,000 gallons have been seized, fines to the extent of $60,000,000 have been collected, and property aggregating $231,000,000,000 has been seized or confiscated. We have lost a revenue of $10,984,-000,000, and yet the drink bill has aggregated $28,000,000,000.

It is not, however, the loss of funds which has so blasted our country, but this law has lowered the morals of our people and made hypocrites of many of the best of society. We do not seek to violate the Constitution, but we do seek to so amend this vital article 18 that it will not be violated by the people of our land.

Pass this resolution, and depression will fade away like the mists before the noonday sun. The immorality of the country, racketeering, and bootlegging will be a thing of the past.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. MOORE.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Linthicum] has admitted in the beginning that his resolution is faulty and he would accept an amendment to keep out the saloon. Yet, after a conference upon the part of our wet friends, they tell us that they are unanimous in their agreement upon this resolution. This resolution does permit the return of the saloon. I have talked with some of the most active wets in this House privately and they admit to me that the saloon is not prohibited, and that they expect the saloon to return if the Beck-Linthicum resolution is adopted. The American people do not want the saloon to return.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MOORE of Ohio. I will not. Furthermore, this puts the question of prohibition in politics every two years, not only in the States but every two years in the national election. Once we will be asked to elect a Congress favoring prohibition, and again license or a dispensary system. If this resolution should become a part of the Constitution, we will have a divided sovereignty and be in the anomalous situation of some States taking over the question of the liquor traffic and the National Congress legislating for the other States, a situation unheard of in the history of any national body like this.

Now as to submitting the question to the people, those who appeal to the people ought to be fair with them. know that there is no method provided in the Constitution by which we can have a referendum. In the States those who are elected as delegates to a constitutional convention would be elected by the people, just the same as we are elected, and if you have constitutional conventions in the several States they would have to vote for representatives to conventions. An unlimited number of drys and wets, and some not stating their position could, and doubtless would, be candidates for the constitutional conventions in the several States. I have seen that happen in Ohio in our State constitutional conventions. It is quite possible for a wet delegate to represent a dry constituency. Those who are so solicitous of the people and who want them to vote upon this proposition ought not to deceive the people, and yet there are those who think there is some way whereby they are directly submitting something to the people. The Beck-Linthicum resolution presents little that is really new on the subject. It is, in effect, going back to the old system of State control, which we tried for over a hundred years and which was unsatisfactory. When the American people know what is proposed in this resolution they will be against it and in favor of a continuance of the eighteenth amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas rose.

Mr. SNELL. There is no other demand for time on this side at the present time.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Boylan].

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, we, the representatives of the people, have the opportunity by our votes to-day to start a movement that will put an end to the unholy alliance existing between many of the God-fearing people of this country and the bootleggers, hi-jackers, extortionists, and kidnapers.

I am anxious to see the splendid membership of this House returned to the next Congress. This, however, to my mind, will depend in a large measure on how we vote on the resolution now before us.

The prohibition law never can be enforced. An attempt to make it a law of the land, after the lessons we have learned, is not an attempt to enforce the law, it is a wicked attempt to awe the American people, to tyrannize over a land that once was free, to destroy the resistance, the devotion, and the independence of a great nation with bullying and threatening, with blindness, imprisonment, and death. Calmly the young and the innocent are included along with all others. For more than 10 years millions of people have refused to be coerced by this fanatical law. More money has been spent in an effort to enforce it than all other Federal statutes. As many men and women have been sent to prison by our Federal courts for the violation of this statute as for all other offenses put together. More lives have been recklessly and wantonly taken in the mad effort to make the United States dry than the efforts in behalf of all the rest of the Criminal Code. This law has developed more sneaking, snooping, informing, prying, and entrapping than all the others acts of Congress. We have submitted to enormous taxation through these 12 years that the fanatics should have their way, and now after 12 years of a merciless crusade the protest against the bigotry that stands back of this legislation is stronger than ever before. This protest is growing so insistent that it threatens the peace and security of the country.

The prohibitionists care nothing about the nature of men, the theories of government, or the lessons of history. The true statesman knows that laws should be like clothesmade to fit the citizens that make up the State. He knows that when a protest is long and persistent the law should be repealed. The tyrant believes that if the laws do not fit the people then the people must be bent to fit the laws and forced to obey.

The prohibition act, in effect, brands every one who takes a drink as a criminal, as a felon. It does this in spite of the fact that the greatest men in the world have always taken intoxicating drinks. If we were to discard all the literature produced by men who drank, all the great classics would be consigned to flames; there would be no literature, no art, no music, no statesmanship if we relied on the prohibitionist for works of genius. Even if it were proven that the use of alcohol in moderation was harmful to the individual that would furnish no excuse for sending men to jail for making it and selling it and drinking it.

Let us by our vote to-day start the machinery that will eventually strike from our sacred Constitution the iniquitous amendment that should never have been added to it. If we do this, we will restore to the States of the Union the sovereign right that should never have been taken away from them. [Applause.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object to any extension of remarks.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes allotted to me it is, of course, impossible to even touch upon the importance and far-reaching effect of the vote about to be cast here to-day for the resubmission of the eighteenth amendment.

After 12 years of experiment with national prohibition we are afforded to-day the first opportunity in all those years to ascertain the sentiment of all the Representatives in Congress on this question. It is a big day in this House and an important day to the liberty-loving people of our country.

Practically an entirely new body is voting on the question, because there are only 82 Members of this House who voted on the eighteenth amendment in 1917.

It is amusing to see the about-face of the prohibition forces on the interpretation of this vote to-day. They vehemently and threateningly oppose any submission of this question to the States or the people. Yet in 1917 they argued that the vote to submit the eighteenth amendment was not a personal vote of Members of Congress but rather a compliance with their sworn duty to submit to the people any question of constitutional amendment when any considerable number of our people demanded an opportunity to pass upon the proposal.

Listen to these outstanding prohibitionists in 1917:

Senator Sheppard, of Texas, sponsor of the eighteenth amendment, said at that time:

The Member of Congress who will not vote for the submission of a constitutional amendment to the decision of the States, where it belongs, unless he personally believes it should become a part of the Constitution, usurps the function of the States, arrogates to himself and the Federal Government a prerogative that belongs to the States and violates the very essence of their sovereignty.

Senator Jones, of Washington, author of the famous "5-and-10" law, said:

The Constitution provides the way for its amendment. Congress can not do it, but it can propose amendments to the people, who alone can adopt them. I believe it to be my duty as a Senator to vote to submit an amendment to the States where there is a strong, matured, widespread sentiment and demand from the people for such an amendment. To refuse to do so is to act as the master rather than as the representative of the people.

And last but "greatest of all," hear Bishop Cannon, who said:

It does not seem to me that in view of the general trend of political thought in our day, whenever it becomes evident that a large percentage of the people desire an opportunity to express themselves upon a great question, the body in whose hands is committed the right to decide whether the people shall have that opportunity should at least divide the responsibility with the people as to the decision of that question.

If the position of those prominent prohibitionists was sound in 1917, why are not identical arguments sound in 1932? The people have demanded an opportunity to pass upon this vital question. Why deny it to them?

Any "dry" can consistently vote to give the people this opportunity. No "wet" can refuse to vote to discharge the committee, lest he or she be forever after branded as a "dry." No alibi will go.

"Tis the ides of March! Stand up and be counted! [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield to myself five minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is whether the Committee on the Judiciary shall be discharged and the Linthicum-proposed amendment to the Constitution come immediately to the floor of the House for consideration.

Some definite questions are involved in the answer to that question. The first proposition which presents itself is, considering the economic problems now pressing for solution, the hunger, the unemployment, the general economic distress, should this highly controversial issue, this issue calculated to divide and distract our people be now brought to the floor of the House for consideration? What is the practical common-sense thing to do?

There can be no question that the economic difficulties which now confront the American people are equal to the united, determined, concentrated effort of this people operating at their greatest capacity. Is that not true? Now, right down on the barrel head, as we used to say in the country, does anybody doubt that the economic difficulties of this country are equal to the supreme effort of a united people? Then why, when we are in the middle of this effort, prohibitionist and antiprohibitionist trying to work together, bring in an issue which will tend to prevent the unity and the teamwork necessary to give us the best chance to deal with the economic problems which we now have before us. Every threat and every danger which could imperil the most basic interest of society are involved in what we now have on the table—

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; I am sorry.

Is there anybody, wet or dry, who believes that if we thrust this prohibition issue into our present situation, by sending the proposed amendment to the Constitution to the country now, we can then have a united people to deal with this terrible economic crisis of ours? Of course not. That is just

I submit another question. Is there a man or woman on the floor of this House who will say that he or she believes that if this committee is discharged, two-thirds of the membership of this House would vote this resolution out? Of course they will not. Then what do you get and what do you accomplish by discharging the committee?

I submit the fourth proposition. If you should discharge the committee and get by the House to-day with the required two-thirds majority, does anybody believe that twothirds of the Senate of the United States would now vote this proposition out? Then what can be accomplished except divide the people when they need to forget their differences and pull together for their common salvation?

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not. I have only a few minutes. I am just putting some propositions on the barrel head.

The fifth proposition is that if the committee were discharged and a two-thirds majority of the House and the Senate voted in favor of the resolution, which everybody knows is now impossible, and it was resubmitted, has anybody got little enough sense—and I say this with all respect to believe that three-fourths of the States are ready to ratify this amendment to the Constitution? I am addressing myself to the practical common sense of Members regardless of their attitude toward the eighteenth amendment. You know you can not get anywhere with the proposed amendment now. Then why bring it in here now when we do not know whether with the greatest unity of purpose and of people we will be equal to the task which is right on us? Regardless of what you may think or hope may occur in the future you know that three-fourths of the States are not yet ready to reverse themselves with regard to the eighteenth amendment. Nothing can be done about this matter now. Then why bring it in here to disrupt the unity and divert the interest with which the country is going about trying to save itself? I can not see the common sense of it. We are all in the same boat. These problems of hunger, unemployment, and of economic danger are problems for everybody.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remaining two minutes.

Wets and drys, we are exactly in the situation of a lot of people out in a boat far from the shore, who do not even know where the shore is, but they know it is going to take all the pulling that every man can do who can handle an oar to have a chance to get to shore. Now, would a people with ordinary sense thus situated turn aside from an opportunity to save themselves and engage in a fight out there in the middle of the stream about something they knew they could not settle then? Should the House do that sort of thing now?

A majority of the Committee on the Judiciary did not think so. [Applause.] A majority of the Committee on the Judiciary believes that the great big job which now challenges the genius and effort of the American people is to save, if they can, the economic structure and political structure of this great Nation. It is no time to pull off a big fight on this prohibition question, especially when everybody knows nothing can be done about it now. [Applause.]

I make the appeal to wet and dry; let us not turn aside from the challenge of the hour and divide our people. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia].

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, under our form of government the last word and the absolute control of governmental policy rests with the people of the United States. [Applause.] The people of the United States have a right to know how their Representatives stand on this important issue by a direct vote on the question. [Applause.] The people will then have the opportunity to so cast their votes as to carry out their views on prohibition, an opportunity heretofore denied them by their own Representatives. If it was proper for Congress to submit prohibition to the States before it was known what national prohibition meant, certainly it is proper to do so now, after 12 years of experience and with full knowledge of its failure.

The record of prohibition has been before the committee and 145 Members of this House, representing 43,000,000 people, ask that this question be submitted to the people for an expression of their sovereign will. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Beck]. [Applause.]

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, the question to be discussed is a very simple one. It does not involve the merits or demerits of the eighteenth amendment, but only the right of the American people, if they so desire, to determine their own destinies.

Those who oppose such resubmission must do so on the theory that this provision of the Constitution is a finality for all time. Those who favor such resubmission believe that the American people have an inviolable and evercontinuing right to determine from generation to generation the nature of their Government and the character of their laws. If they have not such right, then democracy is a fraud and a delusion.

It is strange, indeed, that prohibitionists should now claim infallibility for the eighteenth amendment, for clearly they did not regard the Constitution as unchangeable when they added the eighteenth amendment and thus destroyed that basic principle of the Constitution—local self-government. If their inconsistency in this respect proves nothing, yet I can invoke the elementary principles of our Government and the noblest of American traditions to prove that the American people have regarded as the fundamental verity of liberty the right to change their form of government, as and when they desire to do so. In the Declaration of Independence, Jefferson forever established this as a self-evident truth.

How, then, can it be contended that the American people have not the right to determine whether any part of their Constitution, and especially any amendment, should be either repealed or modified? To assert otherwise is to challenge democracy itself. It makes the final passage of Lincoln's Gettysburg address a rhapsody of words, for if the American people can not undo a clearly demonstrated folly and regain a previously reserved right, then truly government "for the people, by the people, and of the people" has perished from the United States.

To give the people of the United States such an opportunity of self-expression, my associates and I, of both parties, are submitting a substitute for the eighteenth amendment, which while giving to every State the right to determine how it will regulate or prohibit the traffic in beverage liquors exclusively within its own borders, yet secures for the dry States not only their reserved rights but the added power of the Federal Government to protect them in the full enforcement of their prohibitory laws. In other words, we restore home rule to the several States, and no student of American history can question that the men who framed the Constitution would never have adopted it if they had not been satisfied that the right of local self-government would, at all times, be preserved.

There are especial reasons why the eighteenth amendment should be resubmitted. It was well said on high authority that it was an "experiment." An experiment must stand or fall on the arduous test of experience.

The eighteenth amendment has been given over 12 years' trial. Millions have been spent in its attempted enforcement, and, what is more deplorable, over 500,000 American citizens have been either indicted or convicted of violation of this law. Yet to-day the law is less enforced than it was at the beginning. No such general revolt against the enforcement of a law has ever been known in our history, and in itself proves the existence of a very substantial sentiment that the eighteenth amendment should be repealed.

The amendment was proposed to the people in a time of great hysteria, by a few hundred Senators and Representatives who had not been elected for such a purpose, and it was ratified by a few thousand State legislators who, likewise, had not been elected with any such mandate.

Apart from this fact, no law which interferes with individual liberty can ever be enforced, unless sustained by a greatly preponderating public sentiment. The old Jewish Talmud was philosophically correct when it said that custom rises above law. The same truth was voiced by the greatest political philosopher of antiquity, Aristotle, when he said that laws and even constitutions could never be enforced if contrary to the ethos, meaning the spirit or genius of a people. The history of sumptuary laws in all ages prove this fact.

There is a final reason for such resubmission at this time. Prohibition is not the only issue before the American people. We are living in very trying times and have many difficult problems. The question is not a partisan issue, and if resubmitted to the people, it will go far to clear the decks for other important public policies.

The failure to resubmit will intensify the revolt against the law and the ill feeling which now exists between different classes of people. Until thus resubmitted the question becomes an irrepressible one, like the old question of slavery. It will mean continued chaos in our national councils.

Submit the amendment and let the people decide. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution, H. J. 208?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 187, nays 227, not voting 18, as follows:

So the motion to discharge the committee was rejected. The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Mr. Rogers with Mr. Reid of Illinois.

Mr. Larsen with Mr. Chase.

Mr. May with Mr. Pratt.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, pending the casting up of the vote I would like to make the announcement for the following Representatives from Kentucky, who have requested me to announce that they are unavoidably absent, and if present they would have voted against the resolution:

Messis. Vinson, Carden, Cary, Gregory, and Chapman.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Wood] is absent on account of illness in his family in the State of Georgia. He authorized me to say that if he were present he would vote against the motion-

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it proper for gentlemen to announce the fact that certain Members are absent and how they would vote at this time? Should not that be done after the vote has been announced?

The SPEAKER. It may be done at any propitious time; and while the Chair was waiting for the vote to be counted. the Chair thought it well to use the time by having such statements made.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested to announce that the following Members are unavoidably absent on important business, and if present would vote " no ":

Messis. Lambeth, Wood of Georgia, Gilbert, Vinson of Kentucky, Carden, Cary, Chapman, Gregory, Collier, Drane, and REID of Illinois.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested by my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Chase] to announce that he is unavoidably detained, and if present would have voted "no" on the motion to discharge the Judiciary Committee.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes in order that I may present a statement written by my colleague, Hon. HARRY ST. GEORGE TUCKER, whose illness detains him from the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Spéaker, my colleague [Mr. Tucker], who is necessarily absent by reason of illness, has handed me, through his secretary, the following statement and has asked me to read it to his colleagues of the House. The statement is as follows:

When this joint resolution was brought before the Committee on the Judiciary for consideration the first motion made was one which I made providing for an amendment to the same in the following words and figures, to wit:

Page 2, line 20, after the word "therein," add the words "Provided further, That no sale of intoxicating liquor shall be authorized by the Congress or any State to be consumed on the premises where sold."

where sold."

This amendment was generally discussed by nearly all the members of the committee and was finally adopted by the committee by a vote of 11 to 5. This amendment, as is seen, eliminates the possibility of the barroom being adopted in any part of the United States should the States be given the power to control the subject, as provided by the Beck-Linthicum resolution. My feeling against the reappearance of the barroom was so strong that I felt myself unable to vote for the original proposition without the limitation of this amendment; and as the resolution has been brought to the House, under the ruling of the Speaker not in its amended form but in its original form, it has been my intention when the matter was before the House, and I being present, to make this same motion in the House which I made in committee for the incorporation of the amendment to the resolution. I am unfortunately prevented by sickness from appearing on the floor of the House, and, therefore, I can only hope that some other Member holding my view may offer the amendment, because I think it would add great strength to the resolution. Should that amendment be offered and passed by the House, if I were present, I would certainly vote for its passage, as amended.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7912) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Texas if he will give the membership of the House an opportunity to vote, either way, on the salary provision which has been stricken from the bill; in other words, whether or not we will have that proposition before us as a separate matter when the report is brought in?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, of course, I can not speak for the Members of the House or the members of the conference, but we will bring our report back, and I understand it is then in the hands of the House to vote on any amendment it pleases.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Exactly; in other words, we will not be placed in the position where we will have to vote the entire conference report up or down, but may have a separate vote on the amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I may state to the gentleman that so far as I am concerned I have no desire in the world to prevent a vote on the filling-of-vacancies proposition.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the House, some weeks ago, authorized an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the Century of Progress to be held in Chicago. I understand that in the Senate an amendment has been adopted to the agricultural bill embodying this appropriation. May I ask the gentleman, in view of the fact that the House has gone on record in the matter, whether it is contemplated on the part of the conferees to agree to the Senate amend-

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not know. I can not commit the House conferees to agree now to any Senate amendment. That is a matter of conference and it is not proper for us to commit ourselves.

Mr. SABATH. But a vote has already taken place in favor of the appropriation in the House?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The House conferees are servants of the House and it is the duty of the conferees to carry out the will of the House.

Mr. SABATH. I am satisfied with that statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. Buchanan, Sandlin, and Simmons.

THE GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEE AND RELIEF DRIVES

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the Federal employees in connection with the unemployed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, many Members have in the past and are now advocating a reduction in the salaries of Government employees. Several bills providing for general reductions have been introduced. One even affecting the salary of the charwomen.

I have taken the position that any act of the Congress toward reduction in salaries will immediately result in private corporations doing likewise, holding they are justified in taking the action because the Congress has set the example.

While overproduction has played a leading part in the present depression, economists proclaim underconsumption is a more material factor than overproduction. It is true that there has been some reduction in the cost of living, but who can deny the assertion that this is only temporary. How can the farmer live on what he is now receiving for his products? If to restore the price level to the farmer we must pay him an increase for his wheat, corn, hogs, cattle, vegetables, and so forth, will it not result in an increase in price to the consumer?

You passed the Glass-Steagall bill. If that operates as you intended it should operate, there will be an increase in the cost of living. You now propose a manufacturer's sales tax. What does that mean?

It means, if it becomes a law, some $600,000,000 in revenue will all come out of the pockets of the consumer. This can not be denied. No manufacturer will absorb the sales tax; he will pass it along. Not only are you going to try to put an additional burden on him in the form of a sales tax, but you are increasing his income tax.

It seems evident to me that unless you lower the standard of living you must retain the wage level of Government employees, at least 80 per cent of whom are not overpaid. The average salary of the Government employee is around $120 a month, or, to be exact, $1,441 a year.

Mr. Speaker, I heard it stated on several occasions the Government employees were not participating as they should in cooperating with the local authorities in relief work. I knew any such statement was false, but I passed it along to the employees in St. Louis and suggested that they pool their contributions to the "crisis relief fund" which was launched two or three weeks ago. This, I think, was the fifth drive we have had in St. Louis in the past year. The money goes to help those in distress. The result should forever silence those who have stated the Federal employees do not participate in these drives.

Twenty-eight thousand six hundred and fifty-eight dollars and twenty-seven cents contributed by the Government employees in St. Louis to the fifth and possibly the smallest drive of the last year. They contributed to all worthy activities. The record for the "crisis drive" follows:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the motion to discharge the Judiciary Committee, just voted upon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. BACHMANN. I object.

THE ECONOMY COMMITTEE

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 169. The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 169

Resolved, That the Economy Committee appointed pursuant to House Resolution No. 151, Seventy-second Congress, is hereby authorized to report to the House at any time during the present session of Congress, by bill or otherwise, its recommendations upon any matters covered by such resolution; and any bills so reported shall be placed upon the calendar and have a privileged status.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan if he desires any time?

Mr. MICHENER. We had no information that this rule was to be called up to-day. I conferred with the floor leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Rainey], before entering the Hall, and was advised that the next matter to be taken up would be the tax bill. The gentleman from North Carolina has called up this resolution. It is a matter of vast importance. I have only one call for time, but I ask that the usual 30 minutes be granted, in order that we may find out something about it.

Michigan to yield as he sees fit.

Mr. Speaker, this special rule accomplishes three things. It extends the life of the so-called Economy Committee during the present session of Congress. It authorizes the Economy Committee to report bills to the House, and, third, it makes these bills privileged.

In view of the action taken by the House when the Economy Committee was created, it was not supposed-at least, I did not suppose—that there would be any considerable opposition to the adoption of this rule. It lays the basis for action by the Economy Committee. It clears the deck, so to speak, for action by the Economy Committee preparatory to the passage of one of the most onerous tax bills Congress has ever been called upon to enact into law. It seems to me that no argument should be necessary to support such a resolution. It enables the Economy Committee to bring before the House in a concrete form the result of its deliberations. As I have no request for time, and as I do not care to submit further observations, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. I will.

Mr. TILSON. Is not the real purpose of the resolution to postpone any action by this committee until after the summer recess of Congress?

Mr. POU. Exactly the opposite is the purpose of the resolution. The purpose of the resolution is to enable the Economy Committee to get quicker action and bring the result of its deliberations before the House.

Mr. TILSON. The original resolution required the committee to report by the 15th of April, and this extends the

Mr. POU. It extends the time from April 15 until the end of the present session of Congress.

Mr. TILSON. And then if they brought in a report and bill at the end of the session there would be no opportunity for action until after the recess of Congress.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. COX. The original resolution required the committee to report by piecemeal. They would report by bill on a particular subject, and this is to expedite the consideration of such matters as the committee may investigate. In other words, it saves a restudy of the same question by some standing committee of the House.

Mr. POU. The gentleman is undoubtedly correct in his construction of the resolution.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. The fact that the bills have a privileged status does not deprive the House from adequate notice and warning when the bills are to be taken up.

Mr. POU. No; they will be in the same condition as if they had been reported by a committee, except these bills will have a privileged status.

Mr. SNELL. It makes them privileged, and a report by a committee is not always privileged.

Mr. POU. It makes the bills reported by the Economy Committee privileged, whatever that may mean under the general rules of the House.

Mr. SNELL. But a regular standing committee's report is not always privileged.

Mr. POU. Some of them are and some are not.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. What you are trying to do under the present rule is what you started to do under the first rule but which was withdrawn and another substituted?

You are taking all the power from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and transferring it to this special committee. That is exactly what I told the gentleman he ought to do originally, but he did not dare do it because his own committee would not stand for it. Is not that true?

Mr. POU. I do not think so. I could not agree to that statement. It may be the gentleman's construction, but it | When I entered the Chamber to-day with the majority floor

Mr. POU. I will yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from | is not in accord with my recollection of what took place at all, but whatever the resolution does it speaks for itself. It does those three things. It gives the House an opportunity to vote on any bill that may be reported by the Economy Committee. It does not take away the powers of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, except that any bill reported by the Economy Committee may to that extent invade the powers of some other committee

> Mr. SNELL. Is it not a fact that it takes practically all the powers away from the Expenditures Committee?

Mr. POU. I do not think so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will permit, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] will get a copy of the rules and see the powers and jurisdiction conferred upon the Expenditures Committee, he will see that there are several other matters of legislation vested in that committee aside from the question of recommendation on the Government departments.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman from New York knows very well that this practically deprives the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments of every particle of work in this session, and the gentleman from Alabama knows that, too. That is the purpose of the rule.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago we had before us a rule providing for the creation of a so-called Economy Committee. I pointed out at that time it was utterly impossible to accomplish anything under the terms of that resolution. I told the House that it was a mere gesture. I said, If you want economy for economy's sake, that is one thing; but if you want economy for publicity's sake, this is another thing. The talking point in favor of that committee at that time was that a limitation could be placed upon the activities of the committee within which time the committee was to report something definite. Every man who knew anything about the workings of the House at that time knew that it would be a physical impossibility for that committee to do what it was constituted to do. Now the gentleman comes in with this rule to-day for what purpose? As the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Pou] says, first, to extend the limit of time within which that committee may act, not to a definite time other than through the term of the session.

In other words, if we adjourn in June, they can report up to the last day that we adjourn, and if we adjourn next November, they can report up to the last day when the House adjourns next November. So far as taking the jurisdiction away from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments is concerned, I agree in the main with my friend from New York [Mr. SNELL]. However, he is not technically exactly right. We have an appropriations committee and two or three other committees which are authorized under the general rules of the House to do the very thing which this committee is set up to do. We are not taking away from those committees any jurisdiction, technically speaking, but we are setting up a committee, a supercommittee, with like and extended jurisdiction. This committee is a supercommittee in that its bills are privileged. What does "privileged" mean? It does not simply mean that it reports a bill and that the bill goes on the calendar; but when a bill is privileged, it has a right over all other bills in this House which are not privileged, and the Speaker of the House must, under the rules of the House, recognize for consideration of that particular bill. The only discretion lodged in the Speaker under the rules of the House is to treat privileged bills as a class. You are setting up a committee and extending its jurisdiction and making it possible for that committee to bring in legislation any day, which goes on the calendar, which is privileged, and, forsooth, which might be called up for consideration of the House just exactly as this privileged resolution is called up, without knowledge on the part of any Member of the House, of not even the majority floor leader, that it is coming up. leader, I asked him what would be up to-day, what we might expect, and he told me there would be nothing but the tax bill. Then, in the confusion here, when the House is all upside down, a matter of this kind is brought before the House. The members of the Committee on Appropriations, vitally affected, are not here. The members of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, vitally affected, are not here. They know nothing about it. The minority members of the Committee on Rules had no knowledge that the gentleman was bringing this very important matter up for consideration.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. In a minute. So far as we are concerned on this side of the aisle, we have not opposed any economy measures. We did not oppose this Economy Committee. We voted for it. We supported it; and we pointed out to you that you could not accomplish anything—

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. COX. The gentleman's objection to the first resolution was that it set up a committee without power to do anything. This resolution proposes to give that committee the power which the original resolution did not give.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. COX. Now, the gentleman objects to this resolution because it does the very thing which he contended the original resolution failed to do. It vests a power in the committee to make report to this House in such form as would make possible the consideration of such matters dealt with by that committee at this session, which is the only promise that we have of any economy legislation that has come before us.

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact, I am finding more fault with the procedure, because the gentleman, who is a member of the Committee on Rules, well knows that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] introduced the original resolution which was to all intents and purposes this resolution.

Because of the objection of the Expenditures Committee, and because of the objection of other committees in the House that this was robbing those committees of jurisdiction, was throwing a monkey wrench, so to speak, into the things which they were doing, in an effort to bring about this thing, it was made impossible for you to bring in a rule of this kind and pass it. Now, it is brought in under these circumstances.

Mr. POU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. POU. I want to remind my friend the gentleman from Michigan that when the request for this legislation was made the statement was made that the request came as the unanimous request from the Economy Committee.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes. This is a unanimous request from this committee which has been functioning for some time and which, if I am correctly informed, has gotten nowhere. They could not possibly do anything. The job is too big. We all know it. Everybody has been trying to consolidate for years. Then the country is told, "We have set up a great Democratic Economy Committee. By April 15 it will do something." That goes out in big headlines all over the country, and to-day that same majority party comes here and says by the very terms of this resolution, "You are absolutely right," and the Speaker of the House knows and smiles his approbation. That is the strategy of the situation. Oh, there is a vast difference between political strategy, between publicity, and consolidating the depart-You have a committee, a splendid committee, made up of Democrats and Republicans, working at this matter. They have been working at it for weeks, and now there is set up what is called a Democratic Economy Committee.

It functions for a while and then the gentleman comes in and says, "We were wrong when we set it up. We can not do what we thought we could. We have now found it out. We now ask you to let us do what you wanted to do some time back."

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. I happen to be a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. This Economy Committee was set up because politicians, for political effect and not for economy, could not stampede and blackjack that standing committee of the House. The Committee on Expenditures unanimously requested the Rules Committee to amend the rules applicable to the Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments, to give the committee a little appropriation so that we could do effective work, and to give us the right to subpœna witnesses and compel testimony. Up to this very moment those so-called economy experts on the Democratic side have not given the committee that authority.

Mr. MICHENER. Now, I do not want to get into that. Let us not be partisan.

Mr. SCHAFER. Well, it is partisan, unfortunately. If the gentleman had served on the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments as I have, the gentleman would see that it is partisan. Now, those who were trying to force the Committee on Expenditures to favorably report a bill to consolidate the Army and Navy are the very ones who are running away from it to-day.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not yield further.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Pertinent to the gentleman's complaint against the manner in which this resolution is called up, I would like to say to the gentleman that I had no advantage over him, because I did not expect it to come up this morning.

Mr. MICHENER. That is a good illustration. The gentleman is one of the leading, and one of the most sound-thinking members on the Committee on Rules; a man who generally thinks right. The gentleman joins with me and says this thing has been sprung upon us without knowing anything about it. I had no knowledge of it. The Democratic floor leader said he had no knowledge of it. Who, in the name of Heaven, is running this House if it is not the Democratic organization?

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. COX. When the gentleman's committee reported this resolution, did the gentleman not reasonably anticipate that the resolution would be called up at some time?

Mr. MICHENER. Oh, yes. But I do not want to take any more time along that line.

Mr. COX. What better position would the gentleman be in if the calling up of this resolution had been after some formal notice to him?

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman on this side only wants that which is always understood, that there is an understanding between the chairman of the Rules Committee and the ranking Member on this side, so that no rule will be called up until we have sufficient notice that it is to be called up, in order that we may at least be prepared to say something about the matter.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman voiced my own fear and the reason for my earlier inquiry. Does not the same observation which the gentleman has just made with reference to this resolution apply to any bills that may have a privileged status under its terms and might be brought up in the future without notice?

Mr. MICHENER. Absolutely. If this matter passes the House it will confer upon this so-called Economy Committee the power to do just what has been done to-day, as is suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE]. At any time the Speaker sees fit to call up a bill he may notify some Member on the floor that he will recognize him for the consideration of that bill, and we come here with important legislation, extremely important to the entire Nation, and what do we hear? Some man on the majority side rises and says, "I call up this legislation," and it can be put through under the whip and under the lash, without any consideration whatever by the Members of the House, who have no knowledge that it was coming up and who are not here and can not be expected to know, and who are thereby deprived of their right to vote on important matters.

Mr. KVALE. May I interrupt again?

Mr. MICHENER. Certainly.

Mr. KVALE. Does the gentleman think it would satisfy his side of the House if, following the word "calendar," there be inserted "after five legislative days"? In the absence of that amendment, I would personally be satisfied with the assurance of the Speaker that he would not recognize anybody for that purpose until a certain and adequate time had elapsed.

Mr. MICHENER. I suggest that the gentleman take that up with his leader on that side.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman is not referring to my leader. I have high regard for him, but I am responsible for my own statement

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield for a question.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. If what the gentleman has said were true with respect to the inability of the committee to accomplish anything under the original resolution-and I do not concede that to be true—but if it were true, then the argument the gentleman is making now is in opposition to even permitting it to accomplish anything.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman who has just spoken is a member of the Economy Committee and he knows they have not accomplished anything, at least they have not reported anything. The time is coming when they must report, and I, for one, believe they should report something by April 15. If they have something under their bonnets that is right, let them bring it in by April 15, and then will be the time to pass upon their work and determine whether the time in which they can operate should be extended. If the committee does a good job and makes a report about something then, it will be time enough to determine whether the committee should have more time in which to operate. But, as I have said, I, for one, believe this Economy Committee should make a report to the House by April 15. I do not think this committee should be allowed to proceed under the language of the present resolution and then bring in some legislation which will be privileged, have it passed and put on the doorstep of the Senate, and say the House did something.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Then what the gentleman is saying is that we can not do anything and we will not let you do anything.

Mr. MICHENER. No; not at all. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I do not think there need be any confusion about the real issues in this controversy that have been so vehemently raised by the gentleman from Michigan. The gentleman asserts he did not oppose the original resolution setting up this Economy Committee, but unless my recollection is very gravely in error the gentleman opposed that resolution with about the same degree of vigor with which he is now opposing this resolution. I think the RECORD will disclose that fact, although he now asserts that his side of the House did not oppose the setting up of this committee and giving it the powers then conferred.

What will this proposition do, gentlemen? The gentleman from Michigan says, in effect, that he discounts the sincerity of those who are proposing this so-called Economy Committee. He says it is a mere political gesture and that nothing substantial can be effectuated by the proceedings of this committee along proper lines. Well, the gentleman is entitled to his conclusions about that, but I want to assert that is not in the minds of the Democratic members of the Rules Committee nor in the minds of those on the Appropriations Committee. It is not in the mind of the ranking minority member of that committee, the distinguished ence to proposed consolidations and economies, I have suffigentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood], nor is it in the mind of the Democratic chairman of the Committee on Expenditures, nor in the mind of the ranking Republican member of that committee.

They are not looking at this thing as a mere gesture, I will say to my friend from Michigan, because it was represented to the Rules Committee that not only the four Democrats upon this economy committee but also the three Republican members on this economy committee favored the bestowal of this additional power upon that committee.

Now, gentlemen, let us look at this thing from a practical legislative standpoint. I confess it may have been a parliamentary error in the first instance to have set up this committee and not have given it the power to make recommendations directly to the House of Representatives for action. I think it was a mistake, and upon reflection the gentlemen composing the membership of this committee, as well as the members of the Rules Committee, and others who have been consulted, have reached the conclusion that if the functioning of this committee is to have any practical legislative result at this session of Congress it will be necessary to clothe that committee with legislative authority to bring directly to the House of Representatives for its consideration such conclusions as that committee may reach after its deliberations upon these questions and after hearing the evidence which may be submitted to that committee.

Gentlemen, I have taken occasion heretofore to assert during this session of the Congress that back home-and when I say back home I mean in every section of this countrybig business and little business and the oppressed taxpayers of this country-and I am not saying this in any partisan sense because it cuts across the sections of every portion of our country-are looking for a reduction in governmental expenses. I have heretofore said that if there is any one paramount thought in the minds of the American people to-day it is for the Congress, for the legislatures, for the county boards, and for the boards of aldermen all over this country to reduce the expenses of government all along the line. [Applause.]

Proper conclusions on such reductions is what this committee is seeking to find and to accomplish. It is not a party question. There is no partisanship in the payment of taxes. Those burdens fall alike upon the members of all political parties, although I am to see my party take the lead in this program of economy.

The only way by which this House—and I am speaking of its membership collectively-can hope to accomplish any practical or beneficial results from the deliberations of this committee is for it to bring in some concrete resolution or recommendation for the consideration of the House.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that I do not think there is a member of the Appropriations Committee who does not feel that this is a field in which the Economy Committee can render helpful service if the pending rule is passed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am glad to have that assurance from my able colleague from Alabama.

Now, the gentleman in his speech against the original resolution and in his speech now says nothing practical can be accomplished because despite any effort this special committee may make to bring about a real reduction in governmental expenses the legislation accomplishing that purpose will only be laid on the doorstep of the Senate at this session.

Well, I want to assert to the Members of the House of Representatives that our responsibility ends here upon this floor as far as legislation is concerned, and if we expect to accomplish any real economy in the administration of our governmental affairs by consolidations and cutting out various duplications and all that sort of thing, we have got to make a start somewhere with it.

After hearings are had by this committee and just as soon as they can reach just and proper conclusions with refercient confidence in them and in their good faith and in ments could not be supported. There were two that were their real determination to make an effort to be of service to the taxpayers of this country that I believe they will bring in, not wholesale legislation, necessarily, not legislation that will remedy this whole situation that we are seeking to remedy, but that they will go just as far as they can and with as much dispatch as they can use toward giving this House an opportunity to accomplish some real legislation for economy in our governmental affairs, and, therefore, the Committee on Rules asks this House by this resolution to confer this legislative authority upon this select committee so that they may do the things we had in mind for them to do when we established the committee and gave it this power. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five mintues to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the Record by quoting extracts from annual reports of bureaus and departments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, my objection is not partisan. There is not any partisanship in me; perhaps it would be better if there were some. My objection to this mode of legislation is fundamental.

Years ago the Rules Committee would have brought in any sort of a resolution to carry out its purpose. For the last 10 years the tendency has been to limit the powers of the Rules Committee and, only recently, we liberalized the rules so as to prevent any of the standing committees from thwarting the will of the House, and we had an illustration only a few hours ago, where the new rule was invoked and the House gave expression to its will.

If there are any economies to be exercised under existing law, the great Committee on Appropriations, consisting of 35 members, has the privilege of bringing in the recommendations, and the House will decide. If there are any economies to be exercised which require legislation, we have standing committees with jurisdiction on every possible measure that could be brought into the House.

So we are destroying all that we have done in the liberalization of the rules, all that we have obtained in limiting the powers of the Rules Committee by this loose system of circumventing the will of the House by the creation of these so-called select committees or special committees. What superknowledge, what superability have the members of the special committee, of which there are seven, over the 35 members of the Appropriations Committee, or the membership of any standing committees?

Oh, I say, gentlemen, there are two purposes in mind. One is, under the guise of economy, to destroy certain bureaus of the Government that are rendering useful service, much to the objection of certain privileged interests that resent any governmental regulation or supervision; and another is to attempt to destroy the standard of wages and to bring down the American standard of living thereby.

Why, the distinguished gentleman from Arizona, who made the inspirational speech on this subject, had so emasculated the appropriations for the Bureau of Minesand I referred to it after the magnificant speech made by the gentleman from Arizona for economy-that the purpose of the Bureau of Mines was being destroyed, and then the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. Arentz] again referred to it, and the gentleman from Arizona, big and fair as he always is, wrote a letter to the Senate calling back every amendment that he put on with respect to the Bureau of

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. That is a misstatement of the case. There was one item which was cut; as a matter of fact, there were two items that were cut too much. I did not, by inference or otherwise, state that all the amend-slightly too excessive in amount.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I accept the gentleman's correction, and I will let the gentleman's letter speak for itself, and with his kind permission I shall insert it at this point in the There can not be anything fairer than that. RECORD.

I will take this opportunity to state briefly the purpose and scope of the Bureau of Mines. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. Douglas] figures so prominently in this drive for economy and inasmuch as in his anxiety for economy he offered certain amendments on the floor of the House, which afterwards he was compelled to withdraw, it seems to me that it offers a typical example of how perhaps unintentionally and subconsciously economies are always directed against the particular activity of government which may step on one's toes.

The Bureau of Mines is a long way from Broadway, but it is very near the State of Arizona. Perhaps from the distance we get a better perspective of it than the gentleman from Arizona. Perhaps we are better able to judge its value to the public and the excellent public service it has rendered than anyone who may be closely related to or connected with mines.

I do not in any way desire to criticize the gentleman from Arizona, for whom I have the highest regard and whose abilities are recognized as second to none in this House, but I am going to fight and resist all attempts to hinder and hamper and impair the various bureaus and departments of the Government which have been established in the public interest for the protection of the public and its necessary supervisory and regulatory agencies of the Government.

The letter to which I refer reads as follows:

Congress of the United States, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., February 26, 1932.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES.

Chairman Committee on Appropriations.

My Dear Senator: On Monday last there were several amendments offered by me and accepted by the House to the Bureau of Mines item in the appropriation bill for the Department of Commerce. The amounts of reductions carried in some of the amendments. ments were hastily arrived at and without adequate supporting evidence.

As a result of subsequent investigation, it is my opinion that some of the reductions were too drastic. It is, however, my belief that substantial reductions can be made below the Budget

I am calling this to your attention so that you may before your committee, in the event you see fit to do so, hear the proper officials of the Bureau of Mines in order that there may be repaired any substantial impairment of necessary and requisite functions of the bureau affected by the amendments.

Very sincerely yours,

I believe this letter bears me out and that I did not misstate the facts as suggested by my colleague, the gentleman from Arizona.

Fortunately in this instance the excessive reduction was discovered in time. It is to be hoped the Senate will undo the damage.

This is what some of the proposed cuts in the Department of Interior bill will do to the Bureau of Mines unless the House amendments are eliminated in the Senate:

MINERAL-MINING INVESTIGATIONS

The proposed cut of $40,460 in mineral-mining appropriation below the amount appropriated for 1932 will make it necessary to drop 11 full-time people and about 100 parttime people, mostly engineers, physical chemists, and research men. This will seriously cut down a valuable organization, and reduce by at least one-third the output of one of the most helpful activities offered mining men.

It will cut by at least one-third the research work in metallurgy conducted under this appropriation.

It will cut by one-third the assistance given by mining division to the industry in reducing costs to meet low-metal

Testing fuel: A reduction of $44,610 below 1932 appropriations for testing fuel would drop 19 men, from laborers to engineers and scientists.

Stop service of analyzing fuels bought by States of New York, New Jersey, Maryland, and cities in Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maine.

Slow up payment on coal bought on Government contracts. Reduce by 60 per cent new analyses of coals.

Reduce by one-third work on fuel-economy work in District of Columbia.

Reduce by one-third output of fuel investigation at Pittsburgh.

Stop work on synthetic fuels.

Oil and gas: A cut of $86,645 in oil and gas appropriation below this year's allotments will close the stations at Boulder, Colo.; Laramie, Wyo.; Dallas, Tex.; and reduce the San Francisco station one-half.

It will reduce the service now given the petroleum industry one-half.

It will drop 30 people.

Economics of mineral industries: The appropriation of $225,000 carried in the amended bill is a reduction of $62,820 below allotments for the current fiscal year. A reduction of this amount would necessitate:

First. Elimination of statistical offices at Denver, Colo.; Salt Lake City, Utah; San Francisco, Calif.; and Joplin, Mo.; and the discharge of the 14 employees constituting the staffs of those offices.

Second. Discharge of five employees of the Washington office engaged in the conduct of annual canvasses of minerals in the United States and compilation of mineral statistics.

Third. The Mineral Statistics Division would be unable to compile the regular annual canvass of minerals of the United States, thus breaking a continuous record extending over a half a century.

Each year for over 50 years separate reports have been issued covering the production, value, and various features of processing and marketing of individual minerals. These data provide essentially the only information available regarding current economic status of mineral industries.

It has been suggested that in so far as the American Bureau of Mineral Statistics compiles figures, the activity of the mineral-statistics division of the Bureau of Mines might well be dropped. However, it should be noted that the American Bureau of Metal Statistics compiles reports on only four minerals, namely, copper, lead, zinc, and tin, while the Bureau of Mines compiles statistics and issues reports on over 60 mineral commodities. Furthermore, figures of the American Bureau of Metal Statistics indicate only smelter production and do not represent the output of the mines, whereas the Bureau of Mines shows in great detail all of the figures regarding output of domestic minerals. The American Bureau of Metal Statistics no longer furnishes copper figures.

Fourth. Discontinuance by the coal division of (a) current surveys of coal stocks, (b) monthly report on the Northwest dock trade, (c) all studies of consumption and distribution of coal shipments and all analyses of marketing problems. All of these reports contain important market information of particular value to the coal industry in its present depressed condition. The discharge of four employees would be necessary.

Fifth. Discharge of two employees of the rare-metals and nonmetals division and curtailment of the economic reports on the rare metals.

Of the 25 employees who would be discharged, many are valuable, trained employees, who have been in the service for 20 years or more. The present average age of the staff of the mineral statistics division is 50.02 years. The discharge of such personnel is serious not only from the personal viewpoint of the employees so discharged but from the viewpoint of the Government which will lose the services of individuals having years of experience in the specialized work in which they are engaged. Such experience and training can not be purchased in the open market. On the other hand, it does not represent a marketable asset from the viewpoint of the discharged employee.

Stop service of analyzing fuels bought by States of New | Probable effect of curtailment of activities of the safety division

One of the activities of the safety division of the United States Bureau of Mines is the training of employees of the mining and allied industries in methods of giving first aid to the injured; this training not only is of utility in the saving of pain and misery as well as lives—and it is estimated that at least 200 lives are saved annually as a result of this type of Bureau of Mines work—but also the training has the very good effect of making those who receive it "safety conscious," with the result that they take measures toward avoidance of accidents; and actual records by mining companies show that the first-aid trained employee is but one-half to as low as one-eighth as likely to get injured as is the untrained man.

During the past five years the Bureau of Mines field safety forces, comprised of about 60 instructors, have given a full course of this type of safety training to over 400,000 persons engaged in work in the mining and allied industries, and since 1910 over 600,000 have been trained.

Due to numerous extra precautions taken in coal mining by those engaged in it and partly as a result of the above work as well as due in some part to other safety activities of the Bureau of Mines, the number of persons killed in 1931 in the coal mines of the United States was but about 1,430, which is 554 fewer than in any other year in the present century and is 970 fewer than the average annual number of fatalities for the past 25 years. The coal-mining fatal-accident rate in 1931 was by all odds the lowest for any year in the history of coal mining in the United States.

The safety forces of the United States Bureau of Mines have been but little increased during the past 8 or 10 years, but the amount of work done has been increased several fold, as may be indicated by the fact that while over 110,000 persons were given the full course of training in first aid both in 1930 and in 1931, the total for 1923 was but 14,941, and for 1924 but 17,767.

If the services of safety division were curtailed, for instance as if three of the mine rescue cars and personnel should be dispensed with, there would undoubtedly be a material decrease in the number of men trained not only in first aid but in other forms of safety-and in first-aid training this decrease would probably amount to at least 15,000 full courses-and the Bureau of Mines would be in a most embarrassing position if a disaster should occur in the regions deprived of these cars as we would unquestionably be blamed severely if there should be any suspicion even that lives were lost through failure of the Federal Government to give its accustomed prompt aid at time of mine disaster. Of even more seriousness is the fact that the excellent coal-mine safety record of 1931, with its 1,430 killed as against an annual average of 2,409 for the past 25 years, would be very likely soon to revert to the high figures of the past because there is absolutely no question that the forces of the safety division of the United States Bureau of Mines through the numerous safety approaches have been the "spark plug" which has kept much of the safety work in mining especially to the front during the past few years.

The Bureau of Mines' new accident-prevention course in bituminous-coal mining for mine officials was launched during the year, and between 1,000 and 2,000 mine officials took the full course, which requires several weeks for a presentation. There were circulated approximately 400,000 copies of the 100 or more different safety publications issued during the year and in most instances these publications were sent direct to those likely to read and use them; considerable numbers of chapters of the Holmes Safety Association were organized and kept in working order during the year, and in connection with them the mimeographed Holmes Notes giving about 20 pages of safety data were issued monthly; in addition the bureau's safety personnel cooperated in many ways with numerous organizations such as the National Safety Council, National Coal Association, Lake Superior section of the National Safety Council, Coal Mining Institute of America, Mine Inspectors Institute, and dozens of other organizations.

The Bureau of Mines is also performing a number of excellent services to the mining industry in activities on accident statistics. Nation-wide accident data are assembled and published on fatal and nonfatal accidents and on mine disasters, and the results, as given to the public, are correlated, with the ironing out of most of the kinks due to local differences in the methods of keeping of records.

During the period between January 28, 1931, and November 3, 1931, or more than nine months, there was not a major disaster—one with five or more fatalities—in any bituminous or lignitic mine in the United States. This surpasses any other period of immunity from major disasters in the history of bituminous coal mining for the past 30 or more years. That this is no mere matter of luck is susceptible of very definite proof, and one of the agencies which has aided materially in bringing about this very fine record is rock dusting, the explosion-prevention method long advocated by the United States Bureau of Mines and now being adopted by many progressive coal-mining companies.

There is no question that had it not been for effective rock dusting there would have been at least three major disasters in bituminous mines during the nine months of immunity from them. In one case a trolley-locomotive trip of loaded coal cars wrecked in a mine in which over 75 men were at work, and while the electric arc from the short-circuited wrecked trolley wires ignited the dust cloud with resultant death of the motorman and his helper, the explosion, which had a good start, died as it encounterrock-dusted surfaces in going away from the wrecked trip. There is the best of reason for the belief that if this mine had not been rock dusted the death list would have been in the dozens, possibly in the scores.

In another case, also involving a trolley-locomotive trip wreck, in which a ventilation door was left open and explosive gas accumulated, the gas was ignited by an arc due to operation of the trolley locomotive while trying to rerail the cars, and the resultant explosion killed one of those working on the trip and the second man was recovered alive, though he had been very close to death. There was considerable violence locally, but rock dust stopped the explosion before it got a really good start, which was decidedly fortunate, as there were 150 men in the mine, which is decidely gassy; hence there is good reason to believe that many, if not most, of the 149 men who came out alive owe their lives to the free use of rock dust.

In another case 235 men were working in a decidedly gassy and dusty mine when an explosion of gas by ignition from an electric arc killed 2 electric mining-machine workers and blew out numerous wooden ventilation stoppings, but the explosion failed to penetrate to the other parts of the mine—where 233 others were employed—chiefly because the effectiveness of the rock dusting prevented the coal dust from feeding the flame from the gas explosion.

In these three occurrences the rock dust "fad" more than paid for all of the rock dusting which has been done in the United States during the past year, and if the probable damage to the mines were included, the savings made by rock dusting in these three cases would almost if not entirely cover the expense of all of the rock dusting done to date in the coal mines of the United States. At any rate it is reasonable to believe that if it had not been for rock dusting the death list from these three explosions would have been well over 100 and might have been over 400, and the excellent record of the nine months from January 28, 1931, to November 3, 1931, would not have been made.

HEALTH DIVISION

The health division deals with the conditions that affect the health of the workers in the mineral industries. Its studies and reports cover a wide range of subjects, from diseases due to poor sanitation, as hookworm and typhoid, to those resulting from other environmental surroundings, as silicosis from exposure to dust.

The value of the studies is indicated by the number of investigations made in cooperation with the industry, as hydrogen-sulphide poisoning in cooperation with the American Petroleum Institute, silicosis with the Tri-State Zinc & Lead Ore Producers Association, and carbon-monoxide poisoning with the New York and New Jersey Bridge and Tunnel Commissions. New York City is much interested in all the diseases associated with mining, due to the great amount of tunnel operations. The ventilation of the New York vehicular tunnel was based upon the studies referred to above. The prevention of silicosis, which occurs among miners exposed to siliceous-rock dust, and which has been found among many of the drill operators and other workers in tunnel construction, has been studied by this division for a number of years and the best means for its mitigation determined. In one district this study has already resulted in a definite decrease in compensable diseases and accidents, with considerable saving to both employees and employers.

Many of the employees of the health division are paid from moneys allotted by the cooperators; only a limited number of persons, who guide and supervise the studies, are paid from the funds of the Federal Government. The results of these studies, however, are available to the entire country. Any curtailment in the present appropriations and allotments to this division will mean the dismissal not only of personnel paid by the United States Government but also those paid by the cooperating companies, as the cooperative studies would necessarily have to be suspended with the dismissal of the supervisory and administrative personnel.

DEMOGRAPHIC DIVISION-ACCIDENT STATISTICS

The Bureau of Mines collects statistics of accidents as a basis for the conduct of investigations of means whereby accidents in mines may be prevented and as a means whereby progress in accident prevention may be measured. The statistics are used by mining companies, State mine inspectors, insurance companies, the United States Bureau of Mines, and others concerned with safety in mining.

These statistics focus attention on the causes of accidents, the places where the accidents occur, and the relative seriousness of mining hazards of different types. They show that preventable accidents are costing the mining industry approximately $11,000,000 annually in compensation for injuries, exclusive of wage and other indirect losses, and that accidents have been reduced within the past 10 years more than 30 per cent in iron mining, 26 per cent in lead and zinc mining, 30 per cent in copper mining, and so forth, depending on the degree to which safety measures have been applied.

These statistics provide the only information available for learning the relative hazards of different types of mines or of mines in different States, and they afford the only comparable basis for measuring the success attending efforts to prevent accidents.

Without such statistics, accident-prevention work would necessarily be conducted in a haphazard manner, for it is only with a knowledge of why and where accidents occur that efforts can be coordinated and safety measures applied with economy and efficiency.

Fortunately in this instance the damage was discovered, I hope in time. As we go along under this mania, this insane mania of economy, Congress may be driven and forced from the outside by selfish people who have personal interests to service, and it is quite possible that many useful and efficient bureaus and departments of the Government may be impaired if not entirely destroyed.

I will check these various departments up from time to time, but to-day, as I have stated, I want to say a few words about the Bureau of Mines—one of the targets in this economy drive.

Gentlemen, I have made a survey of the very bureaus that are the target of this so-called economy committee. If this piece of paper instead of being a resolution were a can of baked beans, you would be indicted under the pure food and drugs act for misbranding. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Woon].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the so-called Economy Committee, appointed by the Speaker of the House, has been at work every day since appointed. I do not think the gentleman from Michigan meant what he said, when he declared that up to to-day the committee had done nothing. He is misinformed; we have been doing much. We have ascertained that in order to accomplish what Congress desires we should accomplish, it is going to require some matters of legislation.

There are two ways whereby the committee can function and give the relief that Congress sought in our appointment: Reduce appropriations, and we do not need any authority from this body upon that proposition; but if we are to do away with any of the bureaus and commissions, if we are to consolidate some, in order to do away with a great deal of waste motion, and waste money, we will require legislation

Suppose we should ascertain, or come to the conclusion that a given bureau should be abolished, and, not being permitted to report a bill, we recommend to the House that it be referred to the proper legislative committee, what would happen? That committee, earnestly trying to accomplish its purpose in ascertaining the facts, would commence just where we began, and in the end it would be confusion worse confounded.

Now, if we are in earnest and honest in the declaration that we want to do away with the useless Government bureaus, if we are honest in saying to the country that we want to accomplish economy in various governmental affairs, if this committee is worthy of trust in the first place, why should it not be given the power when they come to the conclusion that a bureau should be abolished, that certain legislation should be reported directly by it to carry out the purpose that Congress had in mind when the committee was appointed. I say not to do that thing is to say that we did not mean what we said we did when the committee was appointed.

I take it that every Member of the House is earnest and honest in his or her attempt to reduce public expenditures. The country press, the metropolitan press all over the country is full of articles saying that this bureau and that bureau is useless and demanding their discontinuance.

There is no politics in this matter. The people are not divided politically when it comes to saving money to the Treasury. [Applause.]

I want to say to you that there is a better chance to-day, under the existing conditions, under the depression, that has called to the attention of every voter of the country the necessity of economy in Government expenditures—I say we are in a better situation to-day than we have ever been in before to accomplish the things that have been talked about for years. [Applause.]

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Take, for example, the recommendation that the gentleman said the committee might want to make in reference to the elimination of bureaus. That might involve two or more committees. If so, you might have to refer that legislation to two or more committees.

Mr. MICHENER. That could not be, because the jurisdiction of the committee is to take care of that very thing.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution has provoked considerable discussion. Personally I want to be thoroughly understood as not being opposed to anything that will bring about economy, if we pursue a course that is intended by those who know the procedure of the House to get that result. I think that is all there is to this. So far as the privileged status is concerned, it does give this committee exceptional authority; it permits it to bring in bills just as this resolution was brought in to-day. Let us hope that in the future a thing like this will not happen, and that we will not bring up a bill of such vast importance, reflecting as it does to such an extent on at least two of our great committees of the House, and practically without notice.

We believe in charity. We all appreciate that this Expenditures Committee is a great committee, set up for specific work, and now to come in and treat it in this way seems hardly fair. Let us give more consideration to real results, to what is going to happen, and what should happen, and less to publicity.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Is the gentleman opposed to this resolution?

Mr. MICHENER. I answer that by saying that I am going to support the resolution, because I do not want to be placed in the light of standing in the way of anything that might result in economy. This resolution to-day is a vindication of the stand that I took, and I ask the gentleman to read my remarks, when the original resolution creating this committee was before the House.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I am delighted to know the gentleman is not opposing the present resolution.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. COLTON. It is a fact that the Committee on Expenditures is studying largely the same question that this Economy Committee is studying. Does the gentleman believe it is necessary, pending the report of this Economy Committee, for the Expenditures Committee to go over the same ground?

Mr. MICHENER. Oh, that is the ridiculousness of the whole thing. We have a standing committee which is going through all this work. They have held hearings for days and days. They are working on the thing, and then the gentleman comes along and creates a supercommittee to work along the same line.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, it is indeed gratifying to hear that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Micherel], after having violently attacked this resolution a few moments ago, with due and careful consideration, has finally agreed to support it.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Schafer], as well as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], is trying to imply that there is politics behind this movement to bring about real and honest economy. I say to the gentleman, and to every Member of this House, that it is the honest aim of the Democratic majority to bring about economy, not empty and bombastic statements of economy which the Republican administration has given to the country for the last decade, but real economy. For 10 years we have been promised economy; yet, notwithstanding that fact, the appropriations and expenditures have continued from year to year and millions upon millions of dollars have been squandered while the Repubican Party was in full control of this House as well as the Senate, and while the Republican Presidents were deriving much acclaim for their supposed virtues of economy.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. No; I do not have time to yield now.

I said that the Republican administration has been making the Nation believe that it, like some of the spokesmen here to-day, believed in economy. If an examination were made of the expenditures, the country would find that hundreds of millions of dollars have been wasted, being expended not only on large numbers of useless officials and commissions, but on imprudent contracts granted by the Republican administration to a favored few.

The people of this Nation demand and insist upon real economy. They can not stand the great burdens. They look to the Democratic Party in this House to bring about the elimination of those criminal and wasteful expenditures which ran unchecked during the last 10 years under the Republican administration.

No. There is no politics behind this move. There is honest effort on the part of the Democratic Party to relieve the people of the unnecessary burdens that the Republican Party has placed upon the backs of the American taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, I feel that the vast majority of the bureaucratic bureaus and commissions which have been established and which cost the Government millions of dollars annually should be eliminated. Experience has shown me that very little beneficial legislation was ever enacted upon the recommendation of the established commissions. Therefore, I am in favor of this resolution because it gives this economy committee the power to prepare and report bills and to give them preferential status so that there will be no delay in securing consideration and action. I assure you, and this is no idle gesture, these bureaus and commissions, this waste, red tape, and overlapping authority must go. To make that possible this resolution must pass.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns].

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, there is but one thing involved in the consideration of this resolution. It puts it up to the House to say whether or not you want to put the Economy Committee in a position by which it can accomplish what you expect it to accomplish in the way of reducing expenses.

The committee has been conducting hearings ever since its organization. It is now getting to the point where very shortly it will come to the problem of preparing possibly some legislation and also some recommendations with reference to appropriations.

The gentleman from Wisconsin had a great deal to say about one bill. I want to say to the gentleman and to the Members of this House that the Economy Committee has not discussed any particular bill up to this time. Its entire time has been taken up in conducting hearings. I do not know what the Economy Committee will recommend, but I do say that when the Economy Committee recommends a bill seeking to cut down expenditures, it ought to have the privilege of presenting it to the House; the bill ought to have a privileged status, so that the House may take action upon it.

That is all this means. It does not mean anything else. If, as the gentleman from Michigan says, he really wants economy—and I do not contradict him—if you want really to do business and cut expenditures, then, in my judgment, there can not be any question but what this resolution should be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin seems to be very much exercised over this resolution. He has no reason to be alarmed. The gentleman seems to feel that it will interfere with the jurisdiction of the Committee on Expenditures. I can tell the gentleman from Wisconsin, just as the gentleman from Tennessee has said, there has been absolutely no discussion in the Economy Committee as to any consolidation. That committee is expecting the Committee on Expenditures to proceed as it has been proceeding, and has urged me to expedite consideration of bills before our committee.

We are to meet to-morrow; and if the members of the committee will be present then, they will have an opportunity to consider two bills upon which hearings have been conducted. We will commence hearings on a third bill on Thursday, the bill to consolidate civilian activities.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. The proponents of the resolution indicated that the Economy Committee would report a bill dealing with consolidations.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is there anything in the resolution which says it will report consolidations? I fail to find it.

Mr. SCHAFER. The proponents of the resolution so stated.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman please read the resolution? See for himself.

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes. It can cover consolidations, expansions, and everything under the sun, but it means nothing.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Did the selection of the Mapes committee insult the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. SCHAFER. That was a different proposition.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Williamson, the ranking member of the Expenditures Committee, sat in the room and is a member of the Economy Committee. He approved of this resolution, the same as I did. I do not feel the Economy Committee is going to do anything whatsoever that the House and country will not approve.

Why, Mr. Speaker, the House expects something from the Economy Committee. Are we to sit every day, for months, and in the end simply advise the House we recommend certain reductions? Give the committee the power and you will get the opportunity to reduce Government expenditures. It will not be fair to the Economy Committee to deprive it of this right. It probably will bring in legislation that in the regular course should come from legislative committees. If a complaint is justified, and I do not feel it is, other committees of the House should complain, rather than the Expenditures Committee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 258, nays 116, not voting 58, as follows:

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time to comply with a promise I made to a prominent citizen and friend of mine from Nashville, Tenn. This morning I filed with the Clerk a petition from Nashville on which it was stated there were 11,000 names favoring the Linthicum-Beck resolution. I promised to call it to the attention of the House. I made every effort to do so before the vote was taken, but was unable to secure recognition, the Speaker stating he would recognize no one for that purpose. This petition was presented to me about an hour and a half or two hours before the resolution was taken up and after I had already announced my position in the matter.

[Here the gavel fell.]

LIMITATION OF INJUNCTIONS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 5315) to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5315) to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That no court of the United States, as herein defined, shall have jurisdiction to issue any restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction in a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, except in a strict conformity with the provisions of this act; nor shall any such restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction be issued contrary to the public policy declared in this act.

"SEC. 2. In the interpretation of this act and in determining the jurisdiction and authority of the courts of the United States, as such jurisdiction and authority are herein defined and limited, the public policy of the United States is hereby declared as follows:

"Whereas under prevailing economic conditions, developed with the aid of governmental authority for owners of property to organize in the corporate and other forms of ownership association, the individual unorganized worker is commonly helpless to exercise actual liberty of contract and to protect his freedom of labor, and thereby to obtain acceptable terms and conditions of employment, wherefore, though he should be free to decline to associate with his fellows, it is necessary that he have full freedom of association, selforganization, and designation of representatives of his own choosing, to negotiate the terms and conditions of his employment, and that he shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection: therefore, the following definitions of, and limitations upon, the jurisdiction and authority of the courts of the United States are hereby enacted.

"SEC. 3. Any undertaking or promise; such as is described in this section, or any other undertaking or promise in conflict with the public policy declared in section 2 of this act, is hereby declared to be contrary to the public policy of the United States, shall not be enforceable in any court of the United States and shall not afford any basis for the granting of legal or equitable relief by any such court, including specifically the following:

"Every undertaking or promise hereafter made, whether written or oral, express or implied, constituting or contained in any contract or agreement of hiring or employment between any individual, firm, company, association, or corporation, and any employee or prospective employee of the same, whereby

or

"(b) Either party to such contract or agreement undertakes or promises that he will withdraw from an employment relation in the event that he joins, becomes, or remains a member of any labor organization or of any employer organization.

"Sec. 4. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue any restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction in any case involving or growing out of any labor dispute to prohibit any person or persons participating or interested in such dispute (as these terms are herein defined) from doing, whether singly or in concert, any of the following acts:

"(a) Ceasing or refusing to perform any work or to remain in any relation of employment;

. "(b) Becoming or remaining a member of any labor organization or of any employer organization, regardless of any such undertaking or promise as is described in section 3 of this act;

"(c) Paying or giving to, or withholding from, any person participating or interested in such labor dispute, any strike or unemployment benefits or insurance, or other moneys or things of value:

"(d) By all lawful means aiding any person participating or interested in any labor dispute who is being proceeded against in, or is prosecuting, any action or suit in any court of the United States or of any State;

"(e) Giving publicity to the existence of, or the facts involved in, any labor dispute, whether by advertising, speaking, patrolling, or by any other method not involving fraud or violence;

"(f) Assembling peaceably to act or to organize to act in promotion of their interests in a labor dispute;

"(g) Advising or notifying any person of an intention to do any of the acts heretofore specified;

"(h) Agreeing with other persons to do or not to do any of the acts heretofore specified; and

"(i) Advising, urging, or otherwise causing or inducing without fraud or violence the acts heretofore specified, regardless of any such undertaking or promise as is described in section 3 of this act.

"Sec. 5. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue a restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction upon the ground that any of the persons participating or interested in a labor dispute constitute or are engaged in an unlawful combination or conspiracy because of the doing in concert of the acts enumerated in section 4 of this act

"Sec. 6. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction upon the hearing of an application for temporary restraining order or for an interlocutory injunction to grant a mandatory injunction, compelling the performance of an act in any case involving or growing out of any labor dispute as herein defined.

"Sec. 7. No officer or member of any association or organization, and no association or organization participating or interested in a labor dispute, shall be held responsible or liable in any court of the United States for the unlawful acts of individual officers, members, or agents, except upon clear proof of actual participation in, or actual authorization of, such acts, or of ratification of such acts after actual knowledge thereof.

"SEC. 8. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue a temporary or permanent injunction in any case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, as herein defined, except after hearing the testimony of witnesses in open court (with opportunity for cross-examination) in support of the allegations of a complaint made under oath, and testimony in opposition thereto, if offered, and except after findings of fact by the court, to the effect—

"(a) That unlawful acts have been threatened and will be committed unless restrained or have been committed and will be continued unless restrained, but no injunction or temporary restraining order shall be issued on account of any threat or unlawful act excepting against the person or persons, association or organization making the threat or committing the unlawful act or actually authorizing or ratifying the same after actual knowledge thereof;

"(b) That substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property will follow:

"(c) That as to each item of relief granted greater injury will be inflicted upon complainant by the denial of relief than will be inflicted upon defendants by the granting of relief:

"(d) That complainant has no adequate remedy at law; and

"(e) That the public officers charged with the duty to protect complainant's property are unable or unwilling to furnish adequate protection.

"Such hearing shall be held after due and personal notice thereof has been given, in such manner as the court shall direct, to all known persons against whom relief is sought, and also to the chief of those public officials of the county and city within which the unlawful acts have been threatened or committed charged with the duty to protect complainant's property: Provided, however, That if a complainant shall also allege that, unless a temporary restraining order shall be issued without notice, a substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property will be unavoidable, such a temporary restraining order may be issued upon testimony under oath, sufficient if sustained, to justify the court in issuing a temporary injunction upon a hearing after notice. Such a temporary restraining order shall be effective for no longer than five days and shall become void at the expiration of said five days. No temporary restraining order or temporary injunction shall be issued except on condition that complainant shall first file an undertaking with adequate security in an amount to be fixed by the court sufficient to recompense those enjoined for any loss, expense, or damage caused by the improvident or erroneous issuance of such order or injunction, including all reasonable costs (together with a reasonable attorney's fee) and expense of defense against the order or against the granting of any injunctive relief sought in the same proceeding and subsequently denied by the court.

"The undertaking herein mentioned shall be understood to signify an agreement entered into by the complainant and the surety upon which a decree may be rendered in the same suit or proceeding against said complainant and surety, upon a hearing to assess damages of which hearing complainant and surety shall have reasonable notice, the said complainant and surety submitting themselves to the jurisdiction of the court for that purpose. But nothing herein contained shall deprive any party having a claim or cause of action under or upon such undertaking from electing to pursue his ordinary remedy by suit at law or in equity.

"Sec. 9. No restraining order or injunctive relief shall be granted to any complainant who has failed to comply with any obligation imposed by law which is involved in the labor dispute in question, or who has failed to make every reasonable effort to settle such dispute either by negotiation or with the aid of any available governmental machinery of mediation or voluntary arbitration,

"Sec. 10. No restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction shall be granted in a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, except on the basis of findings of fact made and filed by the court in the record of the case prior to the issuance of such restraining order or injunction; and every restraining order or injunction granted in a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute shall or may be conferred or defined or limited by act of Coninclude only a prohibition of such specific act or acts as may be expressly complained of in the bill of complaint or petition filed in such case and as shall be expressly included in said findings of fact made and filed by the court as provided herein.

"SEC. 11. Whenever any court of the United States shall issue or deny any temporary injunction in a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, the court shall, upon the request of any party to the proceedings and on his filing the usual bond for costs, forthwith certify as in ordinary cases the record of the case to the circuit court of appeals for its review. Upon the filing of such record in the circuit court of appeals, the appeal shall be heard and the temporary injunctive order affirmed, modified, or set aside with the greatest possible expedition, giving the proceeding precedence over all other matters except older matters of the same character.

"SEC. 12. In all cases arising under this act in which a person shall be charged with contempt in a court of the United States (as herein defined), the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the contempt shall have been committed: Provided, That this right shall not apply to contempts committed in the presence of the court or so near thereto as to interfere directly with the administration of justice or to apply to the misbehavior, misconduct, or disobedience of any officer of the court in respect to the writs, orders, or process of the court.

"SEC. 13. The defendant in any proceeding for contempt of court may file with the court a demand for the retirement of the judge sitting in the proceeding, if the contempt arises from an attack upon the character or conduct of such judge and if the attack occurred elsewhere than in the presence of the court or so near thereto as to interfere directly with the administration of justice. Upon the filing of any such demand the judge shall thereupon proceed no further, but another judge shall be designated in the same manner as is provided by law. The demand shall be filed prior to the hearing in the contempt proceeding.

"Sec. 14. When used in this act, and for the purposes of

"(a) A case shall be held to involve or to grow out of a labor dispute when the case involves persons who are engaged in the same industry, trade, craft, or occupation; or have direct or indirect interests therein; or who are employees of the same employer; or who are members of the same or an affiliated organization of employers or employees; whether such dispute is (1) between one or more employers or associations of employers and one or more employees or associations of employees; (2) between one or more employers or associations of employers and one or more employers or associations of employers; or (3) between one or more employees or associations of employees and one or more employees or associations of employees; or when the case involves any conflicting or competing interests in a 'labor dispute' (as hereinafter defined) of 'persons participating or interested' therein (as hereinafter defined).

"(b) A person or association shall be held to be a person participating or interested in a labor dispute if relief is sought against him or it, and if he or it is engaged in the same industry, trade, craft, or occupation in which such dispute occurs, or has a direct or indirect interest therein, or is a member, officer, or agent of any association composed in whole or in part of employers or employees engaged in such industry, trade, craft, or occupation.

"(c) The term 'labor dispute' includes any controversy concerning terms or conditions of employment, or concerning the association or representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing, or seeking to arrange terms or conditions of employment, regardless of whether or not the disputants stand in the proximate relation of employer and employee.

"(d) The term 'court of the United States' means any court of the United States whose jurisdiction has been gress, including the courts of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 15. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held unconstitutional or otherwise invalid, the remaining provisions of the act and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

"SEC. 16. All acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 5315) to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Section 2 of the Senate amendment contains, in the statement of the policy of the legislation, the phrase "though he [the individual unorganized worker] should be free to decline to associate with his fellows." The phrase is not employed in the corresponding provision in the House bill. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provision.

Section 3 of the House bill and of the Senate amendment are identical, except for minor differences in punctuation. The conference agreement adopts the Senate amendment with minor changes in punctuation.

There are minor differences in the punctuation of section 4 (c) of the House bill and the Senate amendment. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provision.

Section 6 of the Senate amendment provides that no court of the United States shall have jurisdiction upon the hearing of an application for temporary restraining order or an interlocutory injunction to grant a mandatory injunction compelling the performance of an act in any case involving or growing out of any labor dispute as defined in the act. There is no corresponding provision in the House bill. The conference agreement retains the Senate provision.

Section 6 of the House bill provides that no officer or member of any association or organization, participating or interested in a labor dispute, shall be held responsible or liable in any United States court for the unlawful acts of individual officers, members, or agents except upon clear proof of actual participation in or authorization of such acts or of ratification, with actual knowledge of such acts. The section further provides that the liability of any such association or organization for unlawful acts of its members shall be similarly limited. Under the corresponding provision of the Senate amendment (sec. 7) no officer or member of any association or organization, and no association or organization participating or interested in a labor dispute, is to be held responsible or liable in a United States court for the unlawful acts of individual officers, members, or agents, except upon clear proof of actual participation in or authorization of such acts, or of ratification of such acts after actual knowledge. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provision.

Section 7 (a) of the House bill, which deals with findings of fact necessary to be made by the court before a temporary or permanent injunction may be issued, prescribes as one of the classes of findings that unlawful acts have been threatened or committed and will be continued. The paragraph further provides that no injunction or restraining order shall be issued except against the person or persons, association, or organization making the threat or commitactual knowledge thereof.

The corresponding provision of the Senate amendment (sec. 8 (a)) requires a finding that unlawful acts have been threatened or committed and will be committed or continued unless restrained, and omits the provision including associations and organizations within the exception.

The conference agreement requires a finding that unlawful acts have been threatened and will be committed unless restrained or have been committed and will be continued unless restrained, and includes associations and organizations as does the House bill.

Under the House bill (second subdivision of sec. 7) notice of hearing must be given to the chief of those public officials of the county and city within which the unlawful acts have been threatened or committed. Under the corresponding provision of the Senate amendment (second subdivision of sec. 8) notice of hearing must be given to the chief of those public officers of the county and city within which the unlawful acts have been threatened or committed charged with the duty to protect the complainant's property. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provision except that "officials" is substituted for "officers."

The second subdivision of section 7 of the House bill expressly gives the court the power to fix the amount of the security in the undertaking filed by the complainant. There is no corresponding provision in the Senate amendment. The conference agreement adopts the provision of the House bill.

The third subdivision of section 7 of the House bill provides that the undertaking given by the complainant shall signify an agreement upon which a decree may be rendered upon a hearing to assess damages of which hearing the complainant and surety shall have reasonable notice. corresponding provision of the Senate amendment (third subdivision of section 8) contains no such provision with respect to hearing and notice. The conference agreement adopts the House provision.

The House bill (section 10) provides that, upon the request of any party to the proceedings, the court shall forthwith certify the entire record of the case, including a transcript of the evidence taken, to the Circuit Court of Appeals for its review. The Senate amendment (section 11) provides that upon the request of any party to the proceedings and on his filing the usual bond for costs, the court shall forthwith certify as in ordinary cases the record of the case to the Circuit Court of Appeals for its review. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment.

The House bill (section 11) provides that, in cases arising under sections 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 of this amendatory act in which a person is charged with criminal contempt of a court of the United States, the accused should enjoy a speedy public trial by jury. The corresponding provision of the Senate amendment (section 12) is broader in that it relates to all cases in which a person is charged with contempt in a court of the United States. The conference agreement applies only to cases arising under the act under consideration in which a person is charged with contempt in a court of the United States.

Section 12 of the House bill provides that the defendant in any proceeding for contempt of court may file a demand for the retirement of the judge sitting in the proceeding if the contempt arises from an attack upon the character or conduct of such judge and if the attack occurred otherwise than in open court. The corresponding provision of the Senate amendment (section 13) permits such demand if the contempt occurred elsewhere than in the presence of the court or so near thereto as to interfere directly with the administration of justice. The conference agreement reting the unlawful act or authorizing or ratifying it after | House bill (section 14) in that separability with regard to persons and circumstances is included. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provision.

HATTON W. SUMNERS. A. J. MONTAGUE, Managers on the part of the House.

PROHIBITION

Mr. STALKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by printing a speech I made over the radio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STALKER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

When prohibition became a part of the American Constitution it became the law of every true American, wet or dry. The ques-tion of law enforcement involves the very existence of our form tion of law enforcement involves the very existence of our form of government—the preservation of law and order. I am not going to trespass upon your time by going back over the history of the adoption of the eighteenth amendment. It was ratified and adopted in the orderly procedure specified by the Constitution. The amendment is a part of the Constitution, the law of the land, binding upon every individual, every official, State or National, and striking down of its own force all laws in contravention of its terms. So long as it remains unchanged, no one can legally or morally manufacture or sell intoxicating liquor for beverage or morally manufacture or sell intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes anywhere within the wide domain of the United States. The American people do not favor any surrender to the boot-legger or the racketeer. This Nation has never retreated. It is not in the mind to permit criminals and lawbreakers to revise its Constitution and repeal its laws. It demands that those in authority attack the foes of law and order. It wants the officials supplied with whatever legal machinery is necessary to win this Prohibition, compared with other reforms at the age of 12 years, is comparable with the others in their infancy. If history reveals anything, it reveals how slowly a time-worn habit gives ground. It shows that to enforce a new law against an old, deep-rooted custom takes about as long as to accumulate the sentiment which passes the law. Take the American Constitution, passed in 1787. It made us a nation on paper. It was 12 years old when George Washington died. So great then were our troubles with the French that thousands believed the Constitution could never became a working reality. came a working reality

It takes time to build up reasonable enforcement of a new law. Where such a law is passed by the advanced majority the unconvinced minority must slowly come to a realizing sense of the economic virtues of the new idea. The idea must ripen into custom. The big cities come last into new reforms. But reform comes eventually, for an economic idea will always fight the way to the front. Prohibition came like the antislave trade act, where only the middle class were converted. The actitation power in the comes eventually, for an economic idea will always fight the way to the front. Prohibition came like the antislave trade act, where only the middle class were converted. The agitation now in the big cities means that the city is at last taking notice of this great social reform. Given time, it too will accept the mandate of the backbone of the Nation, the economic necessity of prohibition.

National prohibition in America is not a failure, nor is it going to be. This Government is based upon the proposition that when a constituted majority in a legal and orderly manner adopt a constitutional provision of law it is wholly binding upon all. This to be. This Government is based upon the proposition that when a constituted majority in a legal and orderly manner adopt a constitutional provision of law it is wholly binding upon all. This Nation is what it is to-day because the minority, when a public question has been settled, abides by the will of the majority. There is no other way if this Republic is to endure and to carry out the purposes of those who founded it.

Thomas A. Edison said, "America will be irresistible in economics if it remains sober. You hear about restrictions of personal liberty in speaking of prohibition. What is civilization but restriction of personal liberty for the improvement of mankind?"

On his seventy-ninth birthday, Mr. Edison said to a reporter: "Prohibition is a good thing for the children of to-day. It is useless to try to change those who are used to drinking." He said further, "I am a teetotaler from alcoholic liquors. I always felt that I had better use for my head."

At a recent hearing before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, Director Amos W. W. Woodcock, of the Prohibition Bureau, gave testimony of the highest order. During this hearing he stated that if beer were made legal it would be difficult to confine it to designated places, and that enforcement of prohibition generally would be made more difficult. He cited figures to show that prior to 1920 a free market for beer did not decrease the desire to buy distilled spirits. He showed by reports and figures that the net cost of the Prohibition Bureau was small when fines and forfeitures were taken into consideration. He proved by official data that the prohibition law is enforced better than practically any other criminal law on the statute books.

In 1931, 86 per cent of all those arraigned as violators of the tically any other criminal law on the statute books.

administration of justice. The conference agreement retains the Senate provision except that "attack" is substituted for "contempt."

The separability clause of the Senate amendment (section 15) is broader than the corresponding provision of the

Would legalized beer return prosperity? It is said that our economic situation is bad; that millions of men are out of work. I regret this thoroughly. If men have no money to buy food, where would they get money to buy booze? Some say repeal the eighteenth amendment and immediately economic conditions will be better. Consumption of beer in England per capita is larger than in any country in the world, and it doesn't appear to have helped either the industrial or social situation; in England either the industrial or social situation in England.

Germany stands third per capita in consumption of beer and rather high in the sale of hard liquor. The recent crisis in Germany was escaped and the nation saved from bankruptcy only through the good offices of a prohibition country, the United States

The secretary of agriculture of the State of Pennsylvania re-cently declared: "Agriculture will not agree to lose the added markets that prohibition brings. The feed that would sustain enough cows to furnish the milk that now replaces beer and whisky is three times as great as the amount of grain that the liquor business used in 1917."

I am also glad to-night to answer the control of the control

I am also glad to-night to answer the unwarranted attacks made upon the young people of to-day. The editor of the Journal of the National Education Associa-The editor of the Journal of the National Education Association gives a most complete and convincing defense of the young people in our schools and colleges. He presented direct testimony from letters and from personal experience in field work. Of 312 letters received from college presidents, only 9 alleged that conditions were worse since prohibition.

The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union addressed an inquiry to 300 college presidents. Of 262 replies only 18—less than 7 per cent of the total—answered that conditions now are either worse than or about the same as before prohibition. From than 7 per cent of the total—answered that conditions now are either worse than or about the same as before prohibition. From the large land-grant universities—which enroll about one-third of the college students of the country—the Woman's Christian Temperance Union received very interesting facts. Those presidents replied that during 1928 it was necessary to discipline for drinking only sixteen-hundredths of 1 per cent of all undergraduates. A simple calculation places the proportion at 1 student disciplined for drinking to 624 students not requiring such correction. One hundred and forty-seven of these college presidents stated that there is less drinking now at their institutions than there was before prohibition. Ninety-seven college presidents re-stated that there is less drinking now at their institutions than there was before prohibition. Ninety-seven college presidents replied that there is either no drinking whatever at their institutions now or so little that it is unknown to the faculty.

I shall quote from large daily newspapers, covering a period of 60 years prior to the adoption of the eighteenth amendment, and prove conclusively to you that throughout the years of the legalized select the bootlegger speck-case, and poisonous liquior disized saloon the bootlegger, speak-easy, and poisonous liquor dispenser flourished.

I refer first to the article from an Albany (N. Y.) newspaper in 1858 stating that "only about 100 applications have yet been made for licenses in this city. Nearly or quite 500 are pursuing the traffic without a license or without exhibiting any desire to procure one. This contempt of a constitutional statute is to be

A New York City newspaper stated in 1860 as follows: "The extensive adulteration of liquors offered in the market as pure, and the introduction of poisonous ingredients into those which are pronounced healthful, may well excite alarm and call for the attention of our legislature. Why then should there be so much tention of our legislature. Why then should there be so much brain fever, delirium tremens, and so much sudden death among our young men who indulge at the bar? It can not be explained upon any common principles. An expert chemist of this city bought of an importer a bottle of what is called genuine champagne. An analyzation proved it to contain one-quarter of an ounce of sugar of lead. The same gentleman analyzed 16 samples of wines—port. sherry, and Madeira—in which not one drop of the juice of the grapes was found."

In 1866 the New York Times said, editorially: "Of the 10,000 drinking places in the city a very large proportion are unlicensed, and of these again nearly all are nurseries and receptacles of and of these again nearly all are nurseries and receptacles of drunkenness."

The chief magistrate of New Jersey, in 1856, said: "It has been long known and incontestibly proved by statistical data that the great mass of crime and misery throughout the land may be directly traced to unrestrained indulgence in alcoholic liquor. It is the especial duty of the legislature to check the crime at its source, to shield the weak and helpless from suffering, and it ought to strive by judicial enactments to diminish this fruitful source of human degredation."

I quote as follows from an editorial in the Pittsburgh Leader, January 6, 1901:

"According to the report of Jail Warden Soffel, the total number of prisoners received at the jail in 1900 was 9,182. In the previous of prisoners received at the jail in 1900 was 9,182. In the previous year 8,440 prisoners were admitted, this being the largest number for any one year up to that time. The jail physician states that 95 per cent of the prisoners came to grief through the abuse of strong drink."

These abuses and bootlegging just mentioned occurred in the days of the licensed saloon. At the same time the Pittsburgh papers claimed that there were between 2,000 and 3,000 speak-papers claimed that there were between 2,000 and 3,000 speak-easies and bootleggers in that locality.

I quote from an interview with J. Fanning O'Reilly, editor of the Liquor Trades Review, in the Pittsburgh Leader, January 31, 1898: "The evils of adulteration, imitation, and counterfeiting of labels," said Mr. O'Reilly, "are among the worst curses in the liquor business * * *.

liquor business "It will surprise many of your readers to know that 90 per cent of the so-called imported goods sold in this country are spurious. It is also a fact that 75 per cent of so-called Pennsylvania and Kentucky whisky, although branded as such, never saw those States and is nothing but colored cologne spirits, touched up with other stuffs of that kind, with a very small percentage of the genuine article."

President Keefe, of the Liquor Dealers' Association of Pittsburgh, stated: "At the very lowest estimate the speakeasies, clubs, and other resorts damage the legitimate trade at least 40 per cent

Albert Eisele, head of the Cuyahoga County (Ohio) Liquor Dealers' Association, wrote in the Cleveland Free Press of February 12, 1915, that "more than 1,500 speak-easies are operating openly in this city."

Thirty years ago brewers complained that they were paying a tax on intoxicating 4 per cent and 5 per cent beer, while wildcat competitors made a 2 or 3 per cent beer tax free, a situation unfair to the taxpaying brewers. The big brewers then proved conclusively that liquor intoxicates when it contains more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol.

Instead of talking glibly about the evils of prohibition, talk about the evils of the Government-licensed, Government-protected liquor traffic of the saloon days.

Has it occurred to you what the proposal to bring back beer involves?

To bring back beer would also bring back 92 per cent of the liquor trade.

It would make millionaires of brewers—money gathered from the families of those who drank the beer. It would not increase savings, the ownership of homes, the comfort of children, or their welfare and self-respect.

To bring back beer would give the brewers once again their old political despotism. The eighteenth amendment has helped America to achieve the removal of the open saloon which ruined homes, encouraged gambling, and degraded politics.

It has reduced the consumption of alcoholic beverages by 70 per cent within a remarkably short time.

It has eliminated liquor advertising, which appealed to the crudest and lowest emotions to create new victims of the drinking habit.

It has aided and protected children and their mothers from the neglect and brutality of drinking fathers. Following the eighteenth amendment has come the development of all types of schools. Millions of young people have a richer educational opportunity. High-school enrollment alone in the United States increased from 2,000,000 in 1920 to nearly 5,000,000 in 1930, the most remarkable advance in the history of civilization. civilization.

Are the prohibitionists on the run? Look at the facts of the past 10 years.

Twenty-two States strengthened their original prohibition-en-

Twenty States retained enforcement laws with little change, despite ceaseless wet efforts for repeal or modification. Only five States repealed their enforcement laws.

One State, Maryland, has never enacted an enforcement law.

To sum up the decade—22 States strengthened, 20 States retained, and only 5 States repealed their enforcement laws. It seems to me this record indicates quite clearly that sentiment for prohibition, far from lessening, has increased measurably during the past 10 years.

The result of the vote taken in the Senate January 21, 1932, on a resolution introduced by Senator Bingham, which stated that the Senate "would welcome" any action taken by the governors of the several States to initiate State referenda on the repeal or modification of the eighteenth amendment and Volstead Act, was 55 votes against and 15 votes for the resolution.

My friends, I have endeavored to give you an outline of the history of the liquor business since 1850. It is replete with corruption, lawlessness, and debauchery. The wets have no ideas but what have been tried out over a period of years, and have failed. They have no solution. They simply want liquor. Bring back liquor—even wine and beer—and you bring back all the evils of the old saloon.

The only solution is prohibition. Under it progress is steadily being made. National prohibition in America is succeeding, and each year enforcement is improving. I thank you.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may revise my remarks on the motion to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary with reference to the Linthicum amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to revision.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and, of course, I shall not, I want to ask my colleague if he does not think he ought to request that all Members have five legislative days in which to put their views on this subject in the RECORD. That is nothing but fair to other Members of the House.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I shall be glad to do that, but I would like to have my request granted first.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that he may revise the remarks he made this morning on the motion to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary in relation to House Joint Resolution 208. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to revision.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE REVENUE BILL OF 1932

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10236, with Mr. BANKHEAD in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ARENTZ].

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, early last week I asked the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] for time to speak against this bill, because I did not like certain features of it. I felt I had studied it, and was inclined to oppose the entire bill. Of course, we did not have much time to put on the bill because it came before the House rather suddenly. Since that time I have been doing quite a good deal of thinking and have studied all phases of this bill. I have listened with a great deal of attention to the debate on the floor of the House. I have evolved in my mind a number of schemes that I thought were practical, but in each case I dismissed the plan as impractical, and at last I have come to the conclusion that the bill before us is about as good as we can get, and to-day I have asked for time to speak in favor of the [Applause.]

I think if a number of the gentlemen on this side of the House, as well as on the other side, would reconsider the statements many of them have made about the bill under consideration at least some of them would come to the same

It is not an easy matter to draft a revenue bill. You have got to mix courage with brains in order to produce a revenue You can not do it on the spur of the moment.

It has got to have a broad base and the revenue has to be easy of collection and must be certain. If the bill does not meet all these requirements, it is not the kind of bill we should vote for.

It is easy enough to find fault; but unless we can offer something constructive, I fear the bill will be defeated and something will be offered in its place that will be very unsatisfactory, indeed; unsatisfactory in amount of revenue raised, irregular as to amount, and one that falls hardest on the workers who are least able to pay.

We have heard remarks, stated in different ways, by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Crisp], by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], and by Members on this side of the House; but I want to say particularly that the leaders on this side have expressed to you the fact that they have put their entire heart and soul in this bill, and unless this bill is passed they are going to bring out something here like a row of skyscrapers, with high points and low points, and when it comes to collecting the revenue we are going to find some of the high points have been cut off and that the revenue is not there.

I do not like one or two provisions in this bill. For instance, I am going to do everything I can, and I think the men on this side who are opposed to the bill, as well as the men on the other side of the aisle, should join with me in providing that processed meats, lard, bacon, and things of that sort should not be taxed; and, in fact, that all foodstuffs should not be taxed. I believe we should offer and pass an amendment providing that canned goods are to be excepted, because, after all, the testimony before the House is to the effect that it is not going to touch the table of the poor man. Let us now live up to that agreement. Let us not do anything in this bill that will tax the table of the poor man, because the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIAl is not the only man in this House whose heart is beating in sympathy for the man who works on the train or on the highway or in the shop. We all have sympathy for the man who works. I know that during these trying times my heart has fairly bled for them; but I want to say that if we vote for appropriations to provide work for the unemployed, we have got to vote to raise the revenue. I would feel in my own heart as though I had made a grievous mistake, that I was not being true to my cause or true to my office, if, after voting for the highway bill of $132,000,000, I was not willing to vote for the revenue to provide the

Many of the men on this side who have spoken against this measure are men who voted for the highway bill; and in all conscience, my friends, I do not see how you can fail to vote for a bill to provide the necessary revenue, because, after all, you can not draw water out of the spigot without pouring water into the barrel somewhere, and that is what you are trying to do; and for any one individual in this House to set himself up as being able to present a revenue bill, after giving it a few minutes' or a few hours' thought, is setting himself up to be a mighty big man. The Ways and Means Committee has given many weeks of thought to this bill; other men have given many weeks and months of thought to the bill.

Personally, I believe we have got to raise money. We can not get away from that, and we are going to spend a certain amount of money while we are here, and the longer we stay here the more money we are going to spend. I do not believe we are being true to ourselves if we do not face the situation and be real Americans, regardless of political expedience or anything else, because, after all, we can not make a bill by demagoguery or by political expediency. This is not the way revenue bills are written. We have got to sit down and figure out who is going to pay the tax and whether the tax is resting too heavy on any one individual or a group of individuals.

The statement has been made that this bill will cost the average family $20 a year. I have great respect for the gentleman from New York [Mr. La Guardia], and I hold him in very great esteem; but I think he is about 75 per cent off, because I can not figure that a man, as he states, spending $1,000 is going to spend $20 on account of this tax, because when you come right down to it, the man who has a $2,000 income, and we must think of that man-we do not want to think, particularly with respect to this tax, of the man who makes four or five or ten thousand dollars a year or one hundred thousand dollars a year-we are thinking about the small man; and I want to say that the small man who spends $1,000 on his household, whether for clothing, shoes, or food, is going to spend but a fraction of $20. I would estimate the amount he is going to spend at nearer $5

I believe it may be stated without fear of contradiction that out of $1,000 spent by a family, $400 would be expended on taxable items. In the hands of the manufacturer this amount of goods would shrink to $200. The manufacturers' tax on this sum of goods would amount to $4.50. Where $2,000 is spent by a family for household expenses exclusive of rent, the tax, according to best authority, would not exceed $9.

I am in favor of the payment of these sums toward the Federal revenue rather than to have a substitute bill under the provisions of which the tax can be passed on from one dealer to another until finally the consumer pays it all.

Mr. RANKIN. This sales tax will put a burden of $5 on every man, woman, and child in the family.

Mr. ARENTZ. I am glad the gentleman has made that statement. Take the House Office Building. If the gentleman goes along the street he will see the material going in there-stone, concrete, lumber, and every conceivable thing. Who pays for that? That will be paid out of these taxes.

If you look at the freight trains going across the country you will find those cars are filled, not with food and clothing, but most of them are filled with industrial material, with steel, cement, machinery, lumber, and every other conceivable material going into construction. Now, to take the money that will be raised by this bill and divide it by the number of families, and say that that is the average that will be imposed upon each family is absurd. This estimate should be cut down 60 or 75 per cent.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman talks about the office building. That is years ago-

Mr. ARENTZ. Now, let us not get into a political discussion. We are talking about the amount that will be raised by this tax bill. We are not talking about Democrats or Republicans.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is getting excite Mr. ARENTZ. No; I do not yield any further. The gentleman is getting excited-

Now, under this revenue measure, we must meet certain conditions. It must have a broad base, and this bill has a broad base. It must be equitable with reference to all taxpayers. I believe this bill is equitable. It must be collected at a minimum cost, and I believe this revenue can be collected at a minimum cost. It must not tax the products of the farm, and, with two exceptions, this bill does not. I hope something can be done to raise the price of theater and movie tickets before the tax is applied. I hope that this defect-because I call it that advisedly-can be remedied and admission tickets up to 35 cents kept free from tax. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, if you will bear with me for a time, I desire to discuss with you an item in this revenue bill which to my mind is of great importance to the 130 Members of this House representing the Atlantic Seaboard States, from Maine to California. The item to which I refer is (d) (4) of section 601, and is apparently a tariff measure introduced into this revenue bill—a rather marked departure from the usual course of legislative procedure. If the real object of this item is the raising of revenue, then it is rightfully, if surprisingly, here; if, however, it is in truth and in fact a tariff measure inserted in this revenue bill, then, perhaps, I may be pardoned for suggesting its unfairness to those other industries, suffering as the oil industry is suffering during these times of depression, facing disaster from the wiping out of tariff protection through the depreciated currencies of foreign countries, waiting patiently at the front door of your committee, while oil, also seeking protection, slips in the back door and comes out as a tariff item in a revenue measure. However, I am here to question the wisdom rather than the justice of this action; and I do this with reluctance.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Yes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Does the gentleman say that he is against the tariff bill?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I will try and answer the gentleman in the course of my remarks. This committee has rendered such notable service to the Congress, there is so much to be commended in this bill, that I am sure the committee will bear with patience the criticism which I feel constrained to make of this one small alien tariff item lost in the mazes of a billion-dollar revenue bill. Doubtless the members of the committee felt that there were peculiar economic considerations, if not political and legislative ones, which justified or made necessary this unusual procedure. The only member of the committee who has discussed this item, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], frankly states that the first consideration prompting him to support this item was that it is in effect a tariff measure. If his position is that of the committee, we find that to overcome a deficit of a billion and a quarter dollars the committee found it essential to include in its revenue bill a single tariff item, dealing with a comparatively small but $5,000,000. Such a position would be ludicrous were it not so serious in its effects on a large section of the country.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Did not the Treasury Department say it did not think it would produce any revenue? I notice in the brackets that the Treasury Department did not note any revenue that would be produced by it.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I think that is true.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman from Maryland is in error in his reference to the Treasury Department.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Oh, I yield for anything connected with my remarks, but not for a colloquy between the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from

Mr. TREADWAY. Then let me ask the gentleman from Maine a question, in view of the fact that he agreed with the statement of the gentleman from Maryland. Is it not a matter of record that the Treasury Department said in their report that it would produce $5,000,000?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. According to an exhibit which the gentleman from Massachusetts introduced into the Record last Friday, which purported to be the estimates of both the Treasury and the committee, there were an estimate of no revenue on the part of the Treasury and an estimate of $5,000,000 on the part of the committee.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. LINTHICUM rose.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Oh, just a moment. I enjoy this, but my time is limited.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman is mistaken. Mr. NELSON of Maine. The gentleman from Massachusetts goes further and states that "this item is a tariff measure under guise of a tax bill." Those words, "under guise of," strike a rather discordant note, and somehow recall the old Biblical allusion of the voice of Jacob and the hands of Esau.

Again, if the gentleman's position is that of the committee, both Democratic and Republican members have selected from the many this one small tariff item, dressed it up to look like the revenue family, and bundled it into this revenue bill. [Applause.]

That is a difficult thing to believe, even of the Republican members of the committee who are committed to the theory of protection. It is much harder to believe of the Democratic members who are opposed to further tariff legislation.

The gentleman from Massachusetts states that he voted against this item in committee, thus doing violence to those altruistic and magnanimous sentiments which he expressed in the debate of last Friday. He is now for it, and by implication, at least, he relegates those who occupy his former position to the realm of selfish and narrow provincialism. He goes further and characterizes the statements of the opponents of this measure, arguments which once convinced him as fantastic and exaggerated.

How grievously, my friends, we statesmen here in this House are sometimes misunderstood and misrepresented by the folks back home! I hold in my hand a letter from the Associated Industries of Massachusetts and shall read an excerpt from it, not in condonation of the romantic statements which it contains but as evidencing the tendency of the people back home to misunderstand our action. This letter comments upon the fact that the Committee on Ways and Means at one time, convinced that the oil tax would produce no revenue, dropped the consideration of the tariff on oil. I now quote from the letter:

As soon as this fact was learned by proponents of a tariff duty or excise tax on imported oil they hurriedly brought together 40 Members of Congress from the States of Oklahoma, Kansas, Texas, and mid-continent fields, who threatened they would join with others in opposing the manufacturers' sales tax, which constitutes amount of gasoline, and promising at best a revenue of the principal revenue-producing item in the bill, unless an excise of 1 cent per gallon on imported oil was provided for by the committee.

Fifteen members of the Ways and Means Committee, fearing that the revenue bill would fail of passage if the threat was not heeded, yielded to these importunities Saturday morning, March 5, and wrote the excise-tax rate into the bill as a means of saving the entire measure, while nine members of the committee opposed such a course

This action constituted an example of the misused power of a determined minority of less than 10 per cent of the House membership, and it is clearly apparent that a majority of the Ways and Means Committee acted under threat, well knowing that there can not possibly be any income derived under the proposal, inasmuch as the excise tax will automatically stop the importation into this country in any considerable volume of crude fuel oil and

I would suggest that the Members from Massachusetts correct this unfortunate conception of affairs as speedily as possible.

However, we are all liable to be misunderstood; each of us has his own problems to solve, must rely upon his own judgment, and do his duty as he sees it, unpleasant as it may sometimes be. It is not a pleasant task for me to oppose this oil item. I value the respect and friendship of the Members from the oil-producing States, and nothing that I may say here is in any way personal. I try to take a national view of each problem presented here. I have of this one. I have given it careful study, and that study tells me that this proposed tax is unprecedented, uneconomic, unwise, and unwarranted; that it would be in the interests of the major oil companies and of no material avail to the small producers; that in these times of economic distress it would strike a fatal blow to the industries of the Atlantic seaboard; and that it ought not to be enacted into law. Thus believing, I crave your indulgence that I may state at least a few of the reasons for that belief. If I am wrong in any statement of fact, or in any deduction from established facts, then I welcome correction from any Member of this House.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I yield.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Is it not true that this tax would strike a vital blow at our merchant marine plying between the Atlantic seaboard and Europe, and practically put it out of business?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I can not vouch for its truth, but it has been stated that this increase of 70 per cent on the fuel oil used by our shipping would wipe out all the benefit that was given to our shipping by reason of the merchant marine act.

Mr. LINTHICUM. By the subsidies which they now receive for carrying the mail?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Yes.

TARIFF ON OIL MORE UNJUSTIFIED THAN EVER BEFORE

In the first place, I want to say, without fear of contradiction, that oil imports are to-day relatively less important as compared with the production, consumption, and exports of the United States than at any previous time in our history.

In 1922 when the tariff bill of that year was enacted imports of crude oil into this country were 130,000,000 barrels. Last year they were but 47,000,000 barrels, while the imports of both crude and refined were less than 86,000,000 barrels. In 1922, with imports far in excess of present imports, no tariff was placed on petroleum or its products.

In 1929, when the present tariff bill was written, the oil producers appeared before the House and Senate committees and asked for a tariff on oil. Imports of crude and refined were that year 108,500,000 barrels. The imports for 1930 were about 3,000,000 barrels less than those for 1929. The duty was denied by both House and Senate.

Last year, with imports about 20,000,000 barrels less than in 1930, a strenuous attempt was again made to place an embargo on foreign oil or to secure a tariff of $1 a barrel plus 50 per cent ad valorem on derivatives. Although politics then entered into the contest, economics finally prevailed and no embargo or duty was placed against foreign imports of this commodity.

This year, for months there has been manifest here in Washington the existence of a large, active, and efficient oil lobby. From this lobby threats of economic and political reprisals have issued. Members of the House from the oil-producing States have been commendably active in what they believed was in the interests of their constituents, and many excellent speeches urging an oil tariff have been made on the floor of this House.

Last Monday the House Committee on Ways and Means, the majority of whom are members of a party historically opposed to unreasonable tariff duties, a party that has consistently criticized the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill as antagonistic to our best national interests, brought in this revenue bill containing a tariff on oil, although the imports during 1931 had fallen off 24 per cent from those of the previous year.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. While I am in absolute harmony with the gentleman's position and voted against the provision providing a tax on imported oil, it was not reported out as a party measure. The bill is not a party measure in any respect, and I am sure the gentleman would not want to have incorporated in the Record any accusations or charges which are not absolutely correct.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I think the gentleman misapprehended what I intended to say, because I was about to proceed to pay my respects to the Republican members of the committee also.

I want to say, and I was about to say, that the position of the Republican members on the committee is equally difficult for me to understand. No Republican Ways and Means Committee of the past—and we have had some very able ones—has ever advocated or countenanced such a tax. No Republican administration, believing as they do in proper protection, has ever levied such a tax. Fuel, including oil, has always been on the free list, and for good reasons, which obtain to-day. Oil is a prime necessity in the production of every commodity, both in industry and in agriculture. Oil is a great, natural, irreplaceable resource, vital to the economic life of this machine age of ours.

Mrs. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. NELSON of Maine. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS. Is it not true that in 1920 the Democratic platform stated—

The Democratic Party recognizes the importance of the acquisition by Americans of additional sources of supply of petroleum and other minerals, and declares that such acquisition should, both at home and abroad, be fostered and encouraged.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. That is true.

Mrs. ROGERS. And also declared against any tariff on any fuel in the 1920 platform?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. The lady is speaking of the Democratic platform?

Mrs. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS. May I make this further statement: Every report of the Federal Oil Conservation Board has urged the investment by Americans in foreign fields as a patriotic necessity. Upon this encouragement this American industry, carriied on by companies under American charters, with American workers and operatives and using American ships to transport their product to our shores, has risen and grown. Last year the Bureau of Mines reported to the Commerce Committee of the Senate as follows:

* * * these American companies consistently received the assistance of the United States Government in their efforts to explore and develop oil lands in foreign countries. * * * In its first report the Federal Oil Conservation Board advised "that our companies should vigorously acquire and explore such fields if of importance, not only as a source of future supply but supply under control of our own citizens."

Having thus encouraged American oil companies to develop foreign oil production * * * it might be considered that there has been established an implied obligation to continue in the assistance of American companies engaged in foreign oil production and that the restriction or refusal of admission to the United States of the oil so produced would be contrary to the encouragement which these companies have received while engaging in foreign oil exploration and development work.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I yield.

Mr. LINTHICUM. May I show the gentleman this summary of a statement which was filed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Treadway]?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I have it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. It shows there is no income designated by the Treasury Department.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. If there is no income to be derived, what possible objection could the gentleman have to this excise tax? It could not hurt anybody if there is no revenue collected and none derived.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I will come to that in a minute.

Mr. HASTINGS. I would like the gentleman to answer it.
Mr. NELSON of Maine. I will be glad to answer it. Does the gentleman want me to answer it now?

Mr. HASTINGS. At the gentleman's pleasure. I just want to say that if there is no revenue, then there is none collected.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I will say to the gentleman if I do not answer it before I finish and the gentleman will call my attention to it, I will endeavor to do so; but if I now answer random questions on various phases of this matter, I can not make a connected statement or finish within the allotted time.

Mr. HASTINGS. There is one other question I would like to have the gentleman answer, if he will permit. During the last campaign Vice President Curtis went to Oklahoma representing the President of the United States, and in a number of speeches at Muskogee, Okmulgee, and Tulsa he specifically promised a tariff on oil.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I know nothing about that, nor am I the keeper of the Vice President's conscience; but I do know what the Republican campaign textbook says.

Just a word more on oil before I forget it. I say this oil is vital, not only in the economic life of this Nation, but it is essential to our national defense. Secretary Lamont once very properly said that it furnishes the steam in our warships, the flight of our airplanes, the financing of our highways, and the turning of 80 per cent of our wheels. It is a natural resource that is irreplaceable. When this oil is once gone, or wasted, it is gone forever, and in that respect it differs from any other subject upon which you can place a tariff.

The lady from Massachusetts calls attention to the, at least implied, promise of the Democratic Party in their platform. I have here a copy of the Republican campaign textbook for 1928. It calls attention to the fact that there are on the free list a great number and variety of commodities peculiarly essential to the pursuits of agriculture, and cites crude petroleum, gasoline, and lubricating oil as "articles used by the farmer which are on the free list, and so forth," at least an implied promise to the farmers of this country that they should continue there.

Consulting the historic policies of the two great parties, we may well wonder how, to secure $5,000,000 in revenue for a billion-dollar revenue bill, the Democrats could outtariff the most ardent protectionists of the past, and the Republicans could revoke their implied promise to the farmers of this country, reverse their historic economic stand, and enter upon this very doubtful venture—a venture that repudiates all their previous economic and conservation theories.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Is it not true that the United States has only 18 per cent of the world's oil supply, that it is using 68 per cent of production all the time, and that eventually we will run out of oil if we limit it to the United States?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I hope to touch on that subject of conservation later, as I believe it is the most important phase of this problem. What the gentleman says is true; but if he will pardon me, I will not take that phase of the subject up at this time.

The gentleman has suggested that the tariff experts have stated that this item will raise no revenue. I do not make that statement. This item is now in the bill, and I want to give you my idea of what it means and what it will accomplish.

I followed the public proceedings of the Ways and Means Committee. Wirt Franklin, representing these independents, appeared before the committee very properly and made a splendid presentation of his case. The tax which he suggested to the committee was 2 cents a gallon on crude oil, 2 cents on fuel oil, and 4 cents on gasoline, but the evidence from the opponents of that measure was conclusively to the effect that such rates would constitute a practic 1 embargo, and that no revenue would be received. Later the committee, as I understand it, submitted to the Treasury, for a report from its experts, the proposition of 1 cent on crude oil, 1 cent on fuel oil, and 2 cents on gasoline. If I am correct, the experts of the Treasury Department again reported that there would be no revenue expected from this 1 cent on crude oil, 1 cent on fuel oil, and 2 cents on gasoline.

I read from the Journal of Commerce of New York City, of February 23, 1932, quoting what purports to be the report of the Treasury officials. This says:

In the opinion of experts of the Department of Commerce such a tax (1 cent and 2 cents per gallon imported oil) would yield no revenue, since the levy would be added to the import price exceeds the margin of advantage under which oil is imported into this country, and would therefore exclude the products affected.

I ask you to note this: That a tariff of 1 cent on crude oil would produce no revenue; a tariff of 1 cent on fuel oil would produce no revenue; and a tax of 2 cents on gasoline would produce no revenue.

Later the committee submitted to the Treasury experts a new proposition, and that is the one which is included in this bill. That is 1 cent on crude oil, 1 cent on fuel oil, and 1 cent on gasoline. According to the exhibit which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Treadway] introduced Friday, on page 5978 of the Record, this new proposition was submitted to the Treasury, and the Treasury makes no estimate of revenue. The committee has an estimate of $5,000,000.

It is apparent, at least to me, that that estimate was arrived at in this way: Last year we imported into this country 13,000,000 barrels of gasoline; 42 gallons in a barrel would be 546,000,000 gallons of gasoline, and at 1 cent you would have your five million and some-odd thousand dollars.

I ask you members of the committee this: If this is a revenue bill and if there is no revenue to be received from 1 cent on crude oil and 1 cent on fuel oil and the only revenue is to be derived from gasoline, why include in this revenue bill items covering both crude and fuel oil?

Of course, I should like to see this item of fuel oil dropped from this general item. You gentlemen know that this tax is not a tax on the country at large but is a tax on a special section of the country. Ninety-nine per cent of all the imports of crude and refined products of petroleum come to the Atlantic seaboard and are consumed there, and none of them goes into the interior.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Yes.
Mr. McKEOWN. The gentleman is aware of the fact that the whole of New England uses only 3,000,000 barrels of fuel oil, which is less than the amount used in any other part of the country except the South and the Mountain States.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I will now refer once more to a statement made by a member of the committee last Friday in regard to the arguments of the opponents of this measure. The gentleman used these words—a rather categorical statement:

The exaggerated statements of additional cost to the eastern coast, running as high as $100,000,000, are ridiculous and can not be borne out by any authoritative evidence that can be submitted to this House.

The gentleman, of course, knows that in all contracts held by present purchasers in New England with foreign importers the companies insert a clause, which has been accepted by the buyers, that, in the event of a tariff duty, the same will have to be met by the purchaser. Doubtless these contracts are the same along the entire Atlantic seaboard. This territory now consumes 180,000,000 barrels of fuel oil per year. An increase of 42 cents per barrel would amount to $75,600,000. In case no oil was imported and there was no increase in price and the eastern consumer obtained his oil from domestic sources, the average freight rates from various domestic points exceed those from Venezuela by from 40 to 60 cents, an increased cost of from $72,000,000 to $108,000,000. This does not take into account the $6,000,000 to $7,000,000 increase in cost of asphalt, the loss of 40,000,000 barrels of bunker-oil exports, the loss of foreign exports of petroleum and its derivatives, the injury to our shipping and ports, or the probable increase of 1 or 2 cents per gallon in the price of gasoline on the Atlantic coast. The estimate of $100,000,000 loss is too conservative rather than too high.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield on that?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Is it not true that the argument which the gentleman is making might be applied to any schedule of the tariff, if separately considered?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Let me say to my friend that not every article or commodity is a proper subject for a tariff, and that I believe that oil is an article that should always be on the free list. This is not my judgment alone, but such has been the judgment of economists of the past. Such has been the judgment of all the Ways and Means Committees of both parties, and such has been the judgment of the great conservationists of the country and of those officers of the Government charged with this great public responsibility.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Is it not a fact that the Ways and Means Committee in the first session of the Congress after Mr. Harding was inaugurated President passed on the matter and put a tariff on oil and it was later taken out at the request of the President?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. That is not a matter with which I am familiar. If the gentleman says that is true, I would be very glad to accept it as a fact.

At this point allow me to enlarge somewhat on the various losses, already referred to, which the enactment of this tariff threatens:

SHIPPING

Section 313 of the tariff act of 1930 provides for a drawback or refund of duties paid on imported merchandise upon the exportation of articles manufactured therefrom. This tax on oil is a tariff measure but does not enjoy the benefits of the existing tariff law. There is no drawback allowed here for exported fuel oil derived from imported crude. Every country in western Europe that imposes a tariff on fuel oil allows the oil to enter in bond and pay no duty when used for bunkering ships. In 1930 we delivered to foreign-bound steamships over 51,431,499 barrels of bunker fuel oil. To all intents and purposes this was exported. With no drawback of duty on fuel oil produced from imported crude, American shipping will be seriously handicapped. It is asserted that the effect of this provision would be completely to offset the aid extended to American shipping by the recent merchant marine act. This tax on foreign fuel oil promises to transfer to foreign ports the bunkering business of the eastern seaboard, amounting to approximately 40,000,000 barrels per year. An item in the financial news of a reliable New York paper states that it will destroy a business of 20,000,000 barrels annually from that one port alone.

As regards coastwise shipping, the present price of bunker fuel is about 60 cents on the Atlantic coast. This measure would increase the cost of fuel oil 70 per cent. It is doubtful if many of the shipping companies could absorb this increased operating cost and remain solvent. The fishing boats of Massachusetts alone consume 25,000,000 gallons of oil of such quality that the California oil alone could meet their requirements.

How can it profit the oil industry of the United States to lose the export of over 50,000,000 barrels of fuel oil annually as bunker fuel in foreign-bound vessels?

As an illustration of the damage which will be wrought to the business of the ports along the Atlantic seaboard, let me refer to conditions at some of the New England ports.

The following table shows in short tons the volume of foreign petroleum and petroleum products received at the ports of Portland, Boston, Fall River, and Providence during the years 1929 and 1930, and the percentage relationship of such oil imports to the total foreign imports received at each port named during the years 1929 and 1930:

	1929		1930
Port	Tons	Percentage of total imports	Tons	Percentage of total imports
Portland	75, 544 918, 557 807, 757 473, 073	Per cent 10½ 28 99½ 73	108, 515 751, 068 819, 864 545, 112	Per cent 13 26 99. 9 71

EXPORT TRADE

The second largest item in our rapidly diminishing foreign trade last year was that of petroleum and its derivatives, amounting to approximately $270,000,000, against imports valued at $93,000,000. Every year we export of petroleum and its products far more than we import. In 1927 this excess, in round numbers, was 69,000,000 barrels; in 1928, 62,000,000 barrels; in 1929, 54,000,000 barrels; and in 1930, 50,000,000 barrels.

Much of our exports are refined products representing a great value. The following figures represent the value of our exports and imports for the past three years:

1929:
Exports	$562, 373, 366
Imports	145, 447, 979
1930:
Exports	495, 451, 835
Imports	146, 457, 393
1931:
Exports	271, 402, 575
Imports	93, 896, 395

This tariff threatens to destroy the petroleum-export business of the United States. Deprived of this market, the Venezuelan producers will naturally turn to the markets to which we have formerly exported our products and will supplant American goods in those countries. Heretofore Venezuelan producers have cooperated with domestic producers in their efforts at proration. Last year, where American production was reduced 5½ per cent, Venezuelan production was reduced 28 per cent. The imposition of this tariff will destroy this mutual effort at conservation and leave the South American producer free to increase his production and fight for the foreign markets which were formerly ours.

ASPHALT

Venezuelan crude is run for fuel oil and asphalt; American crude, for gasoline and lubricating, and so forth. A first-class, hard-surfaced country road will take 200 tons of asphalt per mile. Asphalt has sold this year at $9 and $9.50 per ton f. o. b. refinery. Ninety-three per cent of all asphalt used in the East and 54 per cent of all asphalt used in the United States is produced at Atlantic and Gulf refineries from the heavy imported crude oils. Under the proposed tax this asphalt-base crude oil would pay a tax of 42 cents per barrel. It takes 10 barrels of crude to produce a ton of asphalt. If the domestic price of asphalt were increased in proportion to the tax, the extra cost of asphalt would be $4.20 per ton, and the cost of hard-surface roads would be increased $840 per mile. Appropriations for future road building would have to be increased or the mileage materially reduced. This would be a severe blow to the construction of country roads, so much needed. This tax on foreign asphalt crudes might well close the Atlantic asphalt refineries and force the East to obtain its asphalt from California at probable higher prices and higher costs of transportation.

The release of the Department of Commerce at Washington, dated May 15, 1931, and entitled "Reduced Asphalt Demand Met by Lower Refinery Output," shows that in 1930 54.8 per cent of all asphalt manufactured in the United States was made from foreign crude. It shows the following production by districts:

East coast	ction, 1930
Appalachian	44, 805
Indiana-Illinois	485, 891
Oklahoma-Kansas-Missouri	29, 743
Texas:
Gulf coast	210, 305
Rest of State	239
Louisiana-Arkansas:
Louisiana Gulf coast	312,065
Northern Louisiana and Arkansas	99, 360
Rocky Mountain	7, 522
California	629, 548
Grand total	3 326 378

Foreign crudes were used in the manufacture in the east coast, Gulf coast, and the Louisiana Gulf coast production.

The greater proportion therefore of the American production of asphalt from American crude was in California. The supply of heavy crude oil in California is limited.

Probably nowhere in the United States could there be secured the 16,000,000 barrels of asphalt required each year for road-building purposes in the eastern seaboard States, except at a prohibitive price.

GASOLINE

Sixteen to twenty per cent of all the gasoline used on the lantic seaboard is imported or derived from imported crude. Such importations enable the people of the East to purchase gasoline at prices comparable to those prevailing near the production and refineries of the Midwest.

Gasoline prices follow the price of crude. The Federal Trade Commission, in its report of 1928, page 3, states:

Gasoline prices were promptly advanced throughout the country whenever there was an advance in crude prices.

And on page 175 it is again stated:

As a rule, price advances in crude petroleum have been followed promptly by gasoline price increases.

It was testified before the Senate committee last year that in general there has been an advance of 1 cent a gallon in the price of gasoline for every advance of 25 cents a barrel in the price of crude. Past experience in the industry shows that an increase of 42 cents per barrel in the cost of crude oil would be followed by an increase of from 1 to 2 cents per gallon in the price of gasoline.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Now, I will revert to the question asked me by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Hastings]. He asked me why, if no revenue is to be derived from the bill, I complained.

Assuming, if you can, that the tax will have no effect on domestic prices of fuel oil, yet the ultimate consumer on the Atlantic seaboard may no longer avail himself of his natural advantage of cheap water transportation from South American ports, but must get his fuel oil by tank car or pipe line from the Southwestern States or California at an increase in transportation rates, which these industries can not absorb, which the pipe lines do not need, and which are of no benefit to the producers of petroleum.

According to the recent report of the Tariff Commission, the average transportation costs of a barrel of oil to the Atlantic coast for the years 1927-1930 were as follows:

From Venezuela	$0.248
Average all domestic sources	. 8131
From California (1927–1929)	. 643
From Oklahoma (1930)	. 8466

If foreign oil is excluded by this act and there is no increase in price by domestic producers, then the consumers on the Atlantic seaboard will be penalized the extra cost of transportation, running from 40 to 60 cents per barrel, thus practically doubling their fuel bill, with the money going to the transportation companies and benefiting the oil industry in no way.

It has been suggested here that the eastern seaboard consumers might secure their fuel oil from west Texas crude at a cost of $1.15 per barrel, viz, $1 refining cost and 15 cents cost of transportation. That is, if the west Texas producer would forego his profit and sell to us at cost, and transportation figures continued at 15 cents, instead of the 77-cent average for 1927–1930, we could secure our fuel oil at twice its present cost, an increase that would ruin our industries already operating in the red.

Moreover, an attempt on the part of the oil industry in the mid-continental fields to supply the eastern seaboard fuel-oil requirements would demolish the industry's price structure throughout the United States. Neither should California deplete its reserves of gas and fuel oil upon which the industrial life of the Pacific coast depends for its continued existence. In 1930, the latest figures available, there were produced in California 114,700,000 barrels of gas and fuel oil and there were consumed in the Pacific coast area 114,060,000 barrels. The imports to supply the fuel oil and asphalt requirements of the East are a benefit rather than a detriment to the oil industry of the United States.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman says it will cost 81 cents to get oil from the mid-continent field?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. It is not a question of what "the gentleman says," these are computations taken from the figures that were submitted to this Congress in the report of the Tariff Commission.

Mr. HASTINGS. Very well. The gentleman says that it costs 24 cents a barrel to get the oil from Venezuela. This tax is 1 cent a gallon, which would be 42 cents, and 42 and 24 make 66 cents. So, according to the gentleman's statement, he can get it cheaper from the mid-continent.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I do not understand the gentleman's reasoning. Did not the gentleman from Oklahoma suggest on the floor of the House that the requirements of the Atlantic seaboard might be filled by oil from the west Texas field, delivered at a cost of $1.15—$1 for refining and 15 cents for transportation?

Mr. HASTINGS. I think the gentleman must be mistaken.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Does the gentleman say that that was not in the matter that he put into the RECORD?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not recall any such figures at all. All the figures I put in were mine, and I stand by them. I am sure if the gentleman looks up the RECORD he will find that he is mistaken about those figures.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I want to say that the Atlantic coast can not economically use fuel oil from domestic sources. Each one of these mid-continental fields—mid-continental field, the California field—each have their own zones of service. Neither the California field nor the Texas field can produce fuel oil for use on the Atlantic coast without producing a great quantity of gasoline, and absolutely demoralizing the price structure of the whole petroleum industry in the United States.

Let me state here the reasons why I do not believe this tariff on oil will be of any considerable benefit to the independent producer.

DOMINATION OF OIL INDUSTRY BY LARGE INTEGRATED COMPANIES— ITS EFFECTS

The oil industry of the United States falls naturally into two distinct branches, each covering a specific field: (1) The production branch, having to do with exploration, development, and production of crude petroleum; and (2) the utilization branch, which concerns itself with the transportation, refining, storage, and marketing of the derivative products.

The great bulk of the crude oil produced in this country passes out of the ownership of the thousands who produce it into the ownership of a few hundred refiners. The cost of the raw material to the refiner is the sale price to the producer. Each desires to secure the greatest possible profits. Between the two branches an economic struggle is inevitable. Such an economic struggle, unequal and destructive, is now going on; and, together with disorganized, unrelated, and scattered production, is largely responsible for the ills of the independent producers. No tariff, import duty, or excise tax can restore right economic conditions, or, if restored, preserve them against the uneconomic and unfair practices of the great integrated companies.

In 1911 the Supreme Court of the United States dissolved the Standard Oil holdings into 34 separate units. To-day there is a domination of the oil industry as complete, unfair, and destructive as ever it was in the past, and it will take something more than a cent a gallon on the imports to the Atlantic seaboard to remedy these fundamental economic conditions.

Less than 100 large integrated companies absolutely dominate the industry and control the price of both crude oil and refined products. This domination is exercised through a firm hold on the transportation, refining, storage, and marketing facilities. Out of the thousands of oil companies in the United States you can select 10 of the so-called Standard companies and 10 of the great integrated non-Standard companies and those 20 companies will represent 80 per cent of the total capitalization of the oil industry ($12,000,000,-000), produce practically one-half (48 per cent) of the total crude-oil production, own 90 per cent of the pipe lines, transport practically all of the oil, possess 73 per cent of the crude-refining capacity, and, what is still more vital, 93 per cent of the cracking capacity, own practically all of the 700,000,000-barrel storage capacity of the country and probably 85 per cent of the retail-distribution facilities. The remaining 20 per cent of the industry, producing 52 per cent of the crude oil, is made up of thousands of companies, organizations, and individuals; and it is these independent producers who are getting much the worse of this economic struggle.

Where in a given field the great integrated organization, through affiliated companies, owns the pipe line, the refinery on the pipe line, and the purchasing company, the unfortunate producers have but one means of transportation, the company's pipe line; but one consignee, the company's refinery; and but one purchaser, the organization's purchasing company. Having no storage capacity, but one means of transportation, one consignee, and one purchaser, the producer is obliged to accept the price posted by the purchasing company, however low it may be. There is no other purchaser and no other price.

These great integrated companies controlling production, transportation, refining, and storage can make their profits in any one of these divisions, and in that one which will most injure its competitor. For instance, the Humble Oil & Refining Co. in three years down in Texas, fighting the independents, lost $20,000,000—that is, the oil company lost $20,000,000—while the Humble Pipe Line Co. in that same period made $79,000,000. It cost something to put the independents out of business, but the combination had a net profit of $59,000,000.

The Independent Monthly, issued by the Petroleum Association of America, in its issue of July-August, 1931, gives the following illustration of the way in which the great integrated companies throttle the independents:

The posted price for crude oil is reduced at the well through what is known as the "service-charge system," brought to Texas by the Prairie Oil & Gas Co. and the Prairie Pipe Line Co., both Standard subsidiaries. Under this system a Texas subsidiary corporation purchases oil at the price posted by it at the well, transports it to tidewater, and there sells it to another subsidiary on the following basis, assuming, for example, the case of oil produced to-day in west Texas and transported to tidewater, the world market:

Posted price for 41° oil July 10, 1931, to producer Gathering charge, Humble tariff No. 43 (to pipe line), parent corporation Trunk-line charge to tidewater (to pipe line), to pare	12½ ent
Ship-loading charge (to pipe line), to parent corporation	40
Total at tidewater pumped aboard ship Service charge, or premium, to parent corporation	65 20
Base price on tidewater	85

In this set-up the parent corporation—the Texas subsidiary—receives 11 cents per barrel in transportation profit of the owned pipe line through ownership of pipe-line company stock, and 20 cents per barrel through buying and selling oil, or a total of 31 cents per barrel net profit on oil purchased for just 10 cents per barrel. This is to-day's frightful condition.

Under this system, before the costs of refining begin, we have a total net profit to the integrated companies of 84 cents per barrel on every barrel of oil that nets the producer but 10 cents, as follows:

Pipe-line earnings, per barrelService charge, or premium	$0.11 .20
Average reduction in posted prices	. 53
Total profit per barrel	.84

How can a tax of 1 cent a gallon on imported crude remedy in any substantial manner this condition in Texas, which is typical of general conditions throughout the oil industry?

Apparently there is still plenty of money being made in the oil business as a whole, even in these times of deep depression. According to Mr. Franklin, no independent company was able to pay dividends last year, yet the dividends of the Standard Oil group increased steadily from $200,000,000 in 1926 to $286,000,000 in 1930.

Meantime the pipe lines of the great integrated companies were doing a rather good business. I quote from an article on Control of Texas Oil By Transportation, by Harry Pennington, in the July-August, 1931, issue of the Independent Petroleum Association of America Monthly:

The Interstate Commerce Commission has compiled its statement No. 3,170 from sworn reports of common-carrier pipe lines for year 1930, and the following is copied from the statement, with prices taken from the Oil and Gas Journal:

Name of pipe-line company	Barrels of crude oil transported	Net income as reported	Divi- dends declared for 1930
Humble Pipe Line Co	172, 385, 186 97, 734, 137 77, 016, 459 30, 224, 892 42, 689, 125 15, 294, 741	$18, 816, 057 10, 536, 479 10, 346, 992 3, 435, 396 9, 626, 402 1, 099, 061	Per cent 40 46 1338 400 93, 4 • 100

The foregoing earnings accrued to the parent corporation through ownership of the pipe-line company's stock.

On a per barrel basis of net earnings we have:

Net	profit
per	barrel
Humble Pipe Line Co	$0.11
Magnolia Pipe Line Co	. 11
Gulf Pipe Line Co	. 13
Gulf Pipe Line Co. of Oklahoma	. 11
Texas Pipe Line Co	. 22
Texas Pipe Line Co., Oklahoma	.07
An average for the whole of	. 12

The Stanlin Pipe Line, said to be owned by the Standard of Indiana, paid 61.54 per cent.

Amend the interstate commerce act so as to apply to pipe lines the same prohibition against hauling its own products as now applies to railroads. Divorce transportation from production and you will have done far more for the independent producers than any tariff act can ever do. In private conversation the honest independent oil man will admit this statement to be true. A bill to accomplish the purpose is already before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

MONOPOLY AND UNEQUAL AND UNEQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION OF PROFITS |

In February, 1931, Charles E. Bowles, statistician for the Independent Petroleum Association, in support of a proposed measure for the divorcing of the pipe lines from production, gave some very interesting figures before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The total assets of the petroleum industry are $12,000,-000,000, distributed as follows:

	Invested	Proportion received
Production Transportation Refining Marketing	$6, 000, 000, 000 1 1, 500, 000, 000 1 2, 500, 000, 000 1 2, 500, 000, 000 1 2, 000, 000, 000	$1, 101, 000, 000 346, 000, 000 593, 000, 000 3, 084, 000, 000 2 450, 000, 000
The consumers paid		5, 574, 000, 000

These figures might indicate that when the public are paying five and a half billion dollars for the derivatives of a raw product that netted the producers but a little over $1,000,000,000, and which required comparatively little processing, they are paying a price that equitably distributed throughout the industry would be adequate for both the production and the utilization ends of the business.

Alfred M. Landon, chairman of Kansas delegation of the Governors' Oil Relief Conference, Independence, Ohio:

"To-day the greatest danger facing the oil industry is not from without but from within-and that danger is the elimination of competition through integration which is only a gentle-sounding phrase under which monopoly mas-

An excise tax will not do away with the domination of the business by the great integrated companies. These great combinations will still hold their transportation, refining, marketing, and storage facilities, and with them the power to oppress the independent producer, and the power to fix prices of both crude and derivatives, in spite of economic laws, in spite of any tariff of 1 cent a gallon on imported products. If there is any money to be made by this tariff, it will be these great integrated companies that will make it and not the independents.

Last year the Capper bill, providing for an embargo on import of oil, came before the Senate. Senator Ashurst, of Arizona, opposed it in the following words (Congressional Record, March 2, 1931, pp. 6722, 6723):

"We are asked, in behalf of the Sinclairs and Dohenys, to put an embargo upon the importation of oil.

"Mr. President, there is a larger question here than the mere question of serving the oil interests and the Dohenys and the Sinclairs of this country. Are we going to levy a tax, already too heavy, upon every person who uses an automobile, upon every farmer who has a motor upon his farm, in order to swell the profits already great of the oil industry?" profits, already great, of the oil industry?

If the result of an excise tax is to increase prices of crude and gasoline, then the immediate beneficiaries of the law will be the great integrated companies who control the storage capacity of the country, and who will at once benefit to the extent of the 612,176,000 barrels of oil in storage in October, 1931, and the 43,000,000 barrels of gasoline stated by Wirt Franklin to be in stock at the present time. Pass this tariff item and you are taxing your manufacturers, your public utilities, your shipping, your home owners, your automobiles, not in the interests of the small producer, but in the interests of the great monopolies already bloated with excessive profits.

OVERPRODUCTION

There is another evil inherent in the industry itself which no excise tax can ever reach. A recent issue of the Oil and Gas Journal points out that the principal reason for the turmoil of last year was the terrific volume of "overhanging potential" crude-oil production. When the year opened there was already a large overproduction of oil, and east Texas loomed like an approaching tornado on the horizon. The hearings before this committee last year revealed the fact-since corroborated by others-that the potential capacity of the wells now drilled is from five to eight times the manufacturers of New England and other sections to consumptive needs, yet 18,955 producing wells were completed in 1926, 14,571 in 1927, 12,492 in 1928, 15,509 in 1929, and 11,558 in 1930. Thousands of these wells were opened up long after the industry found itself in distress from overproduction. Secretary Wilbur, in a recent article, stated: The present glut of oil will be looked back upon by our descendants with incredulity and with resentment." There is no suggestion of an oversupply in sight. Our reserves, measured against our assured future demands, are far from imposing. We have not found too much oil, but we are producing to-morrow's oil to-day.

Mr. Wirt Franklin, the oil expert who appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means in behalf of the independent producers in whose interest this tax is asked, making a fine distinction in words, claimed that there has been no overproduction; that the wells have been throttled down; that proration has been practiced by both domestic and foreign producers; that in 1930 domestic production plus all foreign importations failed to meet our consumptive needs by 23,000,000 barrels; and that in 1931 domestic production and foreign imports failed to meet our consumptive demands by 45,000,000 barrels; that thus it was necessary to withdraw 68,000,000 barrels from storage to meet the deficit during those two years.

Assuming these statements and these figures to be correct, then if there were no overhanging potential, if economic laws were allowed to work and were not set at naught by the domination of the great integrated companies, the price of oil during those years when production failed to meet consumption should have risen. There was that overhanging potential. There was an arbitrary domination of prices of both crude and derivatives by the great companies, and while the Standard group paid dividends of $286,000,000 in 1930 and the pipe lines paid dividends ranging from 40 to 400 per cent, the price of oil to the independent producer went steadily down.

With a potential production in the United States from five to eight times consumptive requirements, available at any time by simply turning the valves of the pinched-in wellskept off the market only by proration and martial law-an artificial rise in prices through this tax would in the end hopelessly complicate the industry's real problem, that of controlling overproduction.

ATTEMPT TO FORCE AMERICAN PEOPLE TO PAY FOR PETROLEUM PROD-UCTS THE COST OF THE MOST INEFFICIENT AND EXPENSIVE PRODUC-

Of the 330,000 producing wells in the United States, Mr. Franklin states that approximately 300,000 produce an average of one and one-half barrels per day by pumping, some of which are in Pennsylvania, 40 years old. The world and the oil industry have moved forward in 40 years. In the great economic advance made possible by scientific inventions, improved methods and technical processes, individuals must inevitably suffer that the race may go forward.

When asked by Mr. Rainey as to the cost of a barrel of oil, Mr. Franklin states that the Tariff Commission found that cost to be $1.09 per barrel. This cost includes interest on the investment at 6 per cent and depreciation. The figures of the commission, as this committee knows, were derived from the combined cost of all wells, of which 300,000 out of the 330,000 were these small high-cost pumping wells, producing an average of a barrel and a half a day. They represent the most inefficient and expensive production. The output of one Oklahoma gusher alone would be equivalent to thousands of these small wells in the old mid-continental fields. The free-flowing wells of east Texas alone have reached a production per day greater by 100,000 barrels than the daily average of these 300,000 high-cost wells combined. If the American consumer is to be charged at the rate of $1.09 cost for oil for all time, if the high-cost well is to fix the price, then you are setting back the hands of time some 40 years and you are adopting for the oil industry the suicidal policy formerly practiced by the coal industry of making the consumer pay the excessive price at which the highcost coal mine could operate at a profit, a policy that drove substitute for the high-cost coal the cheap fuel oil of Mexico | Nelson]. If it had not been for the experience of the last and later, Venezuela.

The American petroleum industry has never supplied the fuel-oil requirements of the eastern seaboard consumers nor is this a case where foreign oil has displaced that of domestic production.

If it is true, as claimed by the oil people, that our supply of oil is inexhaustible and that there are vast fields as yet unexplored, then this policy is indefensible. If our supply is limited, and may fail national needs, then the importation of fuel oil for the needs of the Atlantic seaboard, practically the only part of the country unsupplied, is but a wise conservation measure.

The people of my State are ready and willing to bear their equitable share of the Federal taxes necessary to balance the National Budget, but they do not deem it fair that, in addition to the general tax of 21/4 per cent assessed against the country as a whole, a special tax of 70 per cent should be laid upon a particular section of the country by thus taxing a commodity that enters so importantly into the agriculture, the industry, the shipping, and the daily lives of the people of that section. Give us a tax bill that shall at least lay its burdens equally upon every part of the country.

CONSERVATION

The conservation side of this problem should not be minimized. With perhaps 18 per cent of the world's known supply, we have been producing from two-thirds to seventenths of the total world output of crude petroleum for the past 15 years. The inadequacy of our American reserves has impressed itself on all responsible public officials. Conjectural and high-cost sources offer little of promise.

Looking for ways and means to conserve our national supply of oil, Congress provided for the creation of a Federal Oil Conservation Board, appointed by President Coolidge. In 1926 this board considered the matter of reserves and made several reports to the President of the United States. It recommended that American companies should acquire and vigorously explore the oil fields of Mexico and South America, that we might not become dependent upon foreign-controlled sources for our oil supply.

The Venezuelan crude now being imported comes largely from American operators who were encouraged and assisted by the Government to explore and develop these resources. May there not be at least some implied obligation on the part of this Government to deal fairly and consistently with these American investors?

In its report to the President of January, 1928, the board further states:

According to the present opinion of our best petroleum geologists, our total resources instead of being 68 per cent of those of the world are not more than 18 per cent. * * * If the interthe world are not more than 18 per cent. * * * If the international comparison is made, this country is depleting its supply several times faster than the rest of the world. depletion rate of our own resources can be brought more into accord with that of foreign resources only in one way * * * by importing a greater quantity of crude petroleum. * * *
Cooperation in the development of foreign oil fields, through technical assistance and further investment of American capital, would seem to be a logical conservation measure.

In its last report, that for 1930, the board most properly

Oil is an irreplaceable natural product and the oil resources of the country are limited. Increased production is not an index of the remaining resources but a record of depletion and a warning of impaired reserves. * * * Even the most generous warning of impaired reserves. Even the most generous estimates place the date at which our oil reserves will be practically depleted, under present rates of consumption, in the comparatively near future. In the interests of national defense and industrial prosperity this generation should not be permitted to waste this irreplaceable natural product and thus seriously handicap future generations of Americans.

[Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Hoch].

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, I had not expected to speak this afternoon, but I can not resist the opportunity to say a few words in answer to the free-trade argument of the distinguished Republican from the great State of Maine [Mr. it by law, I have seen them even in the State of Oklahoma session, I would never have thought that I would ever find it necessary to come to the defense of one gentleman from the great section of New England who had spoken broadly in defense of the policy of protection, and defend him from attacks made by his colleague from the State of Blaine, of Reed, and of Dingley.

Mrs. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HOCH. I am very glad to yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts, although I am a bit uncertain as to whether she desires to defend her colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], who spoke in behalf of protection. or to join in the attack upon him.

Mrs. ROGERS. I just wanted to ask the gentleman's opinion. Does he think that New England has ever asked for protection of any industry that would mean the destruction or the hampering of another industry? We have asked for protection and not for destruction. It seems to me that this is destruction.

Mr. HOCH. No one is here proposing a policy of destruction. We seek to save a great independent domestic industry from destruction. I hold in my hand the tariff act of 1930, and if I were to read the items of the tariff act in which New England is directly concerned I would use the rest of the afternoon. I refer to items as to which it has sent its representatives to Washington time and time again in behalf of the policy of protection. I am surprised to find that the great State of Maine sends a distinguished gentleman here who would raise his voice in behalf of those who have always made the same argument which he makes now against the policy of protection. If I had the time to read a large part of this tariff act-

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Put them in the RECORD.

Mr. HOCH. I would read a large part of the act representing the successful efforts of New England industry to get protection for themselves. Not only have they succeeded in getting written into the tariff act all of the items that I could read—covering textiles, cotton, and woolen goods, shoes, fisheries, hundreds of other items including potatoes, which I gladly helped my friend from Maine [Mr. Nelson], who has just spoken, get protection on at the last session—but I call attention to a bill which the gentleman himself introduced at this session, which is entitled, "A bill for the conservation of lobsters, to regulate interstate transportation of lobsters, and for other purposes."

They now seek protection for their lobsters and ask an embargo.

I read from section 3 of that bill, recalling that the gentleman talked something about an embargo:

The importation into the United States, or any Territory or District thereof, of any lobster less than  $3\frac{1}{2}$  inches in length, measured from the rear of the eye socket along a line parallel to the center line of the body shell to the rear end of the body shell, or any lobster meat frozen, chilled, cooked, or in the raw state, unless hermetically sealed-

And so forth, is hereby prohibited.

The gentleman not only wants to hold on to protection on all of the industries in which his State is interested and to get further protective tariff on wood pulp and print paper. but now sounds a battle cry of embargo to protect the Maine

The gentleman speaks about an oil lobby. I can imagine with what pious fervor the manufacturers in New England hold up their hands in holy horror when they think about anybody down in Washington lobbying for a tariff on oil. It is true that there have been men here seeking to get protection for oil, and I say to you that they came out of a distressed condition as great or greater than ever confronted the State of the gentleman who has just spoken to you.

I come from a section that has many oil wells. I have seen not only the large producers, but the small men, the little producers, forced to the wall. I have seen them put into effect measures to protect their industry, and I speak advisedly, more than any industry I know of has done in America, to set their house in order. I have seen them do do it almost at the point of the bayonet, seeking to find some means of saving from destruction those that were hit by this situation. I have seen them hold down their own domestic production, enforce it by State law, and yet I have seen that effort to conserve and save their own industry thwarted by a few great oil companies who are concerned with bringing in foreign oil to destroy the American independent producers. The gentleman talks about the increased price that they will pay for fuel oil. Let me predict to the gentleman from Maine and to other gentlemen who are here opposing this item that if you permit these few concerns which are interested in the importation of foreign oil produced by cheap foreign labor to have their way, they will in a comparatively short time have absolute control of the oil industry of the United States. Then let us see, after they have throttled the independent producers, what the manufacturing plants of New England will pay for their fuel oil. And what consumers of gasoline will pay for gasoline.

I say to you that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY! who lifted his voice the other day in behalf of a fair deal for other industries who were seeking the same protection which you have sought and have secured for, lo, these many years, and which we of the Middle West have gladly helped to give you, was speaking for the interests of New England. He was speaking for New England interests not simply for to-day, but he was speaking for the interests of New England to-morrow.

I do not say it as a warning, but I say it as a fact, if you of New England can afford to come here and sacrifice the policy of protection when our industry is prostrate, we can get along without the policy of protection if you can do so. I bid them to think well before, at the behest of a handful of manufacturers of New England, disregarding the policy upon which New England has grown and prospered for these many years, they surrender such a policy. I say to you that in the long run New England will suffer more, in my judgment, from a betrayal of that policy than any other section of the country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas five additional minutes.

Mr. HOCH. Now, there has been talk about conservation. One of the great papers of Washington, the Washington Post, had a very powerful editorial the other day in behalf of conservation, in opposition to the oil tariff, and yet I think it was in Saturday's paper they had another equally powerful editorial calling attention to the exports of oil and saying, "Look at our vast exportations of oil which will be destroyed if we have an import duty on oil."

In other words, we can send out of the country all the refined products of oil in the shape of gasoline and yet remain true to this policy of conservation that is talked about so much. If we need to conserve oil for American use, what logic is there in worrying for fear our great exportations of oil products will be decreased? Does this vast exporting mean conservation for America?

Let me call the attention of New England to another matter, in their own interest.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a word?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. Can the gentleman make it a little broader than New England? New England is tired of having to assume this whole burden when it comes to tariff matters. The gentleman should broaden the term and include all manufacturing sections of the country.

Mr. HOCH. Apparently the others have been able to get New England to lead the fight. Apparently they prefer that the attack that may result be centered upon New England rather than upon them, and I do not blame the gentleman from Massachusetts for seeking to avoid the consequences of the position which he has taken.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HOCH. I yield.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I wanted to suggest the gentleman broaden the term to apply to the fellows who are free traders on raw material.

Mr. HOCH. Yes; but I can not now take any further time on that I want to call attention to another matter. I trust they will pardon a westerner for suggesting another phase. A month or so ago the State of Maine-or New England, I guess it was-sent a lot of manufacturers, boosters for business, out through the Middle West. They came there to promote the sale of New England products. The first thing they ran into in that great oil country was that it was prostrate; not only the producers of oil but the little farmers who were drawing a small income out of the production of this oil; and they found there was no buying power for the manufacturers of New England. They began to send some wires back to New England Members: "What is the matter with you people back there? They tell us out in Kansas and in Texas and Oklahoma that they can not buy the products of our industries because you have led the fight to destroy the industry which gives them a large part of their buying power."

I ask you from New England whether you can afford, in your own interest, simply because, as you conceive it, some of your people would be hurt by a tariff upon fuel oil, to help destroy the buying power of the great Middle West upon which you must depend for your markets when it comes to all of these other manufactures?

I ask the shoe people of Massachusetts, "Are you here protesting against protection to our industry?" I ask the textile industry of the State of Massachusetts, "Are you here objecting to our effort to get the same sort of protection which you have had?" I say to all these industries of New England, "Consider well whether you can afford in your own interest to lend yourself to helping destroy an industry which has been one of the great industries of this country, whose people are suffering as much as any people in this country because of this condition, an industry which, as I say, has done more than any other industry to save itself."

I challenge anyone to show me an industry which has imposed upon itself as much a measure of conservation, as much a measure of limitation of production as the oil industry. Show me where there is any industry in America which has done as much in its own right and by its own effort to meet this problem as the oil industry before it came to Washington for help. Show me one. I say to you-in all the category of these industries that have received protection-you can not show me one that has imposed upon itself the restrictions which the oil industry has imposed upon itself in an effort to meet this situation.

Mrs. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS. Is it true that the people of the midcontinent area have sent telegrams saying that they would boycott the New England industries if their Members voted against a tariff on oil?

Mr. HOCH. I do not think they have. I will say, however, that I know of scarcely anything that might offer greater temptation to people to indulge in that kind of practice. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to ask the gentleman if he realizes that probably these people from New England-and I would like the gentleman to broaden it in order to take in the whole coast line-will vote for this bill even if they do not favor this matter of oil? Will Kansas and Oklahoma vote for this bill? According to newspaper reports, I do not think so. But I am asking: Will you vote for this manufacturers' tax in this bill if you do not obtain this tariff on oil?

Mr. HOCH. We do not put a tariff on oil as the price of any attitude we take. [Applause.] We will seek, I will say to the gentleman, to pass on this tax bill on its merits as a whole when it comes before us, and I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will not determine his course solely upon the ground that it contains a little bit of help for the oil industry. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. I am for the bill, even if the tariff on oil is imposed, and that seems to be the attitude of Members from the Atlantic seaboard States in contrast to those from the oil States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SANDERS].

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I intended to discuss at this time this revenue bill generally; but, since events have come about to change the thing a little bit, I am going to talk particularly on the oil question.

The gentleman from Kansas struck a very responsive chord in my heart in his speech, because when our good friend the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Nelson] was before our committee-and I do not criticize him for coming before the committee-he made an able argument, but while he was there it might be refreshing to you to know that I read to him a little dispatch that appeared in the paper that day. It reads this way:

Special train of manufacturers from Maine are in Topeka, Kans... to-day, and are going to Oklahoma and Texas boosting their products and seeking to find outlets for their goods. They will be in Ponca City, Okla., Oklahoma City, Fort Worth, Houston, and San Antonio, Tex. They were in Kansas City yesterday.

At the time I read that to the gentleman I told him that unless we got a little help on this oil situation he might as well wire his folks to go back home, because there was no use in going to a billy goat's house for milk; that if those in that section of the country could not get some help they were wasting their time in going down there and trying to sell their products.

The truth of this matter was brought out in the discussion of this bill, and I am going to refer to it. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY]-and I have always thought well of Mr. BEEDY, but when he made a speech the other day, a purely partisan speech, I did not think quite so well of him. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts took care of him pretty well. Listen to this. Mr. BEEDY, when Mr. TREADWAY was speaking, said:

I was rather surprised to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts discussing this tax bill as a protective measure. I myself have never been able to object to protection where I thought it was needed, but it did seem to me a most strange procedure for the party in control of this House, which did not dare tackle an item in the tariff bill.

And so forth. Here was Mr. TREADWAY'S reply. Mr. BEEDY. Will not the gentleman finish that, please?

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. I will finish it, but I will say that the gentleman is the only Member of this House who has been unkind enough to say that this was a partisan bill. I will come back and finish that in a minute. I will say this now: That the Ways and Means Committee, composed of 15 Democrats and 10 Republicans, did not act in a partisan way. If any member of that committee will rise up and tell me that there was one partisan vote cast in that committee I will quit speaking now. I defy anybody to do Yet Mr. BEEDY, in another place in his speech, said that 15 Democrats could outvote 10 Republicans. Thank God, we have 25 men on that committee who, in framing this bill, have tried to put their country above their party, and it applies to everyone. But I will finish this if the gentleman thinks the Members will not look it up in the RECORD and read it.

Which did not dare tackle an item in the tariff bill, to put itself in the position of making an exception in one instance and giving what is clearly protection to one product and denying others of us the opportunity to have the same protection.

I am glad the gentleman asked me about that. The gentleman says we denied that opportunity to him, but I want to say to him that we did not deny him the right of going before the committee and advocating a tariff or tax, whatever you want to call it, on pulp. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. Nelson] came before the committee and made his statement, and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] had the same opportunity and the truth is that any Member of Congress or any witness could appear before the com-

I want to say that as a Democrat I believe in a tariff for revenue. If you can bring out a bill and show me where you can bring revenue into the Treasury of this country, I, as a Democrat who believes in a tariff for revenue, will be glad to support it. If you can present such a bill to me I will vote with you, and I will not be so provincial as to say I will not support you because it is not for my section.

Now, I want to get to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]. Mr. TREADWAY gave an answer that I had intended to come to later:

Mr. TREADWAY. Let me say two things. In the first place, it was a compromise as to amount. The gentlemen advocating a tax on oil wanted 2 cents. They accepted a compromise of 1 cent.

Mr. Beedy. But what about the principle?

Mr. Treadway. The principle is a principle that I have personally always advocated in this House—that we can not build a wall of protection around New England and not give it to anybody else.

This is the thought of a statesman and a patriot. That is one great trouble we have in the United States to-day. With all due respect to the New England States-and the gentleman from Kansas has mentioned this-they have had protection all around, but they have embodied in their life and in their legislative proceedings a principle of the old fellow who fell down on his knees and said, "O God, have mercy on me and my wife and my son, John, and his wifeon us four and no more."

And I say to you, that the time is coming when the South and the West may form a coalition, and unless all parts of the country are treated equally, you are not going to see the smoke curling up from your factories, but some folks are going to fold up their tents like the Arabs and as silently steal away. That is what is coming in this country and they seem to be distressed. The question has been asked and they can not understand why a committee composed of 15 Democrats and 10 Republicans would bring in what some of them call a protective tariff on oil.

Now, I am going to try to be fair in my discussion. In the first place, this is not a protective tariff, but let us suppose it is. Let us grant that these fellows who came in there and opposed it were right when they said it is a protective tariff on oil. Now, who is it that is doing this? My good friend, Mr. Nelson, and my friend, Mr. Beedy. All right; can you reconcile a Republican being against a protective tariff? I can not understand that. Right here is the platform; they have been pulling platforms here and I am going to pull the Democratic platform a little later on, but let us get their platform first. Here is their platform for 1928:

We reaffirm our belief in the protective tariff as a fundamental and essential principle of the economic life of this Nation.

If that is a principle, then I say to you that principles are immutable and as unchangeable as God Almighty. If it is a principle, and if it is right here on the floor of this House. then it is right whether it is in a revenue bill or a tariff bill or in any other kind of bill. If it is right to-day here on the Potomac then it is right in any State of the Union, and yet here are two men standing up here against it because it is a protective tariff.

Mrs. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Yes: I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS. Is not this the first time that a tariff has ever been asked on a natural resource?

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. I will be pleased to say to the lady that I do not know whether it is the first time or not, and yet I do know that after Mr. Harding was inaugurated President of the United States the Ways and Means Committee considered a tariff on oil and they put it there, and it was later taken out at the suggestion of the President of the United States

Mr. ARENTZ and Mr. FINLEY rose.

Mr. ARENTZ. It is well to bear in mind that we have a | multiply and add, they can tell whether it will produce any tariff on manganese, lead, zinc, and on a great number of other natural resources.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Surely. That answers the lady's inquiry.

Mr. FINLEY. Does the gentleman know that up until 1913 there was a tariff of 45 cents to 67 cents a ton on soft

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. That was taken off by the Wilson tariff and has not been put back.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. I am thankful to all of you for helping me to answer the lady's question.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BEEDY. I think the gentleman misunderstood my statement. If he will read the brief speech which I made on Friday he will see that I stated clearly that I favored protection wherever it can be shown that it is needed, and I did not say I was against this bill or against this item, but I did object to the fact, as my colleague has so well put it to-day, that one industry got in the back door and got this protection on an internal revenue bill and the rest of us were left out, and I submit that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Nelson], who has addressed the House, if figures and facts can prove anything has proven that the facts do not justify the action taken by the committee.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. I believe the gentleman thinks that; but has the gentleman ever read the testimony of Wirt Franklin before the committee?

Mr. BEEDY. No; I have not.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. The gentleman has not read that. Then the gentleman should inform himself before he begins to discuss this matter. There is another thing I am going to ask the gentleman. If we were considering a tariff bill now, and if this item were in the tariff bill and a motion was made to strike it out, would the gentleman vote to strike it out?

Mr. BEEDY. I certainly would.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. The gentleman certainly would. Mr. BEEDY. Because I do not think the facts which have been given here this afternoon, which I believe are unanswerable, would justify a motion to strike it out.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. I am sure the gentleman thinks that; but there are others who think differently.

Mr. BEEDY. And I respect their opinion.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. And I respect the gentleman's opinion, but I want to suggest that he read Mr. Franklin's testimony. Now, let us get a little farther along. I want to dismiss that question.

Here is an editorial that appeared in the Boston Transcript of Monday, March 7, 1932, and I want to read a paragraph from this editorial:

A drive for duties on petroleum and its products probably has been halted by the imposition of a tax of 1 cent a gallon on imported gasoline, oil, fuel and crude oil.

This is less than the American producers wanted and more than the importers felt they ought to pay, but it is not heavy enough to crush any industry.

My friends, it is not heavy enough to crush any industry; neither will it oppress any American citizens. Now, you talk about conservation, but first I want to give you some figures.

They say it will not produce any revenue. Well, when a man stands up and tells me that the electric lights are not shining above, I can not agree with him. When a man makes a statement to me that is against things I know, I can not agree with him. Now, I am going to ask you why it will not produce any revenue; and I am going to get the Democratic platform out because there are some of my friends over here who are shying around it like a country mule at a town-show tent, for fear they are going to vote for a tariff.

Here are the facts and figures. Listen; anybody can get these figures from the Commerce Reports; and if they can revenue.

Crude petroleum imported into the United States in 1930 amounted to 62,129,419 barrels. They say there are 42 gallons to a barrel. That would make 2,609,435,598 gallons. Now, that was imported into this country, and you can not deny that. It is like Will Rogers when he was asked how old he was and if he was born, and he said, "Yes; I am here." Franklin, in making his argument, advocated 2 cents a gallon. Multiply it by 2, and you will find it produces $52,188,711.96.

Fuel oil was brought in here the same year amounting to 26,080,383 barrels, which would amount to 1.095,375,986 gallons, and multiplied by 2 cents a gallon, would produce $21,907,519.72.

Now, of gasoline there was brought in 16,926,800 barrels. That would amount to 710,925,600 gallons, which, at 4 cents a gallon, would be $28,437,024.

Of lubricating oil there was brought in 24,728 barrels, which would amount to 984,576 gallons. At 4 cents that would amount to $37,943.04, and the total amount would be $102,571,198.72.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. As I understand the gentleman, he does not agree with the experts from the Treasury Denartment?

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. I can answer that yes and no, because they have been on both sides of the creek. I will admit that Mr. Mills stated that it would not produce any revenue. If you are importing something, you can take a lead pencil and state whether it will produce revenue. Now, I have the figures here of the collections under this bill. It will produce something over $58,000,000. If you will read the testimony before our committee and the evidence submitted on this, you will come to the conclusion, I believe fairly, that it will produce not less than $40,000,000 of revenue.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman give us the total, the aggregate of the sums that he says will be produced by the importations?

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. I have already given it, but I will give it again-$102,571,198.72.

I want to be fair-you take one-half of that, and you can trim it down, yes, to one-third, and figure it any way, and it will produce a revenue of $40,000,000.

Now, my friends, I want to say something to you as an American citizen. I do not like to read so much when I am talking. I hope that every Member of Congress will take the time to read the testimony of Wirt Franklin. He is an authority on oil, and I want to read you something he said. You talk of conservation. I say that outside of any revenue it might cost you in New England and up along the Atlantic seaboard, you better pay it. The testimony is that all of the nations that have a monopoly on oil are paying 35 to 38 cents a gallon for gasoline, and just as certain as we are here to-day that monopoly is being fastened on the people of the United States, and unless they get some relief in this bill the independents are going down, because they can not survive. You folks who are paying a little now and objecting to this will be paying a sight more if you do not agree to this. Listen to the plight of the independents. I read now from the Wall Street Journal of Saturday a week ago.

The Barnsdall Corporation, in 1931, lost $3,268,937, and that is one of the biggest independent oil companies in the United States. From the same paper I notice that the Coast Richfield Oil Co. in 1931 lost $3,632,913. These are the independents. They can not stand. Let me show you how this trust and monopoly is fastening its fangs on the American people. I read now from page 930 of the testimony:

The dividends of the Standard oil group from 1912 to 1930, inclusive, were $4,019,929,872. For the last five years they have increased steadily, right through the period of depression, when a considerable portion of the industry was going into bankruptcy, and there have been thousands of them that have been closed out because this help has been so long delayed. To give the dividends of the Standard group only in round figures, in 1926 they were $200,000,000; in 1927, $213,000,000; in 1928, $218,000,000; in 1929, $269,000,000; and in 1930, $286,000,000—the biggest dividends in all history, right during this period of distress.

Let me make this statement, and it ought to come close to the heart of every Member of the House and the Senate, because of its vital interest to the people of the United States, on a matter of conservation. This was news to me. I am going to read it to you out of the hearings. It was not disputed, and while I am on that point, let me tell you that one man who came up there and appeared for the big oil companies importing this oil, impoverishing the people of the United States, throwing 300,000 people out of employment, made the statement, when I asked him to put the figures into the RECORD as to how many natives were employed in Venezuela and how many Americans, that he could not tell. When Mr. Flemming was before the committee he said that they employed 1 American down there to 100

In the United States there are approximately 300,000 wells which produce an average of a barrel and a half a day each by pumping, some of which are, in Pennsylvania, 40 years old; but in the aggregate those wells produce 500,000 barrels a day, day in and day out. As a matter of fact, those wells are the backbone of the percentage industry in the United States but because of of the petroleum industry in the United States, but because of the low prices for the product during the last three years, thou-sands of those wells have been abandoned and plugged and lost

Now, let me visualize what that means. On these leases from one to three families live. The head of the family is the pumper, who takes care of these wells and operates them. The machinery is already established there: it has been bought and paid for. The investment in those wells runs into billions of dollars, and the labor employed is enormous. They pump every day, and they must be pumped every day, because practically all of them make some salt water, and if the salt water is not pumped off every day it destroys the wells.

Suppose this legislation fails, and the independents are put out of business, because these people can not survive. According to this testimony the salt water would go into the wells and the United States would lose 500,000 barrels of oil a day. That is a matter of conservation that ought to appeal to the patriotism of everybody in this country, irrespective of taxes or tariff. I read further:

Now, back of those 300,000 wells, the petroleum engineers estimate that there are anywhere from two to four billion barrels of reserves which would be produced over the next 30 or 35 years by the steady process of pumping these wells, giving employment to thousands of men supporting thousands of families on these leases, and if the wells are abandoned, as they must be eventually unless this condition is remedied, we have lost forever all that employment for these American citizens, and we have lost those res of from two to four billion barrels of oil, because after being abandoned, you could never afford to drill new wells for that sized wells and equip them with pump power, engines, and so forth, and operate them.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HOCH. From the conservation standpoint I am sure the gentleman is absolutely right with reference to thousands of wells in the part of the country that I represent. Those small wells will produce a small amount of oil, and if they are not pumped the salt water will get into them and you will not only lose the wells but the field goes. The expense of exploring the field has been taken out in the flush production, and no one is going in to drill wells in a field where the wells will produce so small an amount as many of those wells produce to-day, and those millions of barrels of oil which will be saved if we keep on pumping will be lost if the owners are compelled to shut down.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. The gentleman is correct. They are not only lost, but they are lost forever, and the United States is deprived of their value. Mr. NELSON of Maine. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Did the gentleman read the hearings and the testimony of the Acting Director of the Bureau of Mines on the oil tariff before the Commerce Committee of the Senate, when he stated that ofttimes these wells yielded more than they did before they shut them down?

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. No. I did not read that testimony. Does the gentleman mean after they shut them down?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. As the gentleman from Kansas said, nobody is going in and go to the expense of drilling again, so it means it is lost forever.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman permit me in his time to say that of the 330,000 oil wells in the United States, 300,000 of them produce on an average only 4.7 barrels?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SANDERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Hastings] think the American public ought to be charged for a barrel of oil, the average cost of which is this high cost which the gentleman mentioned, where they only pump a barrel and a half a day, when there are wells in the gentleman's section which gush thousands of barrels a day, and where down in east Texas they can produce more by a hundred thousand barrels than the 300,000 wells com-

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman is addressing his question to me. As long as those wells are already drilled and as long as they are connected with pumps, with many wells on one pump, they can continue to pump, but once stopped, they can never be reopened.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Is it not true that they are the most inefficient and highest cost wells in the country?

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, no. Oil was selling at $1.45 three years ago and it ran down to 10 or 15 cents last August.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I can not yield further. My time is running on. I want to call attention to another man who testified before the committee. Many Members get up here and talk about the Ways and Means Committee like they were a set of pickpockets. There is a drainage bill pending; there is the soldiers' bonus bill, and we are going to pay somebody else something. How are we going to get along if we do not vote to put some money in the Treasury? We can not get along by just paying out and not collecting anything.

Now, I want to call attention to another man who testified, representing the American Federation of Labor. This oil problem embraces the destinies of over 22,000,000 who are directly interested in it. It is the third largest industry of the world, and you can not cripple it. You can not give it the "cold shoulder" any further in the Congress of the United States without hurting your country. I say this irrespective of the tariff tax, or whatever you call it.

This man is Mr. Harvey P. Fremming, who represents the American Federation of Labor, the American Wage Earners' Protective Association, the Brotherhood of Signalmen, the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way, the Brotherhood of Firemen and Enginemen, the Brotherhood of Engineers, the Order of Railway Conductors, the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. It might be that you would like to look up his testimony, which begins at page 1123 of the hearings.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas five additional minutes.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. In the first place he goes on to say there are approximately 350,000 people out of employment on account of the distressed condition in the petroleum industry at this time. He is the man that I asked how they were paying down in Venezuela and other places, where they claimed they were employing American labor. This is the man who testified that they employ 1 American to 100 natives.

I have here a telegram which I would like you to listen to. This is dated February 3, 1932:

Drilling operations, South America: Driller, American, $300 Drilling operations, South America: Driller, American, $300 a month; all others are natives. Cap-head man, $2.58 per day. Derrick man, $2.24. Floor men, $1.53. Production department: 1 American to practically 100 natives. Head well driller, $3.40 a day; all others, including pumpers, $1.53 a day. Refinery department same as production. Rig builder, $3.40 a day down to $1.53. All native figures quoted in American money. Information obtained from superintendent just returned from South America.

J. C. COULTER.

Another thing I want to mention. They say this is a protective tariff. At least the Republicans say that. If it is, they should be for it in all good conscience. I want to say | that now of all times in the history of this Government men ought not to make partisan speeches on the floor of this House. [Applause.]

I was not a Member of Congress during the World War, but it was one of the glories of that time, as I have always understood, that Democrats and Republicans alike stood up for their country. "Peace hath her victories, no less renowned than those of war." Certainly as we are here, we are facing a crisis that is comparable to the World War, if not worse. No; we should not have any partisan speeches, but, according to the testimony and figures given by the Commerce Department, the people in Venezuela and other South American countries and other places can produce oil and place it any place on the Atlantic seaboard for $1.03 a barrel cheaper than you can take it from any field in the United States and put it in the same place. They gave out two sets of figures. In the first set they said the difference was $1.19. In the second set they said the difference was $1.03. All right. If you put 1 cent a gallon on fuel oil, it means 42 cents a barrel. I want to ask you then how that is an embargo. When they have $1.03 advantage. paying a tax of 42 cents, which it would amount to on a barrel, and subtracting that from the $1.03 leaves 61 cents. You can see just how much advantage the foreigner has over the United States.

Assaults upon the excise tax upon foreign oil and foreign gasoline have been so exaggerated and so utterly unfounded that they would not merit any serious reply if it were not for the danger that some may actually credit the baseless figure offered. For instance, one gentleman in a formal statement charged that these proposed oil taxes would cost the people of New England $100,000,000. He probably relied upon the interested propaganda of the enemies of the American petroleum industry and did not analyze the available data, thus adding one more to the number of those who have been deliberately misled on a question of national importance. If this absurd claim were true, it would mean that levying a 1-cent tax per gallon on crude oil would cause New England to pay an increased cost of $33.33 on each 42-gallon barrel of crude oil which it consumes. According to the United States Bureau of Mines, New England in 1930 used 20,618,218 barrels of fuel oil. Only 15 per cent of this was foreign oil. That means that New England used just 3,000,000 barrels of foreign fuel oil in the latest year reported by the Bureau of Mines.

Therefore, if New England is going to have an increased cost of $100,000,000 because of this levy of 1 cent per gallon on foreign fuel oil, of which she uses only 3,000,000 barrels per year, each barrel would carry an increased charge of $33.33. Even if all the 20,618,218 barrels of fuel oil used by New England in 1930 paid the excise tax of 42 centswhich is palpably impossible—the increased cost to New England would still be $90,000,000 less than the pure fiction figure given by the enemies of the American petroleum industry and accepted as fact by the misguided gentleman who made it public.

This is just a sample of the sort of arguments which the foreign oil importers are shrewdly scattering over the country in the hope of preventing the passage of this provision in the revenue bill.

It is curious that New England has apparently assumed the rôle of leadership in the fight against the foreign oil tax. New England is a comparatively small user of fuel oil. The six States comprising this section of the country use only 5.35 per cent of the total consumption of fuel oil in the Nation.

The Pacific coast consumes 27.28 per cent. The south-central section consumes 22.87 per cent. These sections of the country are almost a unit in supporting the excise tax on foreign oil. All together they use more than one-half of the total consumption of the Nation. New England, with a little over 5 per cent of this consumption, is protesting with a vigor whose justification is hard to find. Only the Rocky section, using 2.70 per cent of the national total, rank below New England in the list of the fuel-oil consumption. These two sections are not manufacturing sections; hence, their low consumption totals.

The New England protest seems to be based very largely upon the strange assumption that New England factories are practically the sole consumers of fuel oil in that section. They ignore the fact that factories come rather far down in the list of fuel-oil users. Among the principal consumers of fuel oil are the railroads of the country, which in 1930 used 67,900,035 barrels. Incidentally the railroads generally are most ardently in favor of this legislation. They are taking no active part in the fight, since most railroad heads realize the inexpediency of railroads entering political contests to-day.

The general prostration of American business, which had as one of its causes the comparative ruin of the American petroleum industry and the loss of the purchasing power of many of the 22,000,000 persons resident in the oilproducing States, seriously affected the railroads by wiping out a tremendous amount of its most profitable freight movement. The railroads of the Nation use over three times as much fuel oil as all of New England, even if we do include in the New England figures the amounts used by the railroads in that section and by others who are utterly unrelated to the manufacturers and industries who are opposing this measure. The Army and Navy use millions of barrels of fuel oil yearly. Oil companies themselves use 53,436,945 barrels of fuel oil per year, or two and one-half times as much as all New England, including New England's railroads and the Army and Navy bases in New England used in that year.

Evidence has been presented repeatedly to the House as well as to the Ways and Means Committee that very large sums of revenue may be raised by an excise tax on foreign oil and foreign gasoline without any necessary increase in price to the consumer and without constituting any embargo on foreign oil or even causing any decreased shipments merely because of this very slight levy. The arguments offered against the measure when analyzed are a great deal like that one to which I referred in the beginning in which the preposterous claim is made that a tax of 42 cents per barrel on fuel oil would make the New England consumer pay an additional $33.33 for that same barrel.

Such arguments belong in the realm of pure imagination. They can not be reached by plain, cold facts. Brought into contact with the chill atmosphere of official statistics they curl up and die. Unfortunately, the interested opponents of this tax, the importers of foreign oil, are unusually fertile and as rapidly as their swollen statistics are exploded they produce new ones equally exaggerated and equally difficult to treat on the serious plane of calm discussion. Without any personalities and without intending any reflections upon anyone and especially not upon those who are the innocent victims of a shrewd propaganda, may I be permitted the hackneyed quotation, "Figures won't lie, but liars can figure "?

Prosperity is not around the corner, but on the threshold if the movement of the stock market reported by the Wall Street Journal is any criterion. The action of the House Ways and Means Committee, including in the new revenue bill an excise tax on fuel oil is quite justified by the effect this has had upon securities, even though the measure has not yet been brought to a vote in Congress.

The traffic jam which has held all business at a standstill seems ready to be broken if this upward movement of oil stocks has any significance, which it surely must have.

The proposed excise tax is sufficiently low to not exclude foreign oil upon which it will constitute a very inconsiderable levy, but on the other hand it does afford encouragement to the prostrate American petroleum industry and promise better times. From the revenue standpoint this tax is one of the wisest we have suggested since even in the unlikely event that the importation of foreign oil should Mountain States, using 1.31 per cent, and the South Atlantic | be decreased, because of this very light tax, both Federal and State Governments will receive compensatory revenues from the revival of the American industry and the renewed employment of armies of oil workers now idle.

The statements of the Wall Street Journal on this very timely stock movement are worth quoting. In a special article in the issue of Wednesday, March 9, they remark:

Oil securities in Tuesday's trading reflected the better sentiment which has lately developed toward this group. One reason advanced for the more optimistic attitude, beyond the continued control over crude oil output and a better tendency in refining activities, is the proposed excise tax of 1 cent a gallon on imported oils, which has been approved by the House Ways and Means Committee. A considerable portion of the industry looks for final adoption of the impost, which they believe will have a beneficial effect, at least, temporarily.

While in their feature entitled, "Abreast of the Market," they call attention to the fact that "oils were active and strong on expectations of enactment of a 1-cent levy a gallon on imported crude, gasoline, and fuel oil."

Tax bills rarely promote prosperity, but at least one portion of this new revenue bill, the excise oil tax, seems certain to surpass the most sanguine expectations in producing much-needed revenue for the Federal Government and at the same time stimulating a basic industry whose downfall was intimately related to the current depression, since even the intimation of governmental favor starts a bull movement in the stock market. This confirms the statements made at the Ways and Means Committee hearings that the oil industry would lead in the return of prosperity whenever that happened.

This excise tax is not a tariff or embargo. It is a tariff for revenue, and it will bring a large amount of revenue into this Government if we give it a chance.

Mr. Chairman, my time is up, and I want to thank the committee for its indulgence. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Parsons]. [Applause.]

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, it is rather embarrassing, in a way, for me to rise to speak in opposition to the manufacturers' tax contained in this bill, but I would not be consistent with my feelings and belief if I did not take advantage of the opportunity to-day to make some observations concerning the so-called sales tax.

The grizzly haired veteran from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], who is a veteran of a thousand battles on the floor of this House and who is a member of the committee, has gone through these fights unscathed and undimmed for 30 years, almost a third of a century, until this hour.

It is not pleasant to oppose the acting chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Georgia, who is following so well in the footsteps of his illustrious father, but there do come times when we can differ among ourselves and yet show that love and respect which should grace us on occasions like these. What I shall say this afternoon will not be any personal criticism of the members of the committee.

I have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion on oil. While I doubt the wisdom of placing a tariff bill in this particular revenue act, I for one am willing to support the gentlemen in their contention for a tariff on oil.

I happen to be one of those who believe in the old fundamental principle of a tariff to equalize the cost of production at home and abroad. It is very apparent that the oil industry needs some protection at this time.

Whose "baby" is this part of the revenue bill known as the sales tax? I have asked that question a number of times. Has it been proposed by the President of the United States? Has it been proposed by the Secretary of the Treasury? Has it been proposed by the Democratic Party? I have asked in vain. I have failed to get an answer. If any gentlemen on that side of the aisle can speak for the powers that be, I will yield time now for them to tell me where they stand upon this proposition.

No farther back than 1924 the Democratic Party went on record as opposed to a sales tax, but I remember that last fall the then Secretary of the Treasury announced that we should have a general tax upon every product, so that when the American people paid it they would become tax conscious and understand they were paying a tax to support their Government. I want to say to you this afternoon that the people of America are already tax conscious. The local and city taxes, the road taxes, the school taxes, the State taxes, the county taxes, and the tariff tax which they are paying in tribute to the protected industries of this country, which in the past 12 years have increased more than 300 per cent, have made the American people tax conscious. We do not need this sales tax to bring the people to a realization that they are paying taxes. Let us hope that Mr. Mellon, when he appears before the Court of St. James, will remind Johnnie Bull to become tax conscious and pay us the $159,000,000 England owes us. It will help to balance the Budget.

The big cry on this proposition is to balance the Budget. In the years of 1918 and 1919 the Federal Government expended \$32,743,000,000. In those same two years we had revenues of \$8,834,000,000. There was a deficit for those two years of \$23,909,000,000. How did we balance the Budget then? By the issuance of bonds—Liberty bonds bearing from  $3\frac{1}{2}$  to  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, and most of them were floated on the basis of  $3\frac{1}{2}$  and 4 per cent. Are our people less patriotic to-day then they were in 1918 and 1919?

But how are we balancing the Budget now? On June 30 of last year we had a deficit of $903,000,000. There is supposed to be a deficit on June 30, 1932, of $2,123,000,000; and how are we balancing the Budget? By issuing bonds, of course. If we can float $3,000,000,000 now to balance the Budget for this year, who will say that the little sum of $600,000,000 can not be floated July 1, 1933?

On June 30, 1919, our debt was $25,482,000,000. To-day it is about $17,000,000,000. If we balance the Budget with the flotation of bonds, as I have indicated here, our public debt on June 30, 1933, will be $4,856,000,000 less than it was in 1919.

Where is the patriotism of our financiers? If Government bonds were good securities in 1919; if they were good securities in 1929; if they are good securities now, when we are floating bonds to balance the Budget, why will they not be good securities on June 30, 1933?

It was brought out on the floor of the House here last week that the Secretary of the Treasury made a trip to New York and came back and reported that there would be no bonds offered for sale until the buyers knew whether or not this tax bill had some opportunity of passing. This, my friends, is an absolute threat to the Government of the United States. It is a threat to the Congress of the United States to say, "We will not buy the bonds unless you pass this tax bill."

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Huddleston] in a very eloquent appeal the other day talked about the farmers' group, about the oil group, and about the veterans' group. My friends, back in 1917-18, when the call went out to mobilize the greatest Army that America had ever assembled, almost 5,000,000 in number, if 1,000 of those boys-yea, if a single one of them had offered any resistance to the call that went out, he would have been summoned before a court martial and sentenced to death: and here in the year 1932, with a little deficit threatened of only $600,000,000, we have the spectacle of the money interests of this country hanging a threat over the heads of the Members of Congress and over the heads of the American people to fasten upon them an iniquitous sales tax in order to make up a deficit on account of funds that they, the moneyed interests, have borrowed out of the Treasury of the United States.

Where were the proponents of this measure when the moratorium was under discussion here back in December? This was a nice little sum of $252,000,000, or a little more than one-third the amount of the deficit. I remember when it was brought in here with a united effort on both sides of this aisle, without very much time for debate, telling us that we must pass it and rush it along, because the time was soon up when these nations would otherwise default and that we must give them another year, and what is 1 year means 2 years and perhaps 3 years or 5 years or 10 years in the payment of their debt. The same forces come in here now and undertake to saddle the $252,000,000 this year and $252,000,000 next year upon the backs of the farmers and the laboring classes of this country in the form of a manufacturers' tax.

This is the most un-American tax that has ever been proposed by the Ways and Means Committee.

Where were the great industrialists and the great financiers when we had under discussion the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill? It provided an immediate appropriation of $500,000,000, with power to float a billion and a half dollars in bonds, direct obligations of the Federal Government, whose life is to be one year, and may be extended by the President for two years, every dollar of which, if it is to be used at all, must be used in the next two years. Where were the proponents of this measure then? Not a word was said about balancing the Budget.

The Federal land bank bill carried an appropriation of $125,000,000, $100,000,000 of which was for the bondholders and the other $25,000,000 to pay the costs on land suits that had already been begun, to be later charged to the farmers' installments, and to this very hour not one dime of that has gone out to the farmers in any reserve district in this country.

Talk about balancing the Budget. Why did we not talk about balancing it then? We have appropriated more than $1,000,000,000 without having said one word about balancing the Budget until now; and now we propose to come in here and raise $600,000,000, the principal part of which will be paid by those that earn less than $1,500 a year.

The gentleman from Alabama made reference the other day to the demagogue club. You know, some people believe that if you vote for a high, prohibitive tariff, if you vote bounties and subsidies to the great manufacturing interests, to the railroads, to the insurance companies, or to the banking interests, or if you make loans out of the Public Treasury for these beneficent institutions, it is great statesmanship; but if you rise in your place and undertake to defend the people whom you represent, you are called a demagogue.

My friends, if it is demagogy to stand up for the rights of the people you serve, if to stand up for the farming interests and for the labor interests—if that is demagogy, I am pleased to be placed in that class. [Applause.]

Now, let us see something about our taxes. We have an excise tax placed upon luxuries. They are exempt under this proposition from any further taxation, and I think that may be right. We have a tariff tax, which is nothing but a sales tax in principle, which is always passed on to the consumer.

If the tax is not too high, and it permits imports, the Government gets the revenue. If the tax is too high, and it shuts the door to the importer, the Government loses the revenue and the manufacturer gets the tariff tax, but nevertheless the consumer pays it.

We have an income tax as the one great source of revenue. Here is the principle of the income tax: It proposes to place upon those, not so much those who are able to pay, but it places the tax upon those who receive the greatest amount of protection from the Government, and are taxed in proportion to the protection which the Government gives them.

The rates are to be raised in this bill to bring in about $225,000,000 additional revenue.

They come here with the report that 40 per cent is about as high as you can go in income and surtax rates, because if you go higher it will drive business out, and people will not undertake to accumulate the funds whereby they may have a profit out of which to pay an income tax.

I rather think that after all 40 per cent is about all they feel they can pass on to the consumer, and if you raise the tax any higher it will come out of their profit and not out of the consumer.

Of course, those who are on a salary have to pay the tax, for there is no way to pass it on. Those engaged in business, however, those who own stock in corporations, out of which their private incomes are realized, gage the prices to produce the revenue, and those taxes are passed on to the consumer wherever possible.

I repeat again, that the proposed 40 per cent is about as much as they can pass on to the consumer, and therefore they do not like to have the rate raised any higher. I would go at least to 60 per cent in the higher brackets, where the rates were during the war.

The sales tax, or manufacturers' tax, is the opposite of an income tax. It proposes, in principle, to tax those, not in proportion to the protection that the Government gives them, but it proposes to tax them in proportion to the protection that they give the Government. That is the difference between an income tax and a manufacturers' tax. [Applause.]

The sections in this bill exclusive of the sales tax propose to balance the Budget, with the exception of about $600.000.000. In 1930 there were 6,152 people who had an income of $100,000 or more with total earnings amounting to $1,556,000,000. If they spent all of their earnings upon which the sales tax is levied, they would contribute to the sales tax about $35,000,000. To go further, in 1929 there were 736,357 persons who had an income of $5,000 or more and whose total earnings were $10,198,000,000. If they spent all their earnings, their tax would amount to $229,455,000. If they did not spend but one-fourth of their income, about the average amount for living expenses, this group would contribute about $57,000,000, and that is only one-tenth of the amount proposed to be raised. That leaves nine-tenths of the taxes to be raised on other people with earnings less than $5,000.

In other words, one-tenth of this tax is to be raised out of the $10,000,000,000,000 of those earning the highest salaries and the other nine-tenths is to be paid by those whose salaries range less than $5,000 a year, and most of them in the $1,200 class. Let us see how this tax works. It proposes to levy 2¼ per cent. The manufacturer, in sending his invoice, including his profit, for $100 worth of goods, will add on the bill $2.25. The wholesaler, receiving an invoice for $102.25, will invoice to his jobber after adding 15 per cent profit to the amount of $117.59. He in turn invoices it to the retailer with 15 per cent profit added, at $135.25, and the retailer, who sells to the consumer, will add a profit of 30 per cent, so that the total retail price will be $175.80.

Without the pyramiding of the tax, the consumer's price on that invoice would be $171.92. The tax of the consumer, then, instead of being 2½ per cent is 3.88 per cent. In other words, the tax will range from 2½ per cent to 10 per cent, depending upon the percentages of profits. But to break it up and bring it down to the items sold in the grocery and drug and other stores, an item which sells for 5 cents will have added to it by the retailer, to provide for the 2½ per cent tax, 1 cent making the price of the article 6 cents. That makes the consumer pay tax at the rate of 20 per cent. If the article sells for 18 cents, the retailer will say that he has a tax to pay, and instead of adding 1 cent, he will make it even money and charge 20 cents. In that case the consumer will pay a tax of 11 per cent.

I want now to read a few extracts as to how the industries and the consumers feel this will affect them. Speaking of the sales tax one man said:

It will slow down business, and if they attempt to make the manufacturers pay this tax, they will find it the finest weapon they could have selected to kill all business and to bring this panic to a complete success in the cessation of every line of industry or endeavor.

Another one says in this morning's mail:

The proposed manufacturers' tax will prove to be not economic medicine but economic deadly poison.

Another says, and this is from the producers' packing industry:

Therefore, it becomes apparent that unless lard, sausage, cooked meats, and canned meats are exempt from the proposed tax, the growers of hogs of this country will receive approximately $10,000,000 less for their hogs and cattle than they would if the foregoing products were exempted.

There you have it. With a tax to be raised of $600,000,000, two-thirds of the total amount will be deducted from the producer, from the farmer, from the orchards, from the cotton grower, and all the rest, which will average $400,-000,000. Therefore the total tax extracted, instead of being $600,000,000, will be a cold billion dollars. When you add to that the excess profits which the retailer will add because of the manufacturers' tax, the consuming public in America will pay about $1,800,000,000. While the Government gets $600,000,000, the other $1,200,000,000 will go to the retailer, the jobber, and the wholesaler through the reduction on price of raw materials and excess profits on retail sales.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARSONS. Yes.

Mr. FIESINGER. As I understand it, at the end of the fiscal year 1933 there will be a deficit of about $3,500,000,000?

Mr. PARSONS. That is including all of last year and this year.

Mr. FIESINGER. As I understand, up to and including the fiscal year 1930 the Government paid off some $3,496,579,492 under the act passed in 1923 to provide for a sinking fund.

Mr. PARSONS. Yes; those are funded from time to time.
Mr. FIESINGER. Every year so much is paid off on those bonds.

Mr. PARSONS. Yes.

Mr. FIESINGER. As I understand the gentleman, if we take into consideration the payments of bonds provided for by the act of 1923 and did not provide the sum to be raised by the sales tax, the Government would not be behind at the end of the fiscal year 1933 in our debt-payment requirements of the act of 1923.

Mr. PARSONS. If the gentleman will pardon me, I can not yield further, as my time is limited. In order to bring this down to how it operates upon the farmer and upon the laboring man, let us take a concrete case and see how the tax will apply, and if it is once adopted, as has been prophesied here on the floor of the House, I think we will never get rid of it. Let us say that two children in the same community discover America. Their names are John and Susan. At the time of that discovery they are wrapped in swaddling clothes that are taxed with a sales tax. A few weeks of age, when the father has to carry them across the floor in the colicky hours of their growth, we find there is a tax upon the paragoric that is administered to them. They grow up and go to school, where they sit at desks that are taxed, and their pens and pencils and ink and paper are taxed. The only thing not taxed in that schoolroom is the bare textbooks. If in the library there are placed books for the perusal of those children, and if in the hours in the evening they seek, by the side of their fathers and mothers, to find out something about the outside world, they are still taxed if they purchase one of those books. Their shoes and their stockings, their buckets and dinner pails-every item they use and wear is taxed. When they sit down to eat at the table at night, every item of food that is sold in air-tight containers or in canned form is taxed.

They go on through childhood and grow up, and John and Susan decide to get married. After the marriage ceremony they decide to build a home, and on the lumber that goes into the house every stick is taxed. The nails are taxed. All the carpenter tools and instruments are taxed. The paint that goes on the outside of this structure is taxed. When they begin to furnish the house, the beds and bedding, the dressers and bureaus, glasses, chairs, tables, cabinets, stove, dishes, everything, including the kitchen utensils, are all taxed. But John and Susan work hard and pay the tax and get along. John goes out to farm. On all the harness he buys he must pay a tax. Every piece of farm machinery is taxed—the binder, the mower, the hayrake, the harrow, the cultivator.

So it goes on, year after year, year after year, according to the prophecy that has been made here that the sales tax has come to stay. Toiling, rejoicing, sorrowing, "Onward through life John goes, each morning sees some task begun, each evening sees it close; something attempted, something done, he has earned a night's repose," until at last he is gathered to his Father. The embalmer is called, and with taxed instruments he forces the taxed embalming fluid into his veins. The mother and children go down to select some of the things to put John away, and upon every stitch of clothing, upon the casket, and even upon the flowers that are furnished for the funeral a tax is paid.

The next morning, having placed John in his casket, bedecked with taxed flowers, they place him in a taxed hearse, and he starts on his last journey to the little church in the wildwood and there, on a taxed instrument, they play soft music, while the procession files into the church house. Thank God, on the things inside of the church, with the exception of the instrument, there is no tax.

And while the pastor waxes warm on the good deeds John has done and the good life he has lived, they are busy in the cemetery, with taxed pick and shovel and spade, preparing the grave for John. He is carried there and laid in his last resting place.

A few months later a taxed monument is raised to his memory, and on it is inscribed these lines:

Born on this earth was one John Brown; his lot, like ours, was up and down.

In duties he was never lax; his bane in life was heavy tax,

In duties he was never lax; his bane in life was heavy tax, From swaddling clothes of babes in arms to all that goes to make life's charms.

Awake, asleep, 'twas always here, it kept him in a constant fear And followed him throughout life's path; and this his choice of epitaph:

epitaph:
"He was taxed on boots, was taxed on shoes, was taxed on suits and taxed on booze,

Was taxed on booze,
Was taxed on booze,
Was taxed on everything that grows

that grows.

A tax attacked him when he was born, attacked him till he felt forlors.

If they increase, as in this bill, it won't be long until they will Impose a tax on growing corn and on the toots of Gabriel's horn."

[Applause.]

And the proponents of this bill exclaim great is the sales tax.

Yes; I am willing to balance the Budget. The Budget estimates submitted by the Bureau of the Budget have been slashed $114,000,000. If the country is in such dire condition, let the President through his Budget Bureau, recommend further reductions. This he should have done last December. If the President is sincere in his desire for economy, if the leaders of both parties are sincere in their effort to effect economy, let them prove it by the recommendations which they make to the House. I, for one, am willing to slash appropriations to the bone; slash salaries and effect a balance of the Budget through that avenue rather than the levy of a sales tax. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW].

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Chairman, it has been stated several times that it requires no nerve to vote for an appropriation and against a tax bill. That argument is entirely unfair. It is a demagogic argument and is generally used when there is lack of good sound arguments. I do not approve of it. I realize that it is not considered good business for the Government to spend more money than it raises in revenue, but these are abnormal times, and, of necessity, a great many of the principles of good business are not applicable.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Woon] on several occasions on the floor of this House has stated that the crisis we are facing to-day is comparable with the period of the World War; that it is more of a crisis than we were in during the World War. I heartily agree with him as to this. But we found this to be the case during the World War: There was an abundance of purchasing power in the country. There was a market for all agricultural as well as all manufactured products. To-day the purchasing power of our people is at a low ebb. There is practically no market for either agricultural or for manufactured products. To further reduce that purchasing power to the extent of $600,000,000, as proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means in this revenue bill, by imposing a manufacturers' excise tax, which is a sales tax in disguise, at this time is not only folly, but it would do nothing more than aggravate the present deplorable condition.

Now, what are the causes of present conditions?

Are they brought about because our people are not as optimistic as they should be and do not see prosperity right around the corner? Is it because occasionally we have not balanced our budgets? Is it because we have hoarded money? No, gentlemen; those are not the causes, although they may have been contributing causes. The real, basic cause is that our people to-day do not have purchasing power. They have not even the ability to buy the barest necessities of life.

And how was this brought about? When the war began the first people to feel the rise in commodity prices-and I am not talking about those people who were fortunate enough to be able to manufacture munitions of war, because that is extraordinary; they were saved the one big item in putting a product upon the market, namely, the advertising and sale of that article to the public, so that is abnormalbut the people who first profited by reason of the rise in commodity prices were the people in the agricultural districts. The first season they made very substantial profits without any material increase in their overhead. Then after that, being thrifty people and because the Government encouraged and demanded that they produce to capacity, these people put more acres under cultivation. They improved their buildings; they improved their machinery, and they did produce to capacity. In order to do this a great many of them were compelled to go to the banks and borrow the money with which to make the necessary improvements. They produced during the period of the war and they showed a real profit during that period. Then all of a sudden the war was over and the first people to feel the drop in commodity prices were the same people in the agricultural districts, and they were the first people to feel deflation. Things went on for a year or two and then their mortgages became due at the banks. A great many of them could not meet their payments. In 1921 and 1922 the farming industry went into a slump. Farming has been paralyzed ever since that time and farmers have had no purchasing power to speak of.

In the industrial centers we find there was prosperity during the period of the war. Even though commodity prices did rise, there was an abundance of work for all people, and following the war that prosperity continued by reason of construction that was deferred during the period of the war. Speculation was rife. The ball was rolling. Then when construction got back to normal and business began to fall off, people all over the country were brought to a realization of the fact that agriculture had been without purchasing power since 1922. So we find ourselves in this terrible depression, brought about mainly because of that fact.

There are other causes which have aggravated it—monopolistic control, to a large extent, of the production and distribution of a great many of the things we have come to deem the necessities of life.

To further reduce our national purchasing power now, is folly, gentlemen. In this bill it is proposed to levy a manufacturers' excise tax to the extent of $600,000,000. Now, gentlemen, the tax is going to amount to a great deal more than $600,000,000 before it is paid by the consumer. That has been our experience with taxes of this kind. In the highly competitive fields you will find that the tax is going to be absorbed by the producer who now receives very little for his product. In the fields that are not highly competitive it is going to be passed on not only to the consumer but also to the producer, and, in reality, instead of reducing our national purchasing power to the extent of $600,000,000, gentlemen, I believe it would be conservative to say it will reduce the purchasing power of our people to the extent of at least $1,000,000,000.

I am heartily in favor of that feature of the bill which raises the taxes on incomes. I would be in favor of raising those taxes more than you have raised them in the brackets of $10,000 and above, because I believe that is sound in theory; it is basically sound, because if an individual or a corporation has, the ability to show a considerable profit, then, gentlemen, that individual or that corporation is able and should be willing to pay the tax. Those individuals and corporations which do not make a profit are not able to pay and do not have to pay a tax.

Where is the demand for this sales tax to balance the Budget, gentlemen? Does the demand come from the farmers who at the present time are practically without purchasing power and who in many cases can not even pay their taxes? Does it come from the laboring man, millions of whom are now working on part time and can not even buy the necessities of life? Or does it come from the 8,000,000 men who are out of work walking the streets to-day? I would like to know who is demanding that we balance the Budget at the expense of the farmer and the workingman.

Balancing the Budget did not seem to mean a great deal, gentlemen, when we were talking in terms of moratoriums and when we were talking in terms of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. You did not talk about the saturation of the bond market when you authorized the issuance of $1,500,000,000 worth of debenture bonds under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

We say that we are now facing a crisis similar to that of the World War, but at the time of the war there was no cry of the necessity for balancing the Budget. At that time there was no objection to issuing bonds to meet the crisis. There was no cry to balance the Budget during the last session of Congress, when the Treasury showed a deficit of $903,000,000. Now, suddenly, there is the cry that we must make up this deficit, which has been accumulating over a number of years, by a program of exorbitant taxes in just one year, and to make matters worse the bill is to be paid by those who are least able to pay. It is to be taken out of the purchasing power of the farmer and the workingman.

I say to you, gentlemen, that I am in favor of striking out of this bill such obnoxious proposals as the sales tax disguised as a manufacturers' tax. I favor striking out the tax on theater admission of 50 cents or less and I favor striking out the tax on such food products as will reduce the price paid to the farmer who produces such products.

I believe that the deficit should be made up by a program of moderate taxation over a period of years, such program to include an increase in the tax to be paid on incomes of $10,000 and over. I favor the issuance of Government bonds to cover such immediate needs as the Government may have.

Such measures will preserve our national purchasing power at this time; we dare not further decrease our national purchasing power by the amount which is called for in this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMillan].

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for a few minutes during the consideration of this bill to make what I conceive to be a few essential observations on certain changes that in my judgment will benefit the proposed legislation. I am not going to undertake at this time to pay my respects to the committee that has had this bill under consideration, because that has already been done. Every one of us knows the work, the effort and the consideration necessary for this line of legislation, and the labor that is incident to its preparation; but, my friends, tax legislation is always a burden.

As has already been stated on the floor, and I join in the sentiment, none of us has any great pleasure in voting for tax bills. I am guilty, perhaps like many other Members of this House in the years that I have served here, in voting appropriations for one object or another; but we must not forget the fact that when we rise here in our seats and vote for appropriations, it is only natural that we must at some place find the money to put in the other end of the barrel. This is a condition that has brought about the situation here at this time.

The Treasury is running with a deficit; and as Members of this House—certainly as I see it and as I appreciate the duties of my job—we have got to have the courage and the manhood to stand up here and take care, first, of the Government of the United States, which every one of us has sworn to uphold.

My friends, with this in mind, and with a solemn obligation, as I see it, on the part of the membership of this House, I am prompted to stand up and support this bill at this time; but there are a number of provisions in the bill which I think can be improved.

First, there are the exempt articles under section 602.

This section refers, generally, to various articles of the farm. You will find here farm, garden products, fertilizer, and such grades of articles as are used chiefly for fertilizers, garden and field seeds, bran and shorts, and various other things. In subsection 5 of this section you will find where meat, fish, poultry, fresh, dried, frozen, chilled, salted, or in brine; and in subsection 6 you will find where bacon, hams, pig shoulders, and pig jowls, and so forth, are all exempt if they are not in air-tight containers.

Gentlemen, my conviction is that in this bill every line and every kind of food product ought to be exempt, without any exception whatever. [Applause.] It does not make any difference to me whether it is raised on the farm, or whether it is a dairy product, or whether it comes out of the sea, or whether it is grown in the air, if it is a food product it ought to be exempt under this bill.

In subsection 6, we have bacon, hams, and pig shoulders exempt, whereas canned foods are not exempt.

By nature alone, nature has given us advantages whereby we can take a ham, for instance, and smoke it and throw it in a sack and that ham will be preserved for an indefinite time. Unfortunately, this is not true of a tomato or an oyster or a shrimp. Nature has not been quite so nice to us in that regard. Why make any distinction so that in the case of a ham or a pig jowl, they can be exempt, and yet in the case of the tomato or shrimp or salmon, which are perishable foods, there is no exemption? Let us be consistent about this matter. This is my attitude about this provision of the bill.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to page 263, subsection (j), where it says-

The term "farm products" means agricultural products in the broadest sense, not processed by any person other than the original producer thereof, or an association of such producers, organized and operated on a cooperative basis.

I take this to mean that a man or an association or a cooperative could even produce canned farm products without being taxed, but not the individual.

Mr. McMILLAN. Very true.

Mr. GOSS. And this shows another inconsistency with respect to this food proposition.

Mr. McMILLAN. Exactly. Why exempt the cooperatives?

Mr. GOSS. That is it, exactly.

Mr. McMILLAN. Why exempt such an organization? It is the food that I am interested in and not so much the organization or the concern that processes it.

Mr. FIESINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes. Mr. FIESINGER. Would the gentleman exempt the containers too, the bottles and all those things?

Mr. McMILLAN. No; I am not after the containers. I am not after the cans. That is a manufactured product.

Mr. FIESINGER. The gentleman is in favor of the tax on cans?

Mr. McMILLAN. I am after the food that goes into them. I am after the food and I am after trying to take care of the man who must spend his money to buy the contents of that container, the food or the necessity of life. That is what I am interested in.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And no matter who manufactures it? Mr. McMILLAN. No matter who manufactures it, I am interested in the consumer. Why, my friends, you take a can of peaches, at 9 cents a can. That is a luxury to many a family in this country. That family can not go out and buy fresh tomatoes or fresh asparagus. They buy them in a container, with the sugar as sweets that is so necessary to life.

Mr. PATMAN. We can not let the bars down for one and not for others. How about the purchase of a suit of clothes?

Mr. McMILLAN. I can go out and buy a suit of clothes for $100 and another man may go out and purchase one for $20. There is a latitude there. I am talking about an actual necessity-food.

Now, let us look at it from the standpoint of my country in the South, where for years and years we planted cotton, cotton; and here a few years ago we were pleaded with to cut out planting cotton, that we were raising too much, and plant something else, diversify the crop, and we did. We went out in my State and other Southern States to raising vegetables. We raised products that were perishable. What happened? The canner came along and took care of the very thing that we were trying to do, and now the farmers are being penalized by this kind of legislation. If you are going to pit a tax on the products raised by them, I say it is not fair. [Applause.]

Here you have hams and pig jowls, perhaps raised by the same man that raises the tomatoes, cabbages, and cucumbers, and other things.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HILL of Washington. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. McMILLAN. Now, there is another element more or less personal with me that I am talking about here. I represent a coastal section of the country. Down in South Carolina there are oyster canners and shrimp canners, and those industries are operated all along the Atlantic coast of this country. I presume that on the west coast there are salmon canners. Now, I said a moment ago that you can smoke a ham, throw it in a sack, and that will be preserved by nature. The man who has got a ham is benefited to that extent, but that is not true of the oyster or the shrimp.

In the interior sections of our country they do not know, in many instances, what an oyster or a shrimp is. What are you going to do to these people who secure oysters or shrimp in cans? They never get one unless it is in a can, and it is not fair to tax them.

In subsection 5 you have meat and fish and poultry, fresh, dried, frozen, chilled, salted, or in brine. That is all right: you exempt it. But mackerel comes out of the same kind of a stream, salt water, to say the least, that the oyster and the shrimp does. In the case of the mackerel, you exempt it, and the shrimp and the oyster you do not. Let us be consistent—that is my attitude about it.

There is one other question I want to call attention to, and that is the matter of the admission tax. I am undertaking to the best of my ability to support this bill. Let us take the great mass of boys and girls in this country. They go to school from Monday through Friday, and during that time they save their nickels and dimes in order that they make take in a moving-picture show at the last of the week. That is true in my case. I have five boys. Four of those boys are in school. I know that on every Friday night those boys are interested in going to a moving-picture show.

The boys and the girls throughout this country take much pride in saving in order to take in a moving-picture show on Friday or Saturday night. That is a great joy and a pride and a comfort to the fathers and mothers in this country. I submit that the exemption of only 25 cents for admission for that sort of a tax is entirely too low, and that the exemption ought to be raised at least to 50 cents.

I hope the committee in its executive sessions during the mornings, before the bill is taken up for amendment under the 5-minute rule will take these matters into consideration and offer amendments on the floor to exempt all kinds of food, irrespective of what it is or where it is raised, and raise the exemption on theater ticket admissions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, in the very beginning I want to state that I am opposed to this tax bill. As I listened on Saturday to the Hon. George Huddleston, the gentleman from Alabama and the erstwhile president of the Democratic Demagogue Club, plead for the passage of the nefarious measure, I was wondering if some substitute might not be offered that would save the country and at the same time unhand the man of average means in America who is being choked to death by those who contend that it is disloyal to stand here in this House of Representatives and beg mercy for the downtrodden.

I resent the inference that I am not loyal to my country because I will not vote for a sales tax on the necessities of life or for a protective tariff that is called a tax on oil. I have proven my loyalty to my country by leaving home, family, business, and friends in 1917 and going with the flag of our country—the Stars and Stripes—as a volunteer to Europe, and by following that flag for more than five and a half years.

I would like to follow the lead of such men as the gentleman from Alabama and others who believe as he does, but until they get closer to the people I can not do it.

I can not go back to Georgia and tell those honest sons of toil in my district that I voted to tax the overalls with which they hide their nakedness as they plow the soil of my native land. I can not tell them I voted to tax their cotton socks, their brogan shoes, and their wide-brimmed hats that protect their brains from the summer sun.

Will George tell his poverty-stricken friend down in Alabama that he voted to tax the cotton clothing that his overworked wife bought for the newborn baby? Will he tell him that he voted to tax the cradle that rocks it and the baby carriage in which it rides?

And if perchance the Angel of Death has visited the home of one of his esteemed friends and has taken from him the wife of his bosom and the mother of his children, will he tell him that he, George, voted to tax the medicine that failed to keep her alive and the shroud she wore on that last long journey from which no traveler returns? Will he tell him that he voted for a tax on the casket in which she was laid away? May God forbid that I shall ever have to answer such questions in the affirmative. I say with all my heart, "Let George do it."

When did the Democratic Party first subscribe to the doctrine of the protective tariff, about which they have raised such a row since the time before I was born? Vote for it? No. Not until the "sun grows cold and the stars are old and the leaves of the judgment book unfold."

I am too well trained in the principles of Democracy to do that. Call me unpatriotic if you will, or a demagogue, or an obstructionist, or a what not. My reply is a warning to you who know better and who should do better, and it may be summed up in the following quotation:

Vice is a monster of so frightful mien As to be hated needs but to be seen; Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

Those who advocate the passage of this bill say foodstuffs shall be exempt from taxation, but if the same food is canned in order that it may be preserved and kept for use at a more convenient season, it must be taxed. Vegetables and fruit that my people have in such great abundance at certain seasons of the year are not to be taxed, but if the people are thrifty and save some of it for a rainy day, that portion of it that is preserved must be taxed.

When I think of the suggested tax on the movies I wonder if the daddies in this country are going to be able to stand the high cost of living and the boys and young men the high cost of loving. No doubt all of you have heard the old song "Take your girlie to the movies, if you can't make love at home." I wonder if this Congress wants to destroy this avenue of relief for pent-up affection.

avenue of relief for pent-up affection.

"But," say they, "what do you offer as a substitute?"

I am going to make a suggestion, but I fear it will not be adopted. I believe the Budget should be balanced as early as possible, and my plan will save more money to the taxpayers of the country than the objectionable forms of taxation provided for in this bill will produce. Despite the fact that I voted against the foreign-debt moratorium and $450,-000,000 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation appropriation, I will vote to cut every appropriation to be made by this Congress, my own salary included, 25 per cent, and that will save the $702,000,000 of the people's money that you fellows who now pride yourself on your loyalty donated only a few short weeks ago to foreigners and big business while you were then boasting of your generosity.

The President cracked his whip and you jumped. The cracking of the little pop whip of the people of America can be heard at this very moment in every nook and corner of the United States. Do you hear it? Will you heed?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I now yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Patterson].

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, it is not a very envious position that I find myself in in rising to oppose this bill. I am glad that I can do so without going to the extent of some who have spoken in charging others who disagree with them with being demagogues and imputing to them unfair and unpatriotic motives. I can present my views without that. I think there is no man more deeply sincere in respect to his position in reference to this bill than I am. I oppose the sales tax provision for three reasons. First, because I believe it is the wrong principle of taxation. Next, because it adds an undue burden to that class of people who are already overburdened with taxation. Third, it is an admission that we accept the condition which the country faces and the standards of living that have been forced upon us as permanent and think there is no way around it. In doing that we seem to admit that there is no hope. When we pass this tax bill this Congress accepts the conditions that we have now and admits that it is its belief that there is no way of ever returning the country to prosperity, when the farmers and the other classes of our people may have an income sufficient to purchase the necessities of life and live in the way that Americans should and produce wealth, so that they can pay taxes in the American way, rather than have this oppressive, unjustifiable manufacturers' sales tax levied upon them. I oppose it with all the energy, power, and sincerity I have.

Now, I do not think there is any man in the House who has a higher regard for our Committee on Ways and Means than I have, and I am under deep obligations to the committee, and I have tried to let each one know how strongly I have felt this, and this is especially true of the acting chairman, who has rendered me many kindnesses and favors, and I can not refrain here from acknowledging my personal obligations to this committee and our acting chairman, Judge Crisp. I commend their splendid spirit of patriotism. I believe there is a better way to balance the Budget and return the country to prosperity than by laying this billion dollars of tax on the people of this country at this time, especially the sales tax. Such a tax as that in my judgment is un-American.

I think the most important things to do to-day is to return the country to prosperity and give the people a purchasing power. There is no chance of bringing the country back to prosperity and the conditions in 1926 without giving the people purchasing power. The farmer, laborer, and every other person who toils for a living needs purchasing power to-day. You can lay all the taxes you want to and back up big business with your finance corporations, and your foreign moratoriums, but you will never reach the heart of the thing until you bring the great mass of the people back to producing income, so that they can purchase the necessities of life. This bill will not do that.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. PATTERSON. For a question.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman tell us what his remedy is to do that?

Mr. PATTERSON. I am fixing to give something in a moment that will solve our problem. For instance, one thing that I would suggest is a bond issue, to put on a constructive program of public works, a public-improvement program, so that the people of this country, the laboring man and other people, would begin to earn and buy the manufacturers' product. This would stimulate business all along the line. I introduced some bills at the opening of this Congress calculated to do this and others have been introduced, and I believe more and more people are coming to realize the need of this kind of a program.

Then I would raise income taxes in the higher brackets much higher when we get to the million-dollar class than this bill does. In an emergency like this I would go to the war-time rate or higher.

Then I would bring about a limited expansion of the currency to stabilize the purchasing power of the dollar at or near the 1926 level and guarantee bank deposits and we should get some results.

Another thing would be to issue bonds and pay the soldiers' bonus. That will give more purchasing power to our people and discharge a debt we owe and is more urgent than paying the surplus we have on the national debt.

I want to call attention to what some of these people have to put up with now. The laboring man's wages, for instance, are $10,000,000,000 less than they were a year or so ago. There is no use getting around it. And in this bill practically every article of food which the laboring man has to purchase is taxed. Some of the farmer's food is exempt. If he produces it at home he will not have to pay a tax on it, but practically every article of food a man buys in cans will have this tax. All of his clothes and things like that are taxed. It will be more than passed on. I do not think any man will fool himself by believing that this tax-call it a manufacturers' excise tax if you want to: it is that and more. it is a sales tax—with the incompetence that big business has shown in dealing with the conditions of this country and the power they have by monopolies and mergers, do not think for once this tax will not be passed on. They will not only pass on this 21/4 per cent, but they will more than pass it on. Our working people will have to pay it. Many of our people are without wages. Some of them are on half time. Practically none of them have the income which they had back in the days of prosperity. The income of the farmer in my State to-day is less than $300. Much of his food will be taxed. All of his clothing, all of his farm implements will be taxed under this bill if it becomes law, which I hope it will not. These farmers and laboring people as well as the professional and small-business people are the great patriotic class of people which is always called upon when the country is in an emergency. The professional class of people, who live out of cans, people who live in the cities will be affected in practically everything they purchase-clothing, food, and all their amusements, and everything.

This bill will encourage the forming of trusts and mergers. We have already had 12 years of formation of great trusts and mergers. Not only bread trusts but various other trusts to raise the price of articles on the people. The incomes of the people have become less and less.

These great trusts have held up the prices of everything that these poor people have to buy. This will encourage more mergers and monopolies, because they will all want to get together so that they can pass it on to the consumer. I know that some differ with me on this proposition, but I feel that time will show I am right. I am perfectly willing to be called a demagogue if people choose to call me that because I am against this bill, because I am convinced that whenever this bill is passed, which I do not believe it will be, and this burden is passed on to the consumer, nothing could be done in this country that will retard the recovery of business and the recovery of the earning power of the people more than this bill.

We hear all this talk about balancing the Budget. I believe it is important to balance the Budget and think we should proceed to do that gradually and reasonably. I want to say one other thing. What a fine example we have to follow in following the people who advise us to balance the Budget and give all these estimates.

We are told that the fiscal year of 1931 ended with a deficit of about $900,000,000. I am sure I am not mistaken when I say we are told that. How many of you remember in December, 1929, this same group that is advising this bill now, brought in here through the Ways and Means Committee a tax-gift bill? I will not respect it by calling a taxreduction bill. It was a tax-gift bill. The Under Secretary, who indorses this bill, who recommends this bill, with his chief, sent up here a bill giving back a portion of the taxes on incomes which were collected during the calendar year 1930. One-half of those collections were in the latter part of that year, and it was in the fiscal year 1931 they claimed they could afford to give this money to those who least needed tax relief. It would not do for me to say what I think of such a measure which turned out to be such a farce, and I will say a disgrace. They said the Treasury would stand that reduction of income taxes. Less than 25 Members opposed that; some of the Democratic Members on the Ways and Means Committee took the floor at that time and spoke for that bill and led us up the mountain toward the celestial city where we could view what they called the delectable mountains, and I challenge any man now to get up and say that it was sound legislation. That was the same group we are following to-day in this tax bill.

Here we were passing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill, the moratorium, and all these appropriations, and none of this group said anything about the large deficit we were going to have at that time. No. We were going to pass this bill and provide this money to loan the railroads and other big financial institutions, and you are obliged to admit, whether you call that sound legislation or not, such legislation by any government is an admission that something is wrong somewhere, and no one can defend such legislation as that.

In this bill, in spite of the fact that the laboring man's can of sardines is taxed, the farmer's plow and the plowstock and his cultivator and all those things are taxed, we find the newspapers, with all their big advertising and their leased wires, and so on, still undisturbed.

I was very much amazed at my good friend the gentleman from South Carolina a while ago, when he made a roaring speech against this bill, after saying he was going to vote for the bill. He got down here and did not find a single thing worthy of speaking for. He was speaking against it all the time.

I am glad if anyone wants to call me that; I am glad I can be called a demagogue when I am defending what I believe to be the great masses of the people of this country. I shall fight on and oppose this bill to the last, and I believe that enough Members can be found here to defeat it and strike out those iniquitous provisions which lay such burdens on our people as have never been laid before either in war or peace. It is indefensible, and I appeal to all those who believe in an American system of taxation to join in the defeat of this bill and raise the taxes with higher brackets on income and estate and gift taxes.

Those 30,000,000 farmers whose incomes are only about $6,000,000,000 will pay three or four times as much in percentage of their incomes under this bill as that great wealthy class which we hear about. We have been told that 10 per cent of the people own around 90 per cent of the wealth of this country, and if they can get a bill passed like this and get a principle of taxation established like this in this country, of course, they will rejoice, because it will be just the beginning. It will be like that bill which was sent up by this same group last session. Some of you may not remember it, but it was offered during the last days of the session by the Ways and Means Committee, and that bill would have permitted Andrew Mellon and that group to take all of their money and put it in Government bonds and be free of the surtax or any taxes. You could not tax them a dollar under the surtax on anything-city, county, or State. That is the same group that is leading us to put this tax on the American people at this time. As I say, in my judgment it will retard business and cause a most unbearable burden on our people. It will reduce the earning power and the purchasing power of the farmer and the workingmen of this country, and it will cause us to be longer and longer in this depression.

Let me say again that when this Congress accepts this principle of taxation it will aid only the wealthy. They talk about courage. I tell you we should have more courage in being willing to do something to start the wheels of industry going in this country. We should not aid these great big corporations and financial institutions, who have brought this condition on the country and neglect the workingman and farmer. They have brought it on the country more than anyone else.

I challenge anybody to get up here and say that the big financial institutions of this country are not responsible for our present situation. I say that if they had done their duty, we would not be in our present situation, and there would be no necessity for the proposal of such taxation.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. Has the gentleman taken into consideration the fact that we were led to believe that England could not pay her part of the $252,000,000, yet this week we were astonished to learn that England had paid to the international bankers in New York City $150,000,000.

Mr. PATTERSON. We were led to believe that none of them could pay, but when we come to dig it up I think we will find that most of them can pay. I think some of the investigations carried on by the Senate have shown just where the international bankers have had their hand in these matters and how they have brought about this condition. They sold these securities to the small banks and got their profits out of them, but, of course, the small banks had to take the loss. Of course, they wanted to do all they could to keep their credits and collect what was due them. [Applause.]

I sincerely hope enough Members of this House can be found to save the masses when this comes up for vote. Our people are depending upon us. They can not have lobbyists. With me they need none. I hope we can all meet to challenge and save our people. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Bankhead, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to insert a short radio speech made by Otis Wingo, jr., son of the late Otis Wingo, a former Member of this House, and Mrs. Efficiene Wingo, a Member of this House at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, that is a very dangerous precedent, and at this hour of the day I object. The matter can go over until to-morrow morning, when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Underhill] will be present.

PROHIBITION

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the resolution to discharge the Judiciary Committee from the further consideration of H. J. Res. No. 208.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARLAN. A number of Members who are privately most heartily in sympathy with the purpose of the proposed resolution, to resubmit the eighteenth amendment to the vote of the people, have stated that they do not intend to vote for its consideration at this time for the reason that they would prefer some other form of resolution. It is difficult to see how such a reason for not voting favorably to this resolution can be construed by the people of the United States as anything else than a subterfuge. Nor is it at all surprising that Members chiefly on the Democratic side of this House have been reticent to vote for this measure, where so many of our Members at least consider themselves to be in districts opposed to reconsideration of this amendment. These Members have used every argument to prevent other Democrats from voting for resubmission, the most cogent one being that in view of the present complexion of another legislative body it is unbelievable that this resolution could pass at all, and it is unfair to require Members seeking reelection to lose friends on a moot question. This argument has undoubtedly dissuaded a great number of those on the majority side from voting for consideration.

This question is one affecting the whole United States and not a particular congressional district; it is one to which the people of the United States are looking to this Congress for encouragement, and it is one which will probably more than any other affect the destinies of the Democratic Party in 1932. Ordinarily we would all be inclined to make the pathway of our colleagues representing an allegedly dry district as smooth as possible, but it is my intention to discuss this question frankly and from a purely political viewpoint, relegating for the moment the very serious economic and governmental questions which are also involved.

For the last 10 years the Republican Party has kept itself in power by keeping the control of the northeast section of the United States. They have kept control of that section by virtue of their tariff policy and because they have been able to tell the antiprohibition followers there that the Democratic Party with its dry incubus in the South will be wholly unable to afford any relief on the question of prohibition, and that they, the Republican Party, at the opportune time, will see that the rigors of prohibition are obliterated.

This same party has also worked hand in hand with the dry forces, accepted their political and financial support, and pretended to deliver rigorous support of the prohibition laws. Thus by holding the antiprohibition forces, who are for the most part for high protection, and the prohibition forces together, the Republican Party until 1930 was able to keep itself impregnable. At that time the collapse of the Republican tariff policy enlightened the antiprohibition voters, who turned to the Democratic Party, and as a result that party changed from a hopeless minority into a majority party in this Congress.

It is up to us to decide by our showing in this Congress, and at the national convention at Chicago, whether we contain the force within our party to consolidate these elements that have come to our support, or whether we shall again be relegated to an opposition minority roll. If by our action in this Congress we verify the statements which our Republican opponents have given, that they alone are the true antiprohibition party, we may now and for years to come say farewell to the support of the populous sections of this country.

We have no choice on this issue from a purely political viewpoint. If the Master Himself, reincarnated, were to be nominated at the head of the Democratic ticket on a strict prohibition platform—assuming that He could be persuaded to abandon His teachings and submit to such a program—the dry forces of the United States would still vote for Herbert Hoover for President. Out of ordinary gratitude they could do nothing else. So the choice left for the Democratic Party is, will it accept the support of the antiprohibition group or will it drive those forces to their former alliance with Republicanism?

But, you say you do not like the present resolution, and neither do I, although I shall certainly support it if a majority of this House do not agree to amendments which I believe proper. However, the time to consider those amendments is after this resolution, to call the proposed resolution up for discussion, is passed. May I read this resolution?—

Article XVIII of the Constitution is hereby amended so as to read:

"The Congress shall have power to regulate or to prohibit the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, and the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof, for beverage purposes: Provided, however, That such thereof, for beverage purposes: Provided, however, That such power shall not be construed or applied to abridge or deny the right of any State to authorize and regulate the manufacture. right of any State to authorize and regulate the manufacture, sale, transportation, or use of such intoxicating liquors wholly within the borders of such State; and such power of regulation or any power of the Congress to regulate interstate and foreign commerce shall not be construed to empower the Congress to authorize the shipment, transportation, or importation into any State of intoxicating liquors for beverage or other purposes, whenever the manufacture, sale, transportation, or use of such liquors has been prohibited by the laws of such State; and any such shipment or importation of intoxicating liquors into such State in violation of its laws is prohibited, and any such shipment or importation shall be subject to the laws of the State upon its portation shall be subject to the laws of the State upon its arrival therein."

Primarily I do not like the proposed resolution because it does not specifically contain a clause repealing the eighteenth amendment. It is merely a proposed amendment, to the eighteenth amendment, and leaves the original eighteenth amendment in the Constitution. This seems to me to be a palpable surrender of principle, to political expediency, and by retaining the eighteenth amendment in the Constitution we are continuing needlessly many of our present evils. Needlessly, because there is no voter who will vote for the proposed resolution who would not also vote for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

I should therefore strike out the words "Article XVIII of the Constitution is hereby amended so as to read" and add at the end of the resolution, section 2, "The eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed."

The courts have recently held that the eighteenth amendment is self-executing. That is, it does not necessarily require legislation to give it effect, in so far as it can become effective without legislation. See Ahlberg v. United States (271 Fed. 661), and Rhode Island v. Palmer (253 U. S. 350). The Beck-Linthicum resolution is merely an enabling provision allowing the Federal Government to pass resolutions and punitive laws, in the event the States do not pass these laws. But the States are nowhere granted authority to override the provisions of the eighteenth amendment. Therefore, the eighteenth amendment, in its self-executing power, will still declare the traffic in alcohol unconstitutional and will seriously jeopardize the validity or civil contracts even though the States do provide that the traffic in alcoholic liquors is not criminal.

Also the Beck-Linthicum measure authorizes a State to prohibit the transportation of beverages through that State. from one antiprohibition State to another, thus enabling Kansas to prevent the brewers of Missouri from shipping beer to Colorado, through Kansas. This, I submit, is little less than an absurdity. I therefore believe that the following clause should be added to the first paragraph of the Beck-Linthicum resolution: "Provided further, That the provision of clause 3 of section 8 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States is unaffected by this amendment as pertaining to shipment of all commodities through a State to a consignee beyond the borders thereof."

Furthermore, the Beck-Linthicum resolution perpetuates the fundamental error of the eighteenth amendment in that it includes a statutory provision which is not a part of the basic law. It perpetuates forever in the Constitution the Reed amendment to the Webb-Kenyon law. This may be the most wise and equitable law conceivable by the human mind. but it is nevertheless a law and should not be included in the Constitution. It is not necessary, because it is already part of the statutes of the United States. I would, therefore, strike out the following clauses at the end of the Beck-Linthicum resolution: "And any such shipment or importation of intoxicating liquors into such State, in violation of its laws, is prohibited."

In the event that this House decides to consider the Beck-Linthicum resolution, it is my purpose to offer the above amendments. But my views on the desirability of such amendments would be decidedly flimsy reasons for refusing to vote to consider the resolutions at all. Such a vote is stitution? Do we need to be reminded that "Congress shall going to be very hard to explain to the constituents of your district or the people of the United States. And such a vote cast on the Democratic side of this House will constitute just one more burden for our party to bear in the coming election.

"THE HORROR OF IT "-A BOOK DEPICTING WAR'S REALITIES

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on a book entitled "The Horror of It."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Spcaker, a little book entitled "The Horror of It," arranged by Mr. Frederick A. Barber, of Historical Foundations, and published by Brewer, Warren & Putnam, New York, came into my possession recently. The book is a camera record of the gruesome glories of the World War.

I asked Mr. G. P. Putnam, of this firm, if any of the photographs were supplied him by the Signal Corps of our War Department, and received the following reply from him:

I have for some time been interested in issuing a book which would, through the use of actual photographs depicting the horrors of war, drive home to those who look at it exactly what war means in human agony and suffering. After collecting from other countries typical pictures depicting the gruesome side of modern military operations. I sent a representative to the Signal Corps, who selected from their large collection of war pictures a group of photographs desired. When the nature of their use was divulged the War Department refused to give them out. Subsequently I wrote to the Chief of the Signal Corps again requesting the use of these pictures in a book which I frankly described as designed as a document against war, graphically illustrating the horrors of modern conflict. This request was turned down in a brief letter stating that "there are no pictures on hand such as you desire that are available for publication."

I then called upon Maj. Gen. Irving J. Carr, Chief of the Signal Corps. I explained to him frankly what I wanted and why. With equal frankness, he replied that the department would give out only those pictures which depicted the more pleasing aspects of war—that it was not "ethical, not decent, and against public policy" to release photographs depicting the repulsive side of war. General Carr said to me:

"To give out any such pictures would be against public policy." I have for some time been interested in issuing a book which ould, through the use of actual photographs depicting the war. General Carr said to me:

"To give out any such pictures would be against public policy.

It would not be ethical; it would not be decent. Think of the gold star mothers the country sent to France. Over there they saw the lovely cemeteries in which lie the dead of the American Expeditionary Forces. Perhaps their boys lie there. These mothers carried home in their minds beautiful pictures of these well-kept resting places. That is what they should have—we can not spoil these memories."

I asked if these professions are the start of the second start of t asked if these mothers and other mothers are not entitled to I asked if these mothers and other mothers are not entitled to evidence of the ghastly side of war, bringing home realization of what other wars inevitably will mean. Summed up, General Carr said that the Signal Corps would supply any pictures desired which show the pleasant features of military operations but entirely refused to let us have anything else.

My contention is that the Signal Corps pictures, except those involving secret military matters, should be available to any reputable taxpayer. To me it seems unsound that the Army should decide what war pictures a publisher may use. If the department actually could put into operation its edict, the public would only see those pictures which glorify war.

would only see those pictures which glorify war.

It is but fair to add that despite the Signal Corps' opposition we were actually able to include in the book certain American photographs which found their way into circulation some years ago, in addition to a selection of authentic pictures from Germany, England, and France, amazing in their stark and shocking reality. Please realize that no "atrocities" are included. The book has no bias of nationality and has blame for no one. Its purpose, as exemplified by its title, is simply to depict the "horror of it" as seen by the truthful camera—an unemotional document.

Under all the circumstances I suppose we could not expect anything but opposition to its content and its purpose at the hands of the War Department.

It is evident that the War Department has refused the publication of the war pictures in its possession. Such material as might reveal military secrets which would be of use to a possible enemy would naturally not be given out for publication, but the taxpayers of this country have the right to expect the publication of this material now suppressed by the War Department. Not merely the taxpayers but the press should demand this material. It is strange that the press, so zealous regarding its freedom, should accept without protest this infringement of its rights.

We are now brought face to face with the problem. Should Congress, the elected representatives of the people of this country, tolerate in silence this violation of the Conmake no law * * of the press * * *." Congress could not violate this provision, yet it permits a department of this Government to abridge the freedom of the press and thus carry on, in violation of the Constitution.

If all pictures in the War Department were denied to the press, individuals might be tempted to conclude that the department, fearful of creating a war mind, suppressed all visual aids on this subject. But the department does not merely pretend to suppress; it censors. As noted in the letter already quoted, it permits and encourages the publication of photographs that present the pleasant aspects of war. In fact, one branch of the department is assigned to this task of securing and publishing attractive photographs on war subjects.

Our Sunday editions carry these—marching soldiers, troops of men on horseback, cadet troops headed by well-dressed bands playing martial music, youngsters at target practice. girl majors in military uniforms saluting cadet officers. While this "afternoon tea" portrayal of war is being secured daily, and released daily by the War Department for the purpose of propagandizing the institution of war, why not reveal to the taxpayers the reverse side of the picture? Why not publish the real, the serious side of war? Why not tell the American people the whole truth? If the War Department does not feel called upon to publish the whole truth, it should not prevent the press from placing the truth before the people of this country. In other words, why prevent a citizen from publishing pictures of the realities of war? Why not portray the maimed, the dead, and the dying, as well as well-dressed troops marching to martial music down streets lined with joyous, cheering crowds? But the press is told by the War Department that the American public must not be told the whole truth.

In this regard we should compare ourselves with other countries. The countries of Europe have opened their archives to their citizens. Many of the photographs in this book have been secured from official sources in other countries. It should be observed that our citizens, denied permission to publish the whole war story by our War Department, have found these same pictures the common property of the citizens of other countries. The freedom in this country should be as great as that in any other country in this regard.

"The Horror of It" is a portrayal of the whole truth of the institution of war as revealed in the torn bodies and minds of individuals. It pictures not ambition and idealism but the physical clash of forces and soldiers as pawns of war. It is realism to the nth degree. In the face of this stark realistic portrayal of the whole truth of war, the War Department's idealistic presentation of war as marching troops, banners waving, bands playing, can no longer be carried on. The War Department's idealism must be replaced by the realism of war itself.

The Government of the United States should not favor, or permit, any department of the Government to carry out any system by which the people of this country should not be given the whole truth. It is only by this means that there can be a release of civilization from the nightmare of war.

MASSACHUSETTS AND PROHIBITION

Mr. GRANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, our people have patiently waited for the arrival of this day. I am happy indeed that they have not waited in vain. For the first time since the ratification of the eighteenth amendment the Congress is given an opportunity to vote directly upon this very important issue. Many years have elapsed and a great many changes have taken place in the economic, social, and industrial life of America since the adoption of the eighteenth amendment. Millions of our people opposed and protested its ratification, and to-day, for the first time in 12 years, under Democratic control of the House of Representatives, we are to have an opportunity to express our * abridging the freedom of speech or opinions. This is merely the beginning of the movement to repeal the eighteenth amendment, and I am confident that it is a movement in a direction which will culminate in the ultimate repeal of this amendment.

As a Member of the Congress from Massachusetts, I take particular pride in my Commonwealth. It is a distinctive honor to be included in the membership in this House from Massachusetts. As I stand here to-day I take a great deal of satisfaction in the knowledge that Massachusetts has always stood for right against wrong. It was in the old Bay State that the first blow for liberty was struck; it was there in the guise of redskins the stout-muscled colonists threw the tea overboard and raised the cry that taxation without representation was tyranny. Massachusetts was bold and aggressive in her fight for right against might; she still possesses that same virile and indomitable spirit to-day. In 1918 the citizens of Massachusetts, impressed by the solemn promises of the advocates of prohibition, ratified the eighteenth amendment. A few years later the so-called Baby Volstead Act was enacted into law in an effort to give the experiment, noble in purpose, as alleged, a fair and just trial. For the years that followed the enforcement authorities of Massachusetts bent their every energy to enforce the liquor laws of the State and Nation. On November 4, 1930, by a vote overwhelming in its proportions the people of my Commonwealth repudiated the Baby Volstead Act and served notice on the Congress and on the other States of our Union that prohibition was a failure, and so, my colleagues, Massachusetts again rises in all its might against wrong. Massachusetts has repudiated the eighteenth amendment, and on March 13, 1931, by a joint resolution of both branches of the general court it called upon the Congress for action.

I incorporate at this point in my address the resolution to which I refer.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, A. D. 1931

Resolutions making application to Congress in accordance with Article V of the Constitution of the United States to call a constitutional convention to amend or repeal the Eighteenth Article of Amendment or to propose such an amendment for submission to the several States

Whereas a condition of widespread dissatisfaction prevails with workings and results of Article XVIII of the Amendments to the Constitution of the United States; and Whereas it is desirable to attempt to improve, clarify, or quiet such condition; and

Whereas the only methods for repealing or modifying said Article XVIII are set forth in Article V of the said Constitution: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts, acting in pursuance of said Article V, hereby requests that Congress call a convention under said article for the purpose of proposing an amendment or amendments to the Constitution amending, modifying, revising, or repealing said Article XVIII; or that Congress, acting in pursuance of said Article V, itself propose such an amendment or amendments; and requests that in either case the same be submitted for ratification by conventions in the several States; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the Commonwealth forward forthwith to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress certified copies of these resolutions, attested by the clerks of both branches of the general court.

Adopted March 13, 1931.

A true copy, attest:

FRANK E. BRIDGMAN Clerk of the House of Representatives.
WILLIAM H. SANGER, Clerk of the Senate.

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts, office of the secretary, witness the great seal of the Commonwealth.

Secretary of the Commonwealth.

This resolution of the general court was no idle gesture: it was Massachusetts speaking out of its glorious past, issuing a mandate to her representatives in the Congress. I, as one privileged to represent her, deem it an honor to carry out her mandate to-day.

In addressing you this afternoon I can not forego the opportunity to recall to the attention of the Members of this House the list of impressive promises made by the advocates of prohibition some 12 years ago. Those men and women, undoubtedly sincere, promised to officially bury throughout the United States John Barleycorn, liquor was to disappear entirely from our country, crime would be banished, the saloon destroyed, poverty and the poorhouse would disappear, and prosperity on a permanent basis was to be insured. Our Federal penitentiaries were to be sold under the auctioneer's hammer. These promises have not been fulfilled. Our penitentiaries are overcrowded, the tide of liquor flows throughout the country unstemmed, the speak-easy supplants the saloon, and rackets of every description organized throughout the land, with the Nation's Treasury empty and 8,000,000 of its people unemployed. These, my colleagues, are the indisputable results of prohibition.

I am forced at this time to bring to the attention of the House the attitude of former Presidents William Howard Taft and Woodrow Wilson on this troublesome issue. Although these men were the real leaders of their day on this issue, only a small portion of our people followed their

Mr. Speaker, I incorporate in my remarks at this point certain correspondence between President Taft and Allen B. Lincoln, of New Haven, Conn., and President Wilson's veto of the Volstead Act.

WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT'S PROTEST AGAINST NATIONAL PROHIBITION AND EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

FIRST LETTER

New Haven, Conn., June 8, 1918.

My Dear Mr. Lincoln: I am opposed to national prohibition. I am opposed to it because I think it is a mixing of the National am opposed to it because I think it is a mixing of the National Government in a matter that should be one of local settlement. I think sumptuary laws are matters for parochial adjustment. I think it will vest in the National Government, and those who administer it, so great a power as to be dangerous in political matters. I would be in favor of State prohibition if I thought prohibition prohibited, but I think in the long run, except in local communities where the majority of the citizens are in favor of the law, it will be violated.

I am opposed to the presence of laws on the statute books that can not be enforced and as such demoralize the enforcement of all can not be enforced and as such demoralize the enforcement of all laws. If I were in a local community in which I thought prohibition could be enforced, I would vote for it. If not, I would favor a high license, but I am not in favor of a national amendment which should force 12 or 15 great States into a sumptuary system which the public opinion and the real practices of the people of those States would not support. I think it is most unwise to fasten upon the United States a prohibitory system under the excitement of the war, which I do not hesitate to say every sensible supporter of prohibition in the end will regret.

Let the States which wish to do so prohibit. They have every means now of enforcing prohibition. There is a Federal law, sustained as constitutional, which forbids the importation into them of liquor from other States, and the whole field is open to State legislation and its enforcement. I don't drink myself at all, and I don't oppose prohibition on the ground that it limits the liberties of the people. I think that in the interest of the community, and of the people. I think that in the interest of the community, and of the man who can not resist the temptation to drink in excess, if he has the opportunity to drink at all, other citizens in the community may be properly asked and compelled to give up drinking, although that drinking may do them no injury. My objections to prohibition are as I have stated them above. Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM H. TAFT.

SECOND LETTER

POINTE-A-PIC, P. Q., CANADA, September 2, 1918. My Dear Mr. Lincoln: You asked me if you may hand to Mr. Osborn for publication my letter to you of June 8, 1918, on national prohibition. There are some reasons for my views which I would have elaborated had I expected the letter to be published. Therefore, please publish with that letter the following:

A national prohibition amendment to the Federal Constitution will be adopted against the views and practices of a majority of the people in many of the large cities and in one-fourth or less of the States.

The business of manufacturing alcohol, liquor, and beer will go out of the hands of the law-abiding members of the community and will be transferred to the quasi-criminal class. In the communities where the majority will not sympathize with a Federal law's restrictions, large numbers of Federal officers will be needed for its enforcement. The Central Government now has very wide war powers. When peace comes these must end, if the Republic is to be preserved. If, however, a partisan political head of the Internal Revenue Department, or of a separate department created for the purpose, shall always be able through Federal detectives and policemen to reach into every hamlet and to every ward and to every purlieu of a large city and use the leverage of an intermittently lax and strict enforcement of the law against would-be dealers in liquor and their patrons, he will wield a sinister power, prospect of which should make anxious the friends of free constitutional government.

"A new broom sweeps clean." A temporary national prohibition law as a war measure may be effective. It is urged to stimulate war production in the emergency, and to take temptation from our soldiers, though it is doubtful whether the serious loss to the national revenue which it will entail may not outweigh the actual benefits. The immediate useful operation of such a law, or of a new State prohibition law, is not convincing evidence of its or of a new State prohibition law, is not convincing evidence of its ultimate tendency and result.

The community must summer and winter it for years. After the law-abiding members of the business go out of the business and a complete readjustment follows, the pressure for violation and lax execution in communities where the law is not popular will be constant and increasing.

The reaching out of the great central power to brush the doorsteps of local communities, far removed geographically and politically from Washington, will be irritating in such States and communities, and will be a strain upon the bond of the national Union. It will produce variation in the enforcement of the law. Union. It will produce variation in the enforcement of the law. There will be loose administration in spots all over the United States, and a politically inclined national administration will be strongly tempted to acquiesce in such a condition. Elections will continuously turn on the rigid or languid execution of the liquor law, as they do now in prohibition States.

The ever-present issue will confuse and prevent clear and clean-cut popular decisions on the most important national questions, and the politics of the Nation will be demoralized as the politics of States have been through this cause. The issue will never be settled.

The theory that the National Government can enforce any law will yield to the stubborn circumstances, and a Federal law will become as much a subject of contempt and ridicule in some parts of the Nation as laws of this kind have been in some States.

We are acting now under the heroic impulse of a war, which stirs our feelings and makes us think we can have a millennium of virtue and self-sacrifice for the future. This is a fundamental error. I profoundly deprecate having our constitutional structure seriously amended by a feverish enthusiasm, which will abate to neglect and laxity in many States as the years go on.

If through the abnormal psychology of war the 36 States are induced to approve a national prohibition amendment now, we can never change it, though a great majority of the people may come later to see its utter failure. Thirteen prohibition States can always be counted on to prevent a retracing of the foolish We shall thus hang a permanent millstone around our step.

Individual self-restraint, the influence of improved social standand criticism, and the restrictions enforced by employers of labor for industrial reasons have probably had more to do with moderating the evils of intoxication than statute law. I would not minimize, however, the advantage of the removal of the temptation of access to liquor by law when the law is backed by local public opinion and can be enforced.

Nor is my conviction affected by any sympathy with those who are engaged in the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors. It is now nearly half a century ago since the Supreme Court's interpretation of the Federal Constitution warned everyone engaged in the business that he invested a capital therein at the gaged in the business that he invested a capital therein at the full risk of its being declared unlawful, and of the consequent loss that future legislation might entail. Moreover, the demoralizing political power which salconkeepers and liquor manufacturers sought and wielded to protect their business from proper regulation, and the defiance they bid to reasonable public opinion, roused the just indignation of the electorate.

Many have voted, and now vote, merely to destroy the power of the saloon in politics, without regard to any other consideration. The saloonkeepers taught the Anti-Saloon League how to fight, and the latter has learned the lesson well and applied it, and often without any more scruple as to the method or means than its teachers. The liquor dealer thus is "hoist with his own petard.

I have never concealed my views on this subject, and it is a matter in which one should speak out. An intensively active minority, in favor of adopting an unwise policy, may win through the failure of the members of the majority, though opposed to the policy, publicly to declare themselves and to take the trouble to give effect to their opinions by their votes.

A minority like this, conceiving that it is moved by a moral issue, loses its sense of proportion and sacrifices other issues, no matter how vital to the Nation. Such minority visits with its condign punishment all public servants who oppose it on this issue, however useful to the State they may be. I would not impeach the high-minded motives of the great body of those who support national prohibition. It does awaken one's protest, how-ever, to note the manner in which the ordinary type of politician becomes a prohibitionist because he fears the balance of power that an active political minority may wield against his political fortunes. In the past he may have been subservient to the liquor dealers; in the present his practices may completely refute the sincerity of the principles he advocates; but he and men of his ilk would recklessly and selfishly hurry us into an irretrievable national blunder.

The regulation of the sale and use of intoxicating liquor should be retained by the States. They can experiment and improve. They have full power and the Federal Government has helped them by making it a Federal offense to import liquor into their borders, if they forbid it.

If the power of regulation is irrevocably committed to the National Government, the next generation will live deeply to regret it.

For these reasons, therefore, first, because a permanent national liquor law in many communities will prove unenforceable for lack of local public sympathy; second, because attempted enforcement will require an enormous force of Federal policemen and detectives, giving undue power to a sinister and partisan subordinate of the national administration; and, third, because it means an unwise structural change in the relations between the people of the States and the Central Government and a strain to the integrity of the Union, I am opposed to a national prohibition amendment.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S VETO OF VOLSTEAD ACT

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning without my signature H. R. 6810, "An act to prohibit intoxicating beverages and to regulate the manufacture, production, use, and sale of high-proof spirits for other than beverage purposes, and to insure an ample supply of alcohol and promote its use in scientific research and in the development of fuel, dye, and other lawful industries."

The subject matter treated in this measure deals with two distinct phases of the prohibition legislation. One part of the act under consideration seeks to enforce war-time prohibition. The other provides for the enforcement which was made necessary by the adoption of the constitutional amendment. I object to and approve that part of this legislation with reference to warcan not approve that part of this legislation with reference to wartime prohibition. It has to do with the enforcement of an act which was passed by reason of the emergencies of the war, and whose objects have been satisfied in the demobilization of the Army and Navy, and whose repeal I have already sought at the hands of Congress. Where the purposes of particular legislation arising out of war emergency have been satisfied, sound public policy makes clear the reason and necessity for repeal.

It will not be difficult for Congress in considering this important matter to separate these two questions and effectively to legislate regarding them, making the proper distinction between tem-late regarding them, making the proper distinction between temporary causes which arose out of war-time emergencies and those like the constitutional amendment of prohibition, which is now a part of the fundamental law of the country. In all matters having to do with the personal habits and customs of large numbers of our people, we must be certain that the established processes of legal change are followed. In no other way can the salutary object sought to be accomplished by great reforms of this character be made satisfactory and permanent.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 27, 1919.

It is unfortunate indeed that the people of our country failed to accept the leadership of such distinguished Executives as former President Taft and former President Wilson back in 1918. Had their leadership been accepted instead of the leadership of the Anti-Saloon League, America would not be confronted with its many social, economic, and industrial problems to-day.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy indeed to be able to stand on the floor of this Congress and vote to give the people of this country the right to again determine their attitude upon this question of prohibition.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, it is of the highest importance that we make as much progress as we can with this tax bill. I have consulted with the majority and minority leaders, and I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS-THE REVENUE BILL OF 1932

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, when we are informed by the Secretary of the Treasury that an excise tax on foreign petroleum will not bring any more than $5,000,000 a year, and then when we are also informed on the same high authority that the various taxes suggested will provide $5,000,000 more than is really needed, it is quite evident that there must be some motive behind these statements. The Treasury Department, under its former as well as its present Secretary, has been opposed to various measures for protection of the American petroleum industry against unfair competition of foreign oil which now enters duty free to the immense profit of a few great oil-importing concerns. Since Congress has the right to know just what influences are estimate of returns from corporation taxes for 1926; it made being brought to bear upon any proposed legislation, surely one may be allowed to inquire whether it is Mr. Mills, the Secretary of the Treasury, who is making these suggestions or whether it is Mr. Mills, an otherwise interested party and the opponent of the restoration of a great American industry.

The superiority of a tariff or an excise tax on foreign petroleum and its refined products over many of the forms of sales tax now advocated ought to be self-evident. While it is not a matter of simple arithmetic, it does not involve any higher mathematics. The Federal Treasury would rereceive the revenues from whatever tax was levied on these foreign products, such as possibly 4 cents on gasoline, 2 cents on crude, fuel, and gas oils, and so forth. While no one could exactly estimate the amount of these which would be thus imported, I do not believe any oil expert would seriously challenge the statement that importation would not greatly decrease. Even if it did fall behind the 105,000,000 barrels of imported oil and refined products which entered this country at the very time that American producers had curtailed their production 109,000,000 barrels below the figures of the previous year, it would still be sufficiently large to net a pleasant revenue.

Any reduction in the importation of foreign oil would be compensated by the increased production of American petroleum, which pays heavy State taxes and also pays to the Federal Government large sums in corporation taxes, income taxes, and so forth. Those taxes have not been very considerable in the past few years when the foreign oil dominated the American market. If once fair competition is assured, however, they should increase greatly. Few tax proposals have had this form of adjustment by which the Federal Treasury profits and the State treasuries equally profit while an American industry is restored.

It is no argument against an excise tax to suggest that representatives of the Treasury Department do not expect it would produce large returns. In the words of the present Speaker of the House, made at the hearing of the Ways and Means Committee in considering the revenue revision bill of 1927-28, quoted on page 211 of the public hearings:

I might suggest, with reference to that, that the Treasury view-point with reference to rates and what should be taxed and what should not be taxed is not always persuasive.

The justification for this attitude toward Treasury estimates, as well as the justification of the skepticism with which we might view any statement of the Treasury on the proposed excise tax on petroleum, might be found in the following statement showing a comparison of anticipated and actual Government revenues as set up by the Treasury

The second secon

Individual income taxes estimated at	603, 800, 000
Actual collections	745, 392, 481

Total internal-revenue taxes underestimated	56, 000, 000
The 1927 actual surplus exceeded the estimate by	252, 000, 000

The Treasury Department was only wrong by $223,000,000 in its estimate of the 1926 internal-revenue receipts; it was only wrong by the trifling sum of $55,000,000 in its overof income taxes for that year.

The Treasury Department rather surpassed itself in its estimates for 1927. The actual surplus for that year exceeded the Treasury estimate by $252,000,000. Throughout the record we may note that the Treasury Department has rarely been optimistic. Its mistakes have usually been underestimates just as in this estimate of the possible receipts from the excise tax on foreign petroleum. An underestimate of $5,000,000 on corporation taxes, of $57,000,000 on individual income taxes, of $81,000,000 on back taxes, of $27,000,000 on miscellaneous internal revenue, and of $56,-000,000 on total internal-revenue taxes, are rather concrete illustrations of the tendency of Treasury Department experts to take a pessimistic view of any potential receipts.

The figures used in this statement, it should be noted, are for the years 1926 and 1927. Those were reasonably normal years. They were not characterized by stock-market crashes and depressions such as might make difficult any fair estimate for a more recent period. Business was reasonably stable and the available statistical material was not subject to such serious discount as might characterize similar data to-day. And yet, in those comparatively normal years the Treasury Department did not suggest any skillful marksmanship in hitting the target at which it aimed. It is a reasonable inference that the same expert opinions offered in regard to the possibilities of an excise tax on foreign petroleum are scarcely more accurate. They are probably just as pessimistic and as subject to this tendency to underestimate as the general reckonings made by Treasury officials.

FOREIGN LOANS

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, in conformity with the statement recently made I am going to devote myself, I hope, for a brief period, but I fear not, to a discussion of the foreign loans and the investigation recently held by the Finance Committee in regard to the foreign loans.

Mr. President, the story of our foreign loans is a sordid tale, at once grotesque and tragic. The picture presented by the testimony in the recent investigation under the Senate resolution introduced by me was by no means complete, but for the first time in our legislative history there were disclosed certain ugly facts which enabled us fairly to understand and thoroughly to resent what has been done to the investing American public. Within any ordinary time limits no investigation could uncover all details, and the purpose of the author of the resolution was, without expense or cost to the Government, with celerity to develop enough to indicate the tortuous ways of the security seller, the wrong done the unhappy buyer, and then, although the past might be remediless, by wise legislation to endeavor to prevent a recurrence in the future. The investigation of these foreign loans was unique in one aspect. It is the only investigation of consequence and importance ever carried on by the Senate without the expenditure of a dollar for assistants or expert aid. The small cost of this investigation has been solely for shorthand reporters and the telegrams which may have been sent by the chairman of the Finance Committee. No attorney was employed, no expert or technician assisted, and no aid of any kind or any character was paid for in the investigation, which in its sensational developments finally enabled our people to know how they had been separated by clever manipulators from their savings and which by its disclosures should be far-reaching in its results. I wish at the first opportunity that has been mine very gratefully to acknowledge my obligation to the members of the press, and particularly the younger members, who in their zeal for the truth and their enthusiasm for a just cause rendered me invaluable service. Without them the results attained never could have been accomplished. I never can forget the fine spirit with which these gentlemen, recognizing the difficulties under which we labored, gave so lavishly of their time and their effort that a dazed people, whose credulity had been played upon and whose pockets had been picked, might at least learn something of how it had been done. To the present Secretary of Commerce, the Hon. Robert P. Lamont, I am indebted for most courteous and helpful cooperation in all that I asked of him. The attitude of his department during this investigation stands in sharp contrast to that of another department of our Covernment.

Under existing circumstances the investigation, of course, was far from complete, but sufficient has been developed to enable us readily and logically to fill in the gaps and paint the complete picture. The loans, their extraordinary amounts, the mode in which all risks were passed on to our people, and the profits appropriated by our bankers; the utterly unrestrained duping of investors, the smug in some degree shown by the testimony and afford us the highlights from which may be illumined the spaces between, and from which with accuracy we may understand how the game was played with a gullible people and the stakes appropriated by the supermen of finance.

Practically every State in the Union has now a blue-sky law, by which the State seeks to protect the investing public. It is only in the Federal Government where high finance in investments has been unrestrained. The sale of foreign securities was not only unrestrained by our Government, but the peculiar system adopted by the State Department enabled international bankers to foster sales, and either by direct reference or a mere statement of the fact to convey the impression that their securities were of a character satisfactory to our Government. For many years the State Department has asserted its practice to be one of noninterference. It has neither affirmatively approved nor disapproved loans made by international bankers abroad. In most instances, however, the international banker has advised the State Department of his intention to make a foreign loan, and under the fixed policy of the department has received a response stating merely "The Department of State offers no objection." The attitude of the department, as I understand it, has been that it has nothing whatever to do with loans abroad, even to governments, unless political reasons intervene. Of course, to investors, the statement, accurate in letter, that the particular investment had been submitted to the State Department and our Government had "no objection," was quite persuasive, and the ordinary American laboring still under the delusion that he participated by virtue of his citizenship in the Republic and that his Government would protect his interests as well as those of international bankers, fondly believed that if the State Department had no objection to his purchase of foreign securities his rights had been safeguarded. How his credulity was imposed upon, and how illusory was his belief concerning the protecting arm of his Government, his present plight demonstrates.

Prior to 1914 our experience as international bankers had been negligible. Suddenly we became a creditor nation. The banking houses of the Old World gave place to those of the new. Instead of the great English financiers ever in the front, the American house of Morgan took preeminence. This was the beginning of its great power, which has now so expanded that in the presence of its members the worshipful tread carefully and reverently. It finances not one government but many. Its knowledge is so omniscient and its power so great that without criticism, upon the theory of capacity to pay, it could lend to Italy $100,000,000 at 7 per cent immediately after the United States Government had settled its Italian debt for 23 cents on the dollar in longdeferred payments, with interest at one-eighth of 1 per cent. In justice, however, it should be remarked that in the sorry competition for South American loans, it was testified that the house of Morgan and Kuhn, Loeb & Co. did not par-

With the world dominance of American bankers came the like meteoric rise of the American dollar. Money was plentiful. The people found themselves transformed overnight into investors. The mad orgy was on. Speculation ran riot; and speculation was encouraged not only by bankers greedy for profits but by the very Government itself. Of course, in one aspect the people themselves were to blame; but in another every rule of fair play, every tenet of fiduciary relation, every principle of forthrightness and honesty acquit those ignorant of finance who had been taught to rely upon their bankers for advice and aid and transfer the guilt to the men who knew, to the international bankers who coined the ignorance and confidence of their customers.

In a very recent and most interesting book by Thomas F. Lee entitled "Latin American Problems" the author describes what subsequently occurred in Latin America and what in only less degree is true concerning our foreign loans elsewhere. Mr. Lee says:

But with little experience in lending money to foreign peoples we became a creditor nation; the "Coolidge bull market" en-complacency of the great financial prestidigitators, are all gulfed us; optimism ran riot; we discounted the future and headed in some degree shown by the testimony and afford us the on into our present embarrassment. During that unhappy period of spiritual and financial inflation perhaps the most difficult task of the international banker or of any investment banker was to find something in the way of reasonably safe securities to hand out in return for the dollars of an eager and confiding clientele. Our best professional economists had definitely stated that we had entered an entirely new economic era wherein most familiar laws (with the exception of the law of gravity) might be relegated to the limbo of things obsolete. It seemed unnecessary to look for anything except the element of profit. The banker's agent in the republics to the south of us, prodded by his principal to bring home something more to sell, was more interested in securing the loan at any price and on any terms than in its necessity on the one hand and the security of the bond buyer on the other.

It was interesting to observe the lofty tone adopted by our international bankers when testifying before the Finance Committee and their constant emphasis upon morality. Their professions did them infinite credit, of course. The story of what transpired, unfortunately, is somewhat at variance with these professions. They told us how good the loans were that they had made to foreign governments and to corporations abroad. They asserted, with a convincing emphasis to those accustomed to obeisance in their presence, that all the loans made were good and all would be paid. Fervently do we hope their predictions will be fulfilled, but the American who has put his all into beautifully colored lithographs that are promises to pay of a government which has defaulted in its interest may be pardoned a bit of skepticism.

We are assured that the governmental loans made to Europe by international bankers, through American investors, are not doubtful and every obligation will be faithfully met. The only bad loans of European governments apparently are those held by the Government of the United States for all the people of the United States. These may require readjustment, as our President says, and already we have granted one moratorium. No such contingencies, according to our international bankers, confront the loans made by them. Our people, all of them, have had imposed upon them one moratorium, an additional burden of $250,-000,000, which have been utilized to pay short-term securities of international bankers. The high moralists among these bankers will doubtless persuade our Government, if essential to protect their own holdings, to grant further moratoria, and, indeed, if they can have their way, to scale down the debts due to all of the people of the United States that they may realize their own; and then, with statesmanlike seriousness, we will debate again the balancing of our Budget and the necessity for additional taxes upon our people.

The international bankers are purchasers of foreign securities only for sufficient time to enable them, at a profit, to pass them on to the general public. It is a beautiful system for them, out of which, of course, because of their acumen, their ability, their morality, their high sense of service to the American public, they have made their enormous fortunes. The system, in brief, is his: A foreign country desires a loan of $100,000,000. Arrangements are made with one of our international bankers in respect to the loan. A contract is duly entered into by which the international banker buys the loan, say, at 90. He immediately takes in 1, 2, 3, or 4 of his associates at a step-up price of 91 or 92. The few associates who thus become a part of the loan select a larger body and a step-up price of 1, 2, 3 points is made.

The international banker to whom first is intrusted the loan makes his profit on the first step-up price to the very limited 2, 3, or 4 who join with him. This small coterie then make their step-up price of 1, 2, or 3 points, as the case may be, to the larger syndicate. The original international banker has thus relieved himself of responsibility and made his profit. He participates then in the second profit, and the second group have relieved themselves and made their profit in unloading upon the larger coterie. No liability now attaches to any of the original promoters of the loan. The larger group then formed allocate proportions of the loan to bankers and bond salesmen throughout the Nation. This last group may consist of some hundreds or even a thousand bankers in the United States. To them the issue is sold at a fixed price and they are to dispose of it at a fixed | higher price, which will enable them to make their profit. In the various profits the original houses participate, and the original houses, if of sufficient strength, can of course allocate to the ultimate group the proportions they assign with certainty of acceptance of these proportions, and then finally receive the ultimate purchase price. This mode may be varied at times with fewer syndicates. The spread, as the international bankers term it, between the original price, say, of 90 and the ultimate selling price, say, of 96 or 98, varies in different loans. The small banker, of course, is not crudely coerced into taking the allotment, which is given to him by the big New York international banker, but the small fellow knows full well that if he does not take what is allotted to him he will have his difficulties in the future. It is a perfectly safe game for the big international banker with his enormous connections, in which he really can not lose, and the profits from it are staggering.

During the progress of the investigation I received a number of letters from those who were interested in small banks, who complained bitterly of the compulsion put upon them. They told of how they had received allocations of foreign loans, how they accepted them because of abject fear, and the dire results that had resulted. I quote one letter, deleting names, that will indicate the results of the system:

The time seems opportune to put a curb on the bank "racket" of underwriting and bond selling.

And if ever there was a racket imposed upon the American people, almost worse than any other racket that late years have brought upon us from one cause or another, that racket is the racket that has been played upon American investors and those who were little able to stand the expense by the international bankers with the securities they retailed to our people.

I do not know-

Said this writer-

what caused the depression, but I think that the cupidity of bankers coupled with their crass ignorance of precedent and political economy contributed largely. It may interest you to have a good example of distribution of foreign bonds; indeed, of all bonds.

The capital of this bank-

It was a little country institution that was serving its patrons, and following its little way joyously, until compelled and coerced to take, at the hands of these great New York bankers, their allotment of foreign bonds—

The capital of this bank was $125,000, and, according to the books, they had a surplus of something in the neighborhood of $250,000. Thus the foreign bonds held by them exceeded the entire capital and surplus.

It seems to me incredible that the officers of this bank would select such securities of their own free will. Apologetic statements of their friends indicate that they were coerced by interested banks, and this is a subject that must engage the attention of the committee.

There are many ways in which the profits of the international banker are enhanced. He becomes the agent for a particular country concerning its securities. He deals with the sinking fund and retirement of bonds, for which, of course, he receives his compensation. In his capacity as representative, for what he does undoubtedly he receives his pay.

A system of late has grown up in this country under which oftentimes those who control the powerful banking institutions interest themselves as well in investment trusts. These trusts primarily were supposed to enable the investor to obtain technical advice and expert assistance, which, of course, the ordinary investor lacked. Without other knowledge on his part the investor approached the investment trust to secure his savings and to invest them in such fashion as to enable him to receive a modest income. The investor bargains for the disinterested and honest advice and assistance which it is held out to him he hires when he deals with the investment trust. He learns in a period such as this, to his cost, that his investment trust, after all, was simply a part of the big international bank, and that this bank in some instances transferred a foreign loan from itself, at a profit, to its own investment trust, which in turn palms it off on the unwary customer.

Mr. John T. Flynn, an author of note upon investment trusts, has aptly described them to me in a recent communication:

The mechanism of investment banking houses is devised to take care of every phase of the business from selling a country or a corporation the idea of issuing bonds right up to selling the bonds themselves to the ultimate investor. One of the shameful phases of this excessive organization is the manner in which the investment banker has wandered across the line into the territory of the buyer and taken possession of the buyer's own machinery for buying, so that the investment banker finds himself on both sides of the bargain—representing the seller on one side of the counter and the buyer on the other. If a typical bond issuing and selling adventure can be followed from its inception to its very end it would be found that the investment banker has managed through many devices to control many of the instruments which the investor relies upon for exercising his choice. One of these, of course, is the investment trust.

The investment trust is organized to represent the buyer of securities—the distracted, bewildered, small investor who, in his ignorance of securities, goes to the investment trust under the impression that it represents his interests alone. It is one of the dark spots in the history of the last half-dozen years in this country that the investment banker—the merchant of securities—was permitted to take possession of the investment trust. Of course, in the portfolios of the investment trusts were found foreign bonds, and in many cases foreign bonds issued or marketed by the investment bankers who had organized and who controlled the investment trusts.

It is not easy to trace the influence of the sponsoring bankers in the selection of the foreign securities purchased by their trusts. As a matter of fact foreign securities were issued in large amounts by a limited group of investment houses. These same investment houses had investment trusts which they managed directly or indirectly. We can find in the portfolio of a given trust bonds marketed by the house sponsoring the trust and also bonds and stocks issued by other bankers who also had trusts, in whose trusts will be found the securities of the first bankers. In other words, there is at least some ground for suspecting that there was a good deal of back scratching by investment bankers and their investment trusts in the purchase of securities.

The investment trust, as thus described by Mr. Flynn, is simply another device of financial cajolery the ultimate result of which leaves the investor holding the bag.

The international banker constantly and unctuously dwells upon his extreme care in making foreign loans, his meticulous investigations, his yardstick of productivity, balancing budgets, and the like; but the indubitable fact established by the evidence is that in the keen competition among bankers for loans the rivalry was so pronounced that precautions and productivity were forgotten and only profits remembered.

During the period after the war and until the panic of the latter part of 1929 international bankers reversed the financial rule of the centuries, and in international loans the policy as described by Mr. Jones, of the Commerce Department, and others became one of the lender seeking the borrower rather than the borrower seeking the lender. Of course, under a system such as this, with lenders on the doorsteps of borrowers, pleading and begging for the opportunity to make a loan, and none too scrupulous as to how the privilege was obtained, it becomes obvious that the vaunted investigation of loans by bankers was little heeded. The bankers had just one thought and that was profits. The money so plenteous in the United States Curing that period, the anxiety of those who had little safely to place it in permanent investments, the peculiar financial intoxication which had communicated to all classes of society and all kinds of people, of course, contributed to the result and made it very easy for those international bankers, who were thinking of profits alone, to pass on to an unsuspecting public, but too anxious to invest, practically any kind of a loan under any circumstances.

The testimony of disinterested witnesses was ample to prove the kind of competition among international bankers, but we are not dependent upon these disinterested witnesses alone for our proof. The situation was very aptly described he sells them.

by Mr. Thomas W. Lamont, of J. P. Morgan & Co., in a speech made in 1927, the following excerpt of which is in the record. Mr. Lamont then said—and his word, of course, will be received with absolute verity by every man within the sound of my voice and every individual who in high position constitutes a part of American citizenship. Mr. Lamont says—and this, of course, we may take as absolute, and disregard, if we please, Mr. Jones, Mr. Corliss, and the various others who testified before the committee as to the fact—Mr. Lamont says, sir:

From the point of view of the American investor it is obviously necessary—

This was in 1927, by the way, and he did not appear to recollect it very keenly when the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] called it to his attention; but in 1927 he said:

From the point of view of the American investor it is obviously necessary to scan the situation with increasing circumspection and to avoid rash or excessive lending. I have in mind the reports that I have recently heard of American bankers and firms competing on almost a violent scale for the purpose of obtaining loans peting on almost a violent scale for the purpose of obtaining loans in various foreign money markets overseas.

Naturally it is a tempting thing for certain of the European governments to find a horde of American bankers sitting on their doorsteps offering them money. It is rather demoralizing for municipalities and corporations in the same countries to have money pressed upon them. That sort of competition tends to insecurity and unsound practice. The American investor is an intelligent individual and can be relied upon to discriminate. Yet, in the first instance, such discrimination is the province of the banker who buys the goods rather than of the investor to whom

I may be accused of special pleading in uttering this warning, yet a warning needs to be given against indiscriminate lending and indiscriminate borrowing.

This the language of Mr. Thomas Lamont, of J. P. Morgan & Co. Reverently I utter the words, sir; but this the language of the house of Morgan in 1927.

What an indictment by one of their own is this of the American banker! Competing on a violent scale to obtain loans in foreign countries! A horde of American bankers sitting on the doorsteps of European governments offering them money! Of course, it was a tempting thing for European governments, but what will be said of American international bankers engaging in practices of this sort, taking anything which might be offered for the profit that was in it, immediately to transport it across the sea and then in ambiguous prospectuses, in some instances designed to deceive, by virtue of their very reputation as investment bankers, soaking the American public.

The blame for what has happened may in part be laid at the door of the American public. The international banker excuses himself because the public was overrich and mad to invest its money, and the banker asserts he but afforded the opportunity. But Americans have been taught not only confidence in their bankers, but something like reverence for them. Our people, in all matters relating to finances, over a long period had regarded the banker with a childlike confidence, and sought on occasions when any venture was taken with the family hoard his advice and counsel. The banker himself with money pouring in, with his fortune increasing beyond his wildest imagination, with his opportunities for getting rich overnight, and what he deemed his proud position in the financial world, began to regard himself as a superman, and soon in his egotism became convinced that the Lord had endowed him with a peculiar prescience and ability, which raised him into a royally created class, far more fortunate than his fellows, and far more blessed by a discriminating and wise Creator. He became convinced he was of finer clay than ordinary humanity. He was a self-made man who adored his creator. It is little to be wondered at if the ordinary investor with his modest life savings approached in some trepidation this gorgeous creature, begged the swollen banker for advice and counsel. and with gratitude accepted his direction. The poor investor, engrossed in his daily tasks, saw only one of God's anointed aiding him in preparing for a precarious future; but the anointed, none too proud to take any sum from any person upon any representation, thought only of the profits accruing. The international banker was the fount of all wisdom until the latter part of 1929. No economic problem but he could solve, no possible crisis but he could successfully meet and master. The hats of our people were doffed to this Jovelike creation. And then came the rude awakening, the smash of October, 1929, the repeated breaks thereafter, the ruin and the devastation all about, and the international banker stripped of his glamour and his pretense stood stark and naked before an astonished and a horrified people.

I append here a statement of the American holdings of European government issues showing their current value four months ago and their depreciation. Inserted in this list is the old Russian folly, merely that it may have a place in our story. The German lendings, some of that nation's outstanding citizens have recently complained, were made virtually because American bankers implored them to accept the loans. In this list are but 16 countries, which show actual cash invested by the public of the United States of $1,600,000,000 and a depreciation of $742,000,000.

The purposes of some of the loans to Germany by these international bankers seem incredible in view of the bankers' oft-repeated protestations. Loans were made for the construction of workmen's dwellings, for every conceivable kind of private enterprise, for the erection of bathing facilities, parks, playgrounds, and even apartment houses. Some were made to public utilities, electric roads, and so forth; some to manufacturing plants engaged in competition with American enterprise. Imagine these smug international bankers prating in our country of individual initiative, strenuously demanding the divorcement of government and business, forbidding with their influence and power Government operation of what even was built with the people's money, taking with avidity loans upon every conceivable activity of government abroad, while denouncing any kind of that governmental activity at home. They were willing for the money there was in it to forego the principles abroad which they maintained with such vigor at home, or they had no such principles at all.

The depreciation in the German securities is exceeded by that of some other loans. It will be observed that Bulgarian securities have dropped in value 62 per cent, Hungarian 60 per cent, and those of some other nations in very large percentages as indicated.

The bankers were not without warning concerning the German loans. Unfortunately these warnings did not permeate to the investing public but in good faith the bankers selling these loans to the general public should have warned their customers.

In 1926 the then Secretary of State wrote to the international bankers concerning their German loans. In this letter, which does Mr. Kellogg infinite credit, he told the international bankers that they should—Examine with particular care all German financing * * * with a view to ascertaining whether the loan proceeds are being used for productive and self-supporting objects * * *.

He added:

In this connection I feel that I should inform you that the department is advised that the German Federal authorities themselves are not disposed to view with favor the indiscriminate placing of German loans in the American market, particularly when the borrowers are German municipalities and the purposes are not productive.

And then, after referring to the Dawes plan and the attitude of the agent general and the transfer committee, he said:

It seems to the department, therefore, that before issuing such loans you should inform yourselves whether the transfer committee will place any priorities or obstacles in the way of transferring funds for the payment of principal and interest and that you should make clear to your clients the full situation.

Again on November 3, 1926, S. Parker Gilbert, agent general for reparation payments, in respect to certain German loans wrote:

I am constantly amazed at the recklessness of American bankers in offering to the public the securities of German States on the basis of the purely German view of article 248 of the treaty of Versailles.

And in this letter Mr. Gilbert quoted from Sir William Leese, in which the latter held that certain prospectuses of loans were "substantially untrue and misleading."

Then in October, 1927, Mr. Gilbert presented a memorandum for the German Government with which the international bankers were familiar. In this memorandum Mr. Gilbert said:

I have attempted to bring together in the foregoing pages the accumulating evidences of overspending and overborrowing on the part of the German public authorities, and some of the indications of artificial stimulation and overexpansion that are already manifesting themselves.

These tendencies, if allowed to continue unchecked, are almost certain, on the one hand, to lead to severe economic reaction and depression, and are likely, on the other, to encourage the impression that Germany is not acting with due regard to her reparation obligations.

These warnings were given to the international bankers not only by an official abroad, but from the American Secretary of State. The Secretary of State in unmistakable terms told the bankers they should make clear to their clients the full situation in reference to German loans. The bankers did nothing of the sort. Their prospective profits outweighed their sense of duty. The empty pockets of American investors who trusted them are their indictment.

It may be argued that the warnings were in respect to Germany alone, because of the complicated situation in reference to reparations, and this is quite so. But even this warning went unheeded and never was passed on to the poor purchasers. It would have been well if the State Department, instead of passively encouraging, had sounded its warning concerning loans of other countries; but since Kellogg's letter the department has been mute, and its gigantic energies have not been employed in behalf of simple, ordinary American investors.

From 1914 to 1930 nearly $7,000,000,000 of European securities, governmental and corporate, were offered in the United States. In round numbers two and one-half billion of these are yet outstanding, and upon them there is a depreciation from par of nearly $800,000,000.

LATIN AMERICAN LOANS

Latin America, representing a large part of our continent and all of South America, notwithstanding its proximity, is little understood by our people. There ought to be between the people of this territory and our own the closest connections and the most cordial relations. These should exist first in our personal relations, for common interest binds us; and otherwise mere neighborliness dictates that the races south of us and our own should be closely knit. Latin America presents a fertile field for honest business and the finest opportunity for legitimate investment. But the business should be honest and the investment fair. These can be helped and fostered on our part by cultivating international relations that command confidence and respect, rather than relations which arouse suspicion and antagonism.

The investigation of Latin American lending by international bankers has been of inestimable aid in reestablishing the good opinion of our people formerly held by our neighbors. What they as peoples saw and felt in the financial transactions with our international bankers had led them to believe that the methods of some of these bankers were the methods of the whole American people, and that by our silence and apparent acquiescence we condoned anything done by men of our race for profit. For the first time, without fear or favor, we have laid bare, at least in some measure, the financial operations of international bankers of the United States with Latin America. We have stripped some of the hypocrisy from the near money great and have held up to the pitiless light of publicity some of their operations. In this we have performed not only a service to our own but no less a service, highly appreciated I know from my mail, to our Latin American brethren.

We endeavored by the testimony not only to prove defaults but to lay bare some of the reasons; and, in fairness, we showed not only the ultimate blame but some of the predisposing causes. We dealt with equal justice with those who took our money in foreign lands and those of our own who gave it to them. In government loans, of course, with wisdom and prudence exercised by both borrower and lender, there should be no defaults.

It is asserted, of course, by the agents for these loans, and by their apologists, here and elsewhere, that the defaults are due to the general world depression. It would be folly to say that this depression had not its influence, nor would any fair-minded individual claim that world conditions had not contributed to the defaults. But there was another contributing cause as well, and that was the mad anxiety of some international bankers to obtain foreign loans at all hazards and the ease with which the American investing public could be imposed upon. A few illustrations illumine the text. In one of the loans to Brazil by Dillon, Read & Co., eight millions were presumably to be used for the electrification of a railroad operated as a subsidiary by the Government. Just think of it, the electrification of a railroad owned by the Government! Suppose one suggested here that that should be done. What a chorus of dissent would be met from these gentlemen engaged in the international banking business. In the prospectus of the loan issued in 1922 under the title "Purpose of Issue" (and it must be remembered that upon the prospectus the loan was sold to the American people) it is stated:

The proceeds of the loan are to be used in part to provide for the electrification of the suburban division of the railway, which is owned by the Government of Brazil and is without bonded debt.

This prospectus, dated June 1, 1922, was for a loan upon bonds due in 30 years, bearing interest at 7 per cent per annum. Up to this time there has been no electrification of the particular railway.

The Bolivian loan of 1922 was made to bolster up a totter- | excellent work of Mr. Lee, to which I have referred. These ing régime. The later loan was at first disapproved by our Department of Commerce, and from the testimony that has been adduced the most casual investigation would have demonstrated its risk and perilous possibilities.

The very method in which the Peruvian loan was made, of which more hereafter, would put the merest tyro upon inquiry, and in addition one of the experts of the banking house offering the loan reported against it, and a well-known Peruvian in great detail advised all bankers that the defaulted loans should not be made.

It has been developed in respect to some of the Brazilian loans that in order that a favorable balance might be shown milreis of Brazil were converted into dollars, and in the conversion the milreis was computed actually at more than two and a half times its value.

In Chile one of the banks participating in some of the loans was a party to frenzied financial jugglery, which deprived Chile of the very revenue necessary to meet its external obligations.

The risk of the Colombian loans a schoolboy there could have understood, but as Mr. Corliss, of the Department of Commerce testified, representatives of international bankers were seeking the privilege of lending. He says at one time at least 20 of these representatives were competing with one another

The outstanding obligations of Latin America, which are held by people in the United States, aggregate, in round numbers, $1,600,000,000. Their market value on the 1st day of January, 1932, was $422,000,000, a depreciation of $1,175,-000,000. The following is a list of these obligations, the figures of which are the latest at hand and from the very figures I append without reading, if I may have permission to do so.

Mr. JOHNSON. The bonds which are in default in Latin America with the banking agency, the date of the default and the amount outstanding, are as set forth in a table which I have. Here, then, in detail is the statement of each particular issue in South America that is now in default, and this I ask permission to insert in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON. The enormous sum of $815,468,300 is thus in default. It is likely there will be some recovery of a part of this amount, but at best it will be only a part. That there should have been unloaded bonds of this character upon the small investor in our country, upon the representations of international bankers, whose fortunes exceed the wildest dreams of avarice, is appalling.

It is utterly inconceivable that international bankers did not know what the best-informed public opinion of Latin America was fully cognizant of. The bankers simply did not heed the facts. They gave no thought to the impoverishment of American citizens who trusted them. They acted, apparently, only for the profits. They were perfectly willing by their loans to maintain dictators in power and to be party to the suppression of every natural right of citizens of South American republics. Indeed, they contributed the money, in some instances, for the destruction of liberty itself, and heavy upon them is the responsibility not only for the financial ruin of a vast number of American citizens but for the destruction of personal and political rights in Latin American states. Because the consequences of the actions of some of our international bankers are so succinctly and ably stated by the Bolivian ambassador to this country, I quote his letter to me, written during the investigation and made a part of the record:

LEGACION DE BOLIVIA Washington, January 25, 1932.

The Hon. HIRAM JOHNSON,

The Hon. HIRAM JOHNSON,

The Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSON: I am inclosing my article, Three Revolutions, which was published in the Washington Post a year ago, and I would appreciate it very much if you could be kind enough to have this article read at the next meeting of the Finance and Investigation Committee of the Senate and to have it included in the minutes, so it may serve as a reminder when any regulation should be studied toward checking the granting of loans, when I hope that my plea for the absolute refraining from making loans to dictatorial governments will not be ignored.

Lending money can only be detrimental to all parties concerned Lending money can only be detrimental to all parties concerned when the governments are running their countries without allowing freedom of public opinion or even permitting their congressmen to express their views regarding the loans. When the 1922 loan was contracted with Bolivia there were hundreds of people deported and jailed, and the press was absolutely muzzled during the negotiations, and when the 1923 loan was agreed upon even senators were persecuted and confined when they attempted to combat this herowing.

combat this borrowing.

It was in this way that American bankers helped such governments to remain in power and ruin their countries financially. The life of many a dictatorial and corrupt government has been prolonged or rescued by American bankers, and the money supposed to have been borrowed for the construction of public utilities. ties has been squandered upon mercenary supporters and spies.

Hoping this may be of use to you and congratulating you again upon the most laudatory results being obtained by your arousing of public interest in these matters of such vital importance to both North and South America, I beg to remain,

Your most sincere friend and admirer,

The Peruvians have a similar story to tell, which is well related by the present Peruvian ambassador to the Argentine Republic. I quote his letter to me during the progress of the investigation, and which was made a part of the record:

BUENOS AIRES, January 12, 1932.

Senator Johnson,

Capitol, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have followed with very keen interest and attention the spectacular investigation of the sens regarding Latin American loans, specially Peru.

I am at present ambassador of Peru to the Argentine Republic, but for the last 11 years I was living in the United States and in Europe. Leguia deported me in September. 1919, and I was forced to live in exile till the end of his government, August, 1930.

As conditions in Peru were very familiar to me, I did everything to show the bankers and the American people the serious harm which every new loan inferred to Peru.

thing to show the bankers and the American people the serious harm which every new loan inferred to Peru.

The New York Journal of Commerce, the Wall Street Journal, the Chicago Tribune, La Prensa of New York have published during the last 11 years many articles in which I exhibited the danger of the uncontrolled debauchery of Leguia's government supported by a series of unjustified and onerous loans.

In the year 1926, and as a warning to the heavers who were

In the year 1926, and as a warning to the bankers who were trying to float the $30,000,000 loan of that year, I sent to the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, the National City Bank, Seligman & Co., Grace Co., and many other American concerns interested in Peruvian finance a very clear memorandum showing conditions in Peru and anticipating the future insolvency in which the country had to be thrown if such a loan should be floated. My advice was ignored. I include herewith a copy of said memorandum (1926).

The banker, F. Kent, of the Bankers Trust, went to South America to study financial conditions in Peru. After careful examina-tion of the matter, he expressed an unfavorable opinion with regard to the prospective loans.

Conditions in Peru were well known to the American commercial attaché and officers of the American Embassy in Lima.

I published several articles as a protest against the financial domination of my country and I delivered a lecture in Columbia University, New York City, under the auspices of the Instituto de las Espanas, January, 1928, when I made a public denunciation of the method employed by certain banks while dealing with Peru, and I then predicted the approaching insolvency of my country—victim of a very abusing financialism. But everything was ignored, and the big loan was floated.

Excuse, Mr. Senator, my intruding in this affair, but it is so Excuse, Mr. Senator, my intruding in this affair, but it is so important to the vindication of my country.

I think that this letter will contribute a little to clear some

I authorize you to make use of this letter as you may consider it useful or proper.

Very truly yours,

FELIPE BARREDA. Peruvian Ambassador to the Argentine Republic.

I may add that the article upon the condition of Peru, its finances, its values, and the peril of its loans, was transmitted by the writer of the letter to various international bankers and the full and complete data concerning Peru thus presented may be found at pages 2107, et seq. of the record.

Not only were the facts detailed by these eminent gentlemen within the knowledge of our international bankers but a very distinguished research professor in international finances of Princeton University furnished them additional information. Prof. Edwin Walter Kemmerer, who testified before the committee, was president of a commission of financial advisers to the Bolivian Government in 1927 and made full and complete reports for himself and his commission concerning finances of Bolivia and Chile. These reports recommended the greatest care in regard to future loans, and the whole tenor was that such loans should not be

I refer to these particular matters and these specific loans because they are loans now in default, and because they are leans every penny of which is held by Americans who bought from these international bankers upon representations as to their validity and that they would be paid, when they knew, absolutely knew, they might never be realized.

Mr. Laurence Dennis, a gentleman of rare ability and an author of note, who has recently published a very remarkable volume entitled "Is Capitalism Doomed?" was at one time in the employment of J. & W. Seligman & Co., who sponsored the Peruvian loans that are hereafter referred to. Mr. Dennis spent a long time in Peru and investigated with thoroughness its finances. He stated repeatedly to the Seligman firm that the Peruvian loans were unsound and based his conclusions upon thorough and detailed investigations.

These very brief references to the record are made to demonstrate that there can be no defense of ignorance on the part of international bankers. They had at hand, and actually in their possession, the data proving the unsoundness of the loans they blithely floated in the United States, and they knew exactly what they were doing. If I am correct in these statements, no more scathing arraignment could be made, and that the arraignment is justified no disinterested reader of the record here can deny. Loans were made Latin American countries sometimes to maintain dictators in power, dictators who laughed to scorn every fundamental principle of liberty and every cherished right of peoples. They were sometimes made to go hand in hand with concessions, out of which princely profits might be realized. They were sometimes made upon importunities of the bankers merely to lend. They were sometimes made simply to obtain securities of unproven value, to foist upon the American people, and the methods of thus obtaining doubtful securities violated the plainest concepts of decent business.

That the lenders paid little attention to how the money was expended by the borrowing government is perfectly plain from the testimony. And that all these things contributed to the condition which now exists can not be

But some of our international bankers in order to market their doubtful wares did not depend wholly upon the supposed superiority of their knowledge or the relations which existed between them and their customers. They not only concealed the facts and violated the fiduciary relationship, which should have been held inviolate; but to give a false appearance to the value of some of their loans, they deliberately "rigged" the market. I quote from the testimony of Mr. Dennis, than whom there is no more experienced expert:

There was one thing I do think was particularly wrong, and that is that before some of these weaker Latin American loans were floated the bankers would "rig the market" for a new issue of bonds. That is to say, they would bid up the issue of that country on the New York Stock Exchange three or four points and would sustain an artificial market.

and would sustain an artificial market.

Q. You used the phrase "rigging the market." How did they do that? How do they manipulate it to give a false value?

Mr. Dennis. You simply give orders to a broker to buy bonds. Suppose Peruvian bonds of a certain issue are selling at 84. You have a man to manage your syndicate; your market operations. He will buy at 86, 87, 88, 89, and 90. He will accumulate these bonds. These are not "washed" sales. Of course, "washed" sales are strictly forbidden by the New York law, and no one would make a "washed" sale, because it is a misdemeanor. These are genuine purchases. There is a genuine change of ownership. The man operating for the banker buys these bonds at higher prices until he gets them up to 91 or 92.

Q. He gives more for them than he can buy them for?

Mr. Dennis. Yes. The quotation to-day might be 88. He will

Mr. Dennis. Yes. The quotation to-day might be 88. He will bid 89, and then he will buy to-morrow at 90; all that are offered at 90. Of course, the minute you put in an order to buy, you raise the price, as you bid a little above the market price. If you start buying at the market price, the market price goes up.

Q. Why do they do that?

Mr. DENNIS. So as to create a quotation. The next day the paper comes out and shows those bonds were sold at 89 and then 90. The syndicate operator keeps an order with the broker to purchase those bonds at 91. Of course, no one sells any bonds at 90, because everyone can sell the bonds to the syndicate operator at 91. He keeps the price of the bonds at that level during the duration of the syndicate. He acquires a "long" position in those bonds. He may acquire two or three hundred thousand, or a million dollars' worth of those bonds. Then when the syndicate is closed and they pull the plug out he proceeds to sell those bonds slowly In so doing he may take a loss on these syndicate operations of $200,000 or $300,000. That will be debited against the loan as expenses of the loan.

The circumstances thus related may explain some of the extravagant expenses in connection with the selling of these loans as they appear in tabulated form in the record-

But, during the period of maintaining that fictitious price the bonds are offered to new investors at the offering price. You can not bring out a 6 per cent Peru bond at 91 when other issues of 6 per cent Peruvian bonds are selling at 88. A dealer goes to his clients and says, "Will you buy Peruvian bonds at 91?" The client says, "I can buy them at 88." The bankers have to bring all Peruvian bonds of that class up to 91 in order to offer a new issue at 91. Then, after the bankers have marketed the new issue, they will the plug and left the bonds find their proper level in a they pull the plug and let the bonds find their proper level in a free and open market.

That process is not called "rigging the market" in America, but it has been called "rigging the market" by the Queen's Bench in London.

Q. That is simply a little financial finesse.

Mr. DENNIS. I think it is wrong myself.

Q. What I am curious about is whether or not that is a general practice in reference to these foreign securities.

Mr. Dennis. It has been done quite often. It was done in the Peruvian bonds, and it was done in some others. It is a current practice. They call it "dressing up the market." That is what it is called.

Senator Johnson. For the rest of us.

The means by which some loans were obtained in Latin America were little short of infamous. The Peruvian loans were obtained by the purchase of the son of the President, and the very method should have restrained bankers with regard to either themselves or their clients from even dickering for them. The business was originally initiated by F. J. Lisman & Co., but the negotiations and ultimate consummation were by J. & W. Seligman & Co.

Juan Leguia was the son of the President of Peru. He was paid by Seligman & Co. a sum between four and five hundred thousand dollars after the loans had been obtained. Seligman & Co. claimed that they took over the negotiations from Lisman & Co. with an agreement to pay certain individuals commissions, and that among those who were to be thus paid was Juan Leguia. The extended examination of Mr. Breck, of Seligman & Co., left no doubt in the minds of those who heard it as to why this vast sum was paid to the son of the Peruvian President. Mr. Breck naïvely described the transaction as "illegal enrichment." Mr. Lisman describes it as blackmail. The characterization of it, however, is of little consequence. Whether it be called by one ugly name or another does not in the slightest degree alter the fact. The fact remains that in the mad race for Latin American loans some lenders had neither delicate sensibilities nor any particular scruples.

If this sum had been paid by the international bankers, and they themselves had furnished the money and it was now their loss, we might pass it by with a mere reference; but the bribe, for bribe it was, paid for the privilege of selling unsound Peruvian securities came out of the pockets of innocent American investors.

If a fair-dealing international banker in offering a bond issue had said to the American people that he had been required to pay either as blackmail, nuisance value, or bribery more than half a million dollars to obtain the privilege of marketing the securities, his sales would indeed have been limited.

Juan Leguia's account with Seligman & Co. was furnished to the committee, and it is remarkable that in this account his credits appear to be nearly $900,000. Among the credit items of that account are $60,000 from the National City Bank, $4,000 from the Equitable Trust Co., $10,000 from the Chase National Bank, $22,000 from the Royal Bank of Canada. This itemized account was furnished so late in the proceedings that the items of these credits from other banks are unexplained, and Seligman & Co. claim they have no knowledge of the source of the moneys.

From the statement filed with the committee by J. & W. Seligman & Co. of the issues of loans originated by them, it appears that the first loan of $15,000,000 was offered by Seligman & Co., the National City Co., E. H. Rollins & Sons, Graham Parsons & Co., F. J. Lisman & Co., and Ames, Emerich & Co.; the second loan of $50,000,000 was offered by J. & W. Seligman & Co., the National City Co., Blyth, Witter & Co., the Guaranty Co. of New York, F. J. Lisman & Co., and Central Union Trust Co.; the third loan of approximately $35,000,000 was offered by J. & W. Seligman & Co., the National City Co., Blyth, Witter & Co., Guaranty Co. of New York, F. J. Lisman & Co., and Central Union Trust Co. Of course, it may be that none of those in the original offering syndicate save Seligman & Co. knew of what had transpired in Peru; but to believe this is no tribute to their astuteness and sagacity but an awful wrench to our credulity.

THE BARCO CONCESSION AND THE NATIONAL CITY BANK LOAN TO COLOMBIA

The Government of Colombia granted a 55-year oil concession to Virgilio Barco in 1905. Barco developed the concession to the best of his limited resources but was unable to make a success of it. He came to the United States in 1917 and sold his concession. Subsequently E. L. Doherty purchased a 75 per cent interest in it. On February 2, 1926, the Colombian Government canceled the concession. Just prior to the cancellation the Gulf Oil Co.-the Mellon interests-acquired an option for the purchase of the Doherty interests. The Carib syndicate acquired the other 25 per cent interests. Within a short period after the cancellation the Gulf Co. consummated its purchase. From 1926 the Gulf Co.—that is, the Mellon interests—and the Carib syndicate, which certain witnesses stated they believed to be the Morgan interests, had title to the concession. The decree of cancellation subsequently was affirmed and the matter under Colombian law was taken into the courts there. There was a long delay and the State Department intervened in behalf of the concession owners. The matter thus rested until Doctor Olaya became President of Colombia. In 1930 the National City Bank agreed upon a short-term loan of $20,000,000 with the Government of Colombia. In March, 1931, while a considerable part of the loan had been retained by the National City Bank, a new concession was granted by President Olaya to the South American Petroleum Co., which was owned 75 per cent by the Gulf Oil Co.the Mellon interests-and 25 per cent by the Carib syndicate—supposed to be the Morgan interests.

I deal with this incident with extreme brevity because of the time limit in making this address. I hope some day in the future to deal with it more at length, to show by the map the extent of the particular concession that was granted and the mode in which the original purchase was made. I proceed now with the barest outline of this particular proceeding because it not only interests us from the standpoint of the Government dealing with those who have, but it interests us, too, from the standpoint of the denial to a Senate committee by the Secretary of State of this country of the right of legitimate testimony.

It was essential that this new concession be adopted and ratified by the Colombian Congress. During the session of Congress in 1931 the National City Co. withheld portions of its loan. The State Department intervened in the matter of the loan of the National City Bank and transmitted the views of the Colombian President to the bank officials. President Olaya frequently communicated with Mr. Caffery, the United States minister to Colombia at Bogota, and insisted upon the bank paying the balance of the loan remaining unpaid. In telegrams to the State Department President Olaya pointed out that he had done everything that the Americans had asked of him-had passed certain laws relating to petroleum and had settled the Barco concession, and having done what Americans had required he insisted that he was entitled to the remainder of his loan. These telegrams were either read to or the substance of them communicated by the State Department to the bank. The President of Colombia earnestly besought his Congress to settle the Barco concession. In substance, he said in official messages that the settlement of the Barco concession would enable him to obtain such money as might be required by his Government. His views were transmitted to the State Department and through the State Department to the National City Bank and its attorneys. The Senate of Colombia acted with celerity in approving and ratifying the new concession. The House, however, held the matter for a long time; and during all the time it was holding the matter and debating it, the National City Bank was withholding $4,000,000 of the loan; and during the period of the withholding of the loan the State Department was, upon advices from Bogota, endeavoring to persuade the National City Bank to act. On June 18, the Colombian House of Representatives passed the Barco concession bill. On June 20 it was duly signed, and on June 30 the $4,000,000 which had been withheld by the National City Bank was paid to Colombia. A mass of testimony was taken in relation to these transactions which culminated in the Secretary of State refusing to permit Mr. Caffery to testify or to be called as a witness, and refusing to permit the Senate committee to have the dispatches which had passed between Caffery, the United States representative at Colombia, and the State Department in reference to the loan and the concession. The communications were refused the committee upon the theory that they involved our international relations and were confidential. The request was made of the State Department for mere transcripts of what had been communicated by the State Department to the National City Bank and its attorneys. This was refused.

Do you follow me? The State Department telephoned one dispatch practically verbatim to the attorneys for the National City Bank, told the National City Bank and its attorneys the contents of other dispatches; and when asked to produce only the transcript of that which they had told international bankers, they flatly refused and declined to do it!

The State Department was asked to delete whatever the department might deem of irritating or confidential character concerning international relations and give to the Scnate committee then the remainder of the telegrams which had been disclosed to the international bankers. This was refused. One of the grounds of refusal was the public which would be given to telegrams from a representative of ours abroad concerning another country.

Just follow that objection for a moment. The disclosure of these telegrams, however, was voluntarily made by Mr. White, of the State Department, in a statement he himself asked the committee to permit him to make; and the very telegrams that he recited in the presence of the press of the Nation, sitting there with him, the Secretary of State and he declined to give to the committee on the ground that they ought not to be given publicity. Marvelous reasoning! It appeals, I imagine, to many of our brethren. It has little appeal to me.

The specious response with which we have become familiar was made that any member of the committee might see the dispatches in confidence; and I replied for myself personally instantly that such a course would be in derogation of the dignity of a United States Senator, and that I would not consent to read a dispatch which I could not discuss with my fellow Senators, and I would not read in confidence dispatches which had been read to international bankers, and thus be precluded from comment or discussion of them. This, in brief, is the controversy which arose concerning the telegrams relating to the Barco concession and the loan of the National City Bank to Colombia.

I am not the keeper of the dignity of the United States Senate. I am the keeper of my own. For a Senator to read as confidential—and have his lips sealed thereafter—dispatches received by the State Department from a representative of the United States Government, which had been read to international bankers and their attorneys, would be, at least to one Senator, a pusillanimous and contemptible course of which he would not be guilty. The facts are that the National City Bank did not make its loan of $4,000,000 until after the Barco concession had been passed by the Colombian Congress; that within a very few days after the Congress had acted the loan was made; that Caffery was wiring concerning the Barco concession during 1931 and while the Congress was in session; that the Secretary of State, in person, took up the loan of the National City Bank to Colombia; that the President of Colombia in at least two official messages to his Congress-they are in the record here-dilated upon the importance of settling the Barco concession, in one message asserting it should be done in order to "bring about the economic and financial restoration of the Republic"; and in another saying, "It can be said without exaggeration that it—the Barco concession—has projections not only within the country but also economic and financial ones in the international field," and it should be adopted by the Congress because "it opens propitious horizons for the financial possibilities of the Republic abroad. Frequent mention is made of the Barco concession in the correspondence between the National City Bank and its representatives in Colombia. The President of Colombia bitterly complained to the United States Government and to the international bankers that he had done all that Americans asked, including the granting of the Barco concession, and was therefore entitled to the remaining portion of the National City Bank loan.

All of these facts indicate how inextricably connected were the executive and legislative action at Bogota concerning the Barco concession and the payment of the balance of the loan promised by the National City Bank. But, above and beyond all these things, the activity of our State Department, in view of its long-settled policy, may well be considered. Practically $100,000,000 in bonds issued by the Government of Colombia and its political subdivisions are in the hands of our people and facing possible default. Neither by word nor deed is our Government, because of what it asserts is its definite policy, able to do aught for those who hold the doubtful securities of Colombia. It can, however, when the occasion, in its opinion, demands it, act for a Barco concession owned by the Mellon or the Morgan interests in Colombia and be the go-between in a short-term loan of the National City Bank to that country.

Whatever excuses may be made, however the lips of American representatives abroad may be sealed, despite the pretense of protecting confidential communications that only international bankers may know, we find the controversy about the Barco concession running side by side with the controversy about withheld moneys of the National City Bank; and the concluding episode of the controversy, the passage of the Barco concession, and the payment of the amount of the loan withheld. Thus the Mellon interests received their "due," the Colombian Government got its money, and the State Department kept its secrets.

Our people are less fortunate than our international bankers. The last two years have been years of disillusionment for the American people; and among the sad lessons they have learned, not the least humiliating is the lesson that their Government is little concerned with them.

In speaking as I have of international bankers, it should be observed, of course, that all are not guilty of the practices which are related and which we condemn. Necessarily, we must speak in generic terms; but so far as Latin America is concerned and in no less degree Europe, it would be difficult to overdraw the picture.

Three contributing causes have there been to the disastrous events of the past few years in the matter of our foreign loans and to the shameful, and even infamous, exploitation of the American investing public. The money madness of our people, the greed and even worse of international bankers, and the smug complacency and supine indifference of Government, have contributed to the unhappy result. The money madness of ignorant investors could have been fairly directed by international bankers who had some other thought than profit, and the propensity of the times could have been controlled by a Government alive to its responsibilities to its people. The governmental attitude is well illustrated in the letter of the Department of Commerce to Mr. O. C. Townsend, dated May 20, 1927, wherein the spirit of the Government and of that department during that critical time was thus described:

Right in this connection, I should like to emphasize that the spirit of the bureau follows the spirit of the American business, which is to make sales in spite of difficulties, or to find ways of doing seemingly impossible things. As officials we should be encouraging whenever possible and discouraging only in the last extremity. We are builders, promoters—even propagandists, although never to such an extent that we fail to recognize and point out difficulties.

Here is the doctrine of the Department of Commerce in 1927, just prior to some of the worst acts of exploitation by our international bankers. "We are builders, promoters, even propagandists, although never to such an extent that we fail to recognize and point out the difficulties." Builders, promoters, even propagandists! Behind a governmental policy such as this the worst of international bankers may hide, and the meanest of exploiters may skulk. When a government becomes promoter, even propagandist, if only in reference to small business transactions, scarcely can it berate the so-called "merchant of securities" who himself! becomes "promoter" and "even propagandist."

Mr. President, not a tithe of the sorry, sordid tale has been related to-day. Enough has been mentioned to arouse the hot indignation of those who are intrusted with the people's welfare and to require them, if a sense of duty and responsibility yet remains with them, to do what lies in their power to prevent a recurrence in the future. It is my purpose to press with all dispatch the bills which I have introduced in the hope of curbing the nefarious practices with which this investigation has made us familiar. Publicity I would insist upon for all foreign loans, that there may be some place where inquiries may be made and details ascertained. Methods such as are employed by the various States in regard to securities offered within the State I would endeavor to have adopted by the National Government concerning foreign loans. Above all, had I the power, I would take this Government out of the lethargy that has characterized it. I would awaken it to its responsibilities to its investing people. I would make it the arbiter in the offering of foreign securities and thus compel it to do that which it has, in the interest of international bankers, so carefully avoided-express itself, so that instead of deceiving the American public it may enlighten it. In short, what is essential to be done from the standpoint of the Federal Government is but a part of the age-old contest to make that Government the kind of government of Lincoln, the sort that the Republic was intended to be-a government responsive to all its people and not to a single class.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am sure all have been very much enlightened and edified by the very splendid speech of the distinguished senior Senator from California [Mr. Johnson]. It was able, informative, and convincing. I served upon the committee which carried on the investigation to which he has referred, and I recall very vividly that when the resolution of investigation was offered and passed, and the committee began its work, no one thought much would be gained from the investigation. But as one member of the investigating committee, I want to say what I think is due the Senator from California—that he is to be congratulated by the country on the painstaking manner and the ability displayed by him in making the investigation and getting all these facts, which I am sure will prove most beneficial in the end. It was a tremendous task, and the investigation was conducted by him practically single handed. The investigation should influence the Congress to pass some legislation on the subject which I am sure will prove beneficial to the country.

FIXING TERMS OF PRESIDENT, VICE PRESIDENT, AND CONGRESS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Governor of the State of New York, together with an engrossed copy of a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of New York ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the commencement of the terms of President and Vice President and Members of Congress and fixing the time of the assembling of Congress, which, with the accompanying resolution, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> STATE OF NEW YORK, EXECUTIVE CHAMBER Albany, March 11, 1932.

The honorable the PRESIDING OFFICER,

The honorable the Presiding Officer,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Sir: I desire officially to inform you that the Legislature of the State of New York has ratified the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States passed at the first session of the Seventy-second Congress, relating to terms of the President, Vice President, Senators, and Representatives of the United States, time of assembling of Congress, and the method of succession to the Presidency and Vice Presidency.

I am inclosing herewith an engrossed copy of the concurrent resolution of ratification of the Legislature of the State of New York.

York.

Very truly yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Concurrent resolution of the Senate and Assembly ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, relating to terms of the President, Vice President, Senators, and Representatives of the United States, time of assembling of Congress, and the method of succession to the Presidency and Vice Presidency. (Assembly, No. 2265.)

Whereas at the first session of the Seventy-second Congress it was resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein) that the following article be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the said Constitution, viz:

"ARTICLE -

"Section 1. The terms of the President and Vice President shall end at noon on the 20th day of January, and the terms of Senators and Representatives at noon on the 3d day of January, and the section of the section o of the years in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified; and the terms of their successors shall then and such meeting shall begin at noon on the 3d day of January, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

"SEC. 3. If, at the time fixed for the beginning of the term of the President, the President elect shall have died, the Vice President elect shall become President. If a President shall not have been chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, or if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified; and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a Vice President elect shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified.

person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified.

"Sec. 4. The Congress may by law provide for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the House of Representatives may choose a President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them, and for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the Senate may choose a Vice President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them.

"SEC. 5. Sections 1 and 2 shall take effect on the 15th day of October following the ratification of this article.

"SEC. 6. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legisbeen ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission: Therefore, "Resolved (if the senate concur), That the Legislature of the State of New York does hereby ratify the above-proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and be it further "Resolved (if the senate concur), That the governor be requested to transmit a copy of these resolutions and preamble to the Secretary of State of the United States of America at Washington, to the presiding officer of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States."

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN ASSEMBLY, March 11, 1932.

This bill was duly passed, a majority of all the members elected to the assembly voting in favor thereof, three-fifths being present. By order of the assembly.

J. A. McGINNIES, Speaker.

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN SENATE. March 11, 1932.

This bill was duly passed, a majority of all the Senators elected voting in favor thereof, three-fifths being present. By order of the Senate.

HERBERT H. LEHMAN. President.

STATE OF NEW YORK, Department of State, ss:

I have compared the preceding copy of concurrent resolution of the senate and assembly, ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to terms of the President, Vice President, Senators, and Representatives of the United States, time of assembling of Congress, and method of succession to the Presidency and Vice Presidency with the original concurrent resolution on file in this office, and do hereby certify that the serve is a correct transcript therefrom and of the certify that the same is a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

Given under my hand and the official seal of the department of State, at the city of Albany, this 12th day of March, in the year one thousand nine hundred and thirty-two.

[SEAL.]

GRACE A. REANY,

Deputy Secretary of State.

AMENDMENT OF WORLD WAR VETERANS' ACT

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, yesterday I made a motion to discharge the Committee on Finance from the further consideration of Senate bill 929. Under the rules the motion had to go over until to-day. I ask the Chair whether that | motion is privileged to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is just like a resolution; it went over for the day and will be laid down the first day after the Senate takes an adjournment.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Chair decide, then, that before that question can come up in the regular way, we must have an adjournment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will have to take an adjournment.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by General Nelson A. Miles Camp, No. 1, United Spanish War Veterans, of Washington, D. C., favoring the passage of the so-called Gasque bill, being the bill (H. R. 7230) granting uniform pensions to widows and children and dependent parents of certain persons who served the United States in time of war, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Colorado Mining Association, Denver, Colo., protesting against reductions in the appropriations for the Bureau of Mines, especially in those items concerning the gathering of metal statistics, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the second annual convention of the Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, at Detroit, Mich., favoring the passage of Senate bill 3770, to prevent the obstruction of and burdens upon interstate trade and commerce in copyrighted motion-picture films, etc., and also the resolution (S. Res. 170) to investigate the organization, practices, and refinancing of the motion-picture industry, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. JONES presented a petition of sundry citizens, representing some 1,500 growers in the Yakima Valley, in the State of Washington, praying for the maintenance of the present tariff on cherries and protesting against continuous investigation of the tariff, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a resolution adopted by the Steamship Trade Association, of Baltimore, Md., protesting against the passage of legislation providing for the deportation of certain alien seamen, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. KEAN presented resolutions adopted by Group No. 323 of the Polish National Alliance, of Camden, N. J., favoring the passage of legislation providing for proclaiming October 11 in each year General Pulaski's Memorial Day, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FRAZIER presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of Bottinenau and Edinburg, N. Dak., praying for the maintenance of the prohibition law and its enforcement, and protesting against any measure looking toward its modification or repeal, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BARBOUR presented the petition of members of Alpha Chapter of the Phalanz Fraternity, the Young Men's Christian Association, of Madison, N. J., praying for a cancellation of war debts due the United States from our former allies, with certain conditions, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adpoted by the Hoboken section of the Council of Jewish Women, of Hoboken, N. J., praying for the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of Essex County branch of the Central Verein of America in the State of New Jersey, praying for the immediate modification of the Volstead enforcement act and the ultimate repeal of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Red kidnaping a Federal offense and providing capital punishment therefor, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BLAINE presented a memorial of 33 citizens of the State of Wisconsin, remonstrating against the passage of legislation providing for the closing of barber shops on Sunday in the District of Columbia, or other restrictive religious measures, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of Berlin and Brandon, Wis., protesting against the proposed resubmission of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution to the States, and favoring the making of adequate appropriations for law enforcement and education in law observance, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BROOKHART presented resolutions adopted by the second annual convention of the Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, at Detroit, Mich., favoring the passage of Senate bill 3770, known as the Brookhart bill, to prevent the obstruction of and burdens upon interstate trade and commerce in copyrighted motion-picture films, etc., and also the resolution (S. Res. 170) to investigate the organization, practices, and financing of the motion-picture industry, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition numerously signed by sundry citizens of Waterloo, Iowa, and vicinity, praying for retrenchment in governmental expenditures, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts presented petitions and letters, in the nature of petitions, numerously signed by sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 3677) to provide for the establishment of a system of pensions for railroad and transportation employees and for a railroad pension board, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce

RELIEF OF CLOSED TRUST COMPANIES

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I present and ask to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred copy of a resolution adopted by the Board of Aldermen of Medford, Mass., urging the passage by Congress of legislation which would establish a fund similar to that of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but which would apply to the relief of closed trust companies, and would make possible the release of frozen assets.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> CITY OF MEDFORD, IN BOARD OF ALDERMEN, March 1, 1932.

Offered by Alderman George P. Hassett:

Be it resolved, That the Representatives in Congress be urged to hasten the passage of laws which would establish a fund similar to that of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but which would apply to the relief of closed trust companies, and would make possible the release of frozen assets. This fund would prevent the sale of securities and mortgages now held by the closed trust companies at prices below the market value and would prevent home owners from seeking to place their mortgages in other banks or institutions at great inconvenience and cost: Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to United States Senators Walsh and Coolings and Representative DALLINGER.

In board of aldermen March 1, 1932; passed.

A true copy. Attest:

CHARLES A. WINSLOW City Clerk.

REVENUE AND TAXATION

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I also present copy of a resolution adopted by the Massachusetts Chamber of Commerce in opposition to a high tariff on petroleum products, together with a letter received by me from them relative to this subject, and favoring a general Bank, N. J., praying for the passage of legislation making revenue tax upon manufactures at the source rather than special taxes upon selected commodities and business. I ask that the resolution and letter be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution and letter were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted by board of directors of Massachusetts Chamber of Commerce, in meeting assembled February 23, 1932

Whereas there are now pending before Congress several bills designed to diminish or restrict the importation of petroleum products; and

Whereas the enactment of such legislation would greatly increase prices for such products to New England consumers and impose an economic hardship upon the business and people of this section; and

Whereas it is believed such legislation would prove discriminatory in that it would adversely affect all Atlantic seaboard States while working to the advantage of other sections of the country; and

Whereas it seems inevitable that an embargo or high tariff on fuel oil would result in an increase in price which would oblige practically all large users of that commodity in Massachusetts to convert back to coal; including more than 1,000 of our industries, many apartment houses and office buildings, State and municipal buildings, churches, hospitals, and other institutions; and

Whereas an increase in the price of fuel oil would not only add to living costs of more than 100,000 Massachusetts families using oil for heat in their homes but would also seriously affect the prosperity and future growth of the business of manufacturing oil burners for homes, one of our most active and most rapidly growing industries; and

Whereas an embargo or proposed high tariff on petroleum products would seriously affect the business and recreational activities of our people through an estimated increase of $30,000,000 per annum in the gasoline expenditures of our motoring public; and Whereas the serious shortage in asphalt that would result from an embargo, or the large increase in its cost that would follow the imposition of a high tariff, would add to road-building and street-maintenance costs to an extent that would necessarily be reflected in the already burdensome tax rates of our cities and towns; and in the already burdensome tax rates of our cities and towns; and Whereas the imposition of a special revenue tax upon imports of petroleum products would have the same effect as an embargo or a high tariff and would be even more discriminatory because the burden of the tax would be borne almost exclusively by New England and the other Atlantic seaboard States: Therefore be it Resolved, That the Massachusetts Chamber of Commerce, a federation of local chambers of commerce and trade associations with direct representation of each member organization upon its directorate by action of its board of directors and in behalf of the torate, by action of its board of directors and in behalf of the business and other interests which it represents, does hereby record its disapproval and protest against all legislation designed to place an embargo or high tariff on petroleum products or im-pose a special tax on such imports.

Massachusetts Chamber of Commerce, Boston, Mass., March 4, 1932.

Hon. David I. Walsh,

Member United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: We are inclosing copy of a resolution which was adopted unanimously by the board of directors of the Massachusetts Chamber of Commerce on February 23, 1932. We believe this will be of interest.

For your information it may be well to advise that the Massa-chusetts Chamber of Commerce is a federation of 35 local cham-bers of commerce and trade associations, representing in the aggregate more than 26,000 business men in Massachusetts. Each member organization has direct representation upon the directorate of the chamber, in most instances the presidents of the respective organizations. This set-up enables our board to reflect, with reasonable accuracy, we believe, the sentiment of the interests which they represent.

It may be well to also advise at this time that the Massachusetts chamber has been placed on record, through unanimous action of its board of directors, as favoring a general revenue tax upon manufactures at the source in preference to special taxes upon selected commodities and businesses. Respectfully yours,

C. C. MOWRY, Executive Secretary.

CITIZENS' MILITARY TRAINING CAMPS

Mr. FLETCHER presented resolutions adopted by Jacksonville Chapter, seventh naval district, United States Naval Reserve Officers' Association, of Jacksonville, Fla., which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the citizens' military training camps conducted annually in various parts of this country are vital to an adequate national-defense structure and to the patriotic well-being of this Nation; and

Whereas thousands of youths are transformed into forceful, alert, energetic citizens, possessed of a new outlook on life and are made more devoted to this State and Nation through training whereas 53 such youths from Jacksonville will be afforded the opportunity this year to attend the camp at Fort Scriven, Ga., and more than 550 will have the opportunity of attending such camps from Florida; and

Whereas certain groups are desiring to eliminate such camps under the guise of economy: Now be it

Resolved by the Jacksonville Chapter, seventh naval district, United States Naval Reserve Officers' Association, That this organization is opposed to any move which would bring about termination of these company he it for the company and the company of the company of the company and the company of the compa nation of these camps; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each Member of Florida's delegation in Congress and that a copy also be sent to the Jacksonville Chapter of the United States Reserve Officers' Association, an organization of Army reserve officers.

WELFARE AND HYGIENE OF MOTHERS AND CHILDREN

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 572) to provide that the United States shall cooperate with the States in promoting the general health of the rural population of the United States and the welfare and hygiene of mothers and children, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 428) thereon.

Mr. BINGHAM, from the Committee on Commerce, submitted the views of the minority to accompany Senate bill 572, above reported by Mr. Jones, which were ordered to be printed (Rept. No. 428, pt. 2).

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. WATERMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 14th instant that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled

S. 1473. An act to authorize an appropriation for the relief of I. L. Lyons & Co.; and

S. 2822. An act for the relief of Anna Marie Sanford. widow of William Richard Sanford, deceased.

MAP OF PROPOSED HOPI INDIAN RESERVATION

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have included in Senate Document 64 as an illustration a map of the proposed Hopi Indian Reservation. Some days ago I secured permission to have the document printed. It is important that this illustration be included in the document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MANUSCRIPT ENTITLED "FOREST BANKRUPTCY IN AMERICA"

On motion of Mr. Shipstead, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers accompanying Senate Resolution No. 420, Seventy-first Congress, third session, entitled "A resolution providing for the printing of the manuscript entitled 'Forest Bank-ruptcy in America,' prepared by Lieut. Col. George P. Ahern," which was presented to the Senate on January 26, 1931, there having been no adverse report thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States, submitting a nomination, was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8397) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 18, line 21, strike out "$140,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$113,000," so as to read:

The expenses incidental to the sale of timber, and for the expenses of administration, including fire prevention, of Indian forest lands from which such timber is sold to the extent that the proceeds of such sales are sufficient for that purpose, $113,000, reimbursable to the United States as provided in the act of February 14, 1920 (U. S. C., title 25, sec. 413).

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst Austin Bailey	Costigan Couzens Dale	Johnson Jones Kean	Robinson, Ark. Robinson, Ind. Schall
Bankhead	Davis	Kendrick	Sheppard
Barbour	Dickinson	Keyes	Shipstead
Barkley	Dill	King	Shortridge
Bingham	Fess	La Follette	Smith

Blaine	Frazier	Logan	Steiwer
Borah	George	Long	Thomas, Idaho
Bratton	Glass	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Brookhart	Glenn	McKellar	Townsend
Broussard	Goldsborough	McNary	Trammell
Bulkley	Gore	Metcalf	Tydings
Bulow	Hale	Moses	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Harrison	Neely	Wagner
Capper	Hatfield	Norbeck	Walcott
Caraway	Hawes	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Carey	Hayden	Nye	Walsh, Mont.
Connally	Hebert	Oddie	Waterman
Coolidge	Howell	Patterson	White
Copeland	Hull	Pittman

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this amendment is on page 18, line 21. It seeks to deduct from the $140,000, reimbursable for the Klamath Indians, the amount of $27,000. The $27,000 is to come out of the appropriation for forest control, which amounts in the bill to $66,420. If $27,000 is deducted, a balance of $39,420 would be left. In addition to that, there is also an item of $20,000 for beetle control for the same timber.

In 1928, Inspector Trowbridge, of the Indian Bureau, made a report on the cost of operations for forestry on the Klamath Reservation. Among other things, he stated:

Construction of roads throughout the timbered area is, of course, necessary for fire protection, but this expenditure should be made from the 8 per cent reimbursable fund, the amount accruing for the fiscal year 1928 being $94,631.49.

That was the year of the largest sales of timber on the Klamath Reservation.

The average per cent of cost for forestry operations the last 5-year period was less than  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent—

Although 8 per cent had been set aside-and leaves a margin for sufficient funds for road construction. During the past 18 months roads have been constructed through timbered areas with agency funds, and this is objected to by the Indians. The total thus expended for 13 miles of roadway was $24,952, which included 6 miles on the Kirk roadway, where there is very little travel, and beneficial largely for fire protection.

Trowbridge says that  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent is sufficient. The estimate of the amount of income from sales of timber for this past year is \$328,000. Eight per cent of that would be \$26,240. The average for the past five years of which Mr. Trowbridge speaks would be \$745,715 per year. Three and a half per cent of that amount would be \$26,100, which is almost the same as 8 per cent of the income they expected to have this past year from the sale of their timber.

Mr. President, if any private lumbering concern were in the same predicament the lumber interest there on the Klamath Reservation is in, the sales cut down from over a million dollars to about $300,000, it would cut down expenses, it would cut down overhead.

Mr. President, as I stated, if the $27,000 is cut out it still leaves $39,420 for the protection and the care of these forests, and an additional sum of $20,000 for beetle control, making a total of $59,420 for the coming year. I believe that is enough. The Indians want the deduction made.

The money comes out of their funds. Their income is going ! to be cut down materially next year, and their overhead should be cut down, too.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President. I think it is almost unnecessary for me to repeat what I have already said twice while this amendment has been before the Senate. Last year the appropriation was $250,000. The estimate for this year was $150,000. The House cut that estimate to $140,000. Thus the amount appropriated last year of $250,000 is cut to $140,000.

In the testimony before the committee it was stated that this ought to be done, that the House provision ought to stand, although as far as expense is concerned it is for the very purpose the Senator from North Dakota has stated. But the sale of the timber and the administration of it comprises one of the most important things to be done on the reservation. That is where the holdings of the Indians are. That is the property value they have as a band of Indians. Of course, we all understand that in the last year the sale of timber has been very materially decreased. In fact, they received from it this year less than $350,000. The year before it was over $1,000,000. To cut this item of $140,000 still further, it seems to me, is unwise.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. FRAZIER. I would like to ask the Senator from Utah if he does not think the sale of timber on the Klamath Reservation will be less this coming year than it was last

Mr. SMOOT. No; I'do not think it will be less. I think it will be more.

Mr. FRAZIER. Those who live out there and know the situation think it will be less because of the low prices of Mr. SMOOT. The lumber men generally have the same amount of decrease or increase in sales as occurs on the Klamath Indian Reservation, and they are looking forward to at least a 20 per cent increase in business this year. I rather think that will be about the increase on the Klamath Reservation.

Mr. FRAZIER. Even if there was a little increase, I would like to ask the Senator if he does not think that $59,420, which would be left in the bill, is sufficient to take care of the situation?

Mr. SMOOT. If I did think that, I certainly would ask the Senate to adopt the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, but I think its adoption would work a hardship on the Indians and that they would lose money by accepting the amendment. Therefore, I ask that the amendment be rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah if I correctly understood him to say that there will be a 20 per cent increase in the prices of lumber this coming year?

Mr. SMOOT. No; that is not what I said.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the Senator to say that the lumber people expect a 20 per cent increase in the prices of their output.

Mr. SMOOT. I say the lumber people in the West think they will have a better sale for lumber than they had last

Mr. HARRISON. I merely wanted to get a slight ray of hope for improvement in the business situation, if I could get it from the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. That is very nice of the Senator from Mississippi, and I am glad to give him any hope I can. It ought to make him feel happy.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, yes; I feel very happy over the Senator's statement.

Mr. SMOOT. This item has been decreased from $250,000 to $140,000.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the bill now before us contains an item for the payment of the expenses of the Osage Agency in Oklahoma. Last year the expense Indians and the timber contracts that are unfavorable to was $259,000. This year, at the request of the Indians, the amount has been cut to $175,000. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a statement in the form of a telegram from the tribal council of the Indians justifying the reduction to $175,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, leave will be granted

The statement is as follows:

PAWHUSKA, OKLA., March 14, 1932.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,

Hon. Elmer Thomas,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned, chief, assistant chief, members of the Osage Tribal Council, respectfully request when Osage items from the Interior Department appropriation bill are reached by the Senate that you read the following telegram into the Congressional Record on Tuesday, January 12, 1932:

"Members of the Osage Tribal Council and Osage delegates representing the Osage Tribe of Indians in Washington presented to the House Appropriations Committee for the use of the committee a statement showing what positions could be abolished at the Osage Agency without impairing efficiency of the service at this agency. This statement appears on page 703, before subcommittee of House Committee on Appropriations. The positions recommended for abolishment in that recommendation were decided upon by the tribal council after a full investigation by committee consisting of members of the Osage Tribe and members cided upon by the tribal council after a full investigation by committee consisting of members of the Osage Tribe and members of the Osage Tribal Council, which lasted nearly two months, and we are of the opinion that these positions can be abolished without impairing the efficiency of the service at this time.

"The total amount of salaries represented in that recommendation amounted to approximately $40,200. The number of cars maintained for these positions at Osage tribal expense amounts to 10, the average cost of operation of each car being $610 per annum. The abolishment of these positions, with the 10 cars eliminated, would have made a reduction in the Budget for Osage Agency of $46,300. The House of Representatives Appropriations eliminated, would have made a reduction in the Budget for Osage Agency of $46,300. The House of Representatives Appropriations Committee did deduct on the Budget estimate of $210,000 $35,000, leaving a total of $175,000 for Osage Agency expense for 1933. With this deduction we are entirely satisfied. Beginning on page 122, hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, Superintendent Murphy, of the Osage Agency, submits a justification for the $210,000 as asked for in House appropriation bill. Among other things itemized, purchase of new automobiles at $4,000. This we charge is nothing short of extravagance. On page 128 of the same hearings the superintendent of Osage Agency becomes unduly alarmed about the interests extravagance. On page 128 of the same hearings the superintendent of Osage Agency becomes unduly alarmed about the interests of certain citizens of Fairfax and Hominy because of the abolishment of subagencies in these two places. Again on page 130 he reiterates the same thing, with the following language: "Protests will undoubtedly be made by the chambers of commerce and other persons in Hominy and Fairfax districts."

"We wish to call the attention of the Secret to the research will undoubtedly be made by the chambers of commerce and other persons in Hominy and Fairfax districts."

"We wish to call the attention of the Senate to the revenues of the Osage Tribe for the year 1923, which amounted to $30,-502,500. The appropriation made by Congress for Osage Agency expense for the same year was $210,000. The tribal income for the year 1931 was $2,827,169, and the appropriation for the Osage Agency expense was $286,800. The administration expense of the Osage Agency has always been maintained from Osage tribal funds, this being the first time in the history of the Osage Tribe the Osage Tribal Council or its representatives have appealed to Congress to assist in making what deductions we think are absolutely necessary. With the $175,000 as fixed now in the appropriation bill we are entirely satisfied until the next session of Congress, at which time we will furnish the members of the Appropriations Committee with a justification for further reductions in the appropriation for this agency."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when we recessed last evening I was challenging attention to conditions on the Klamath Reservation, and attempting to prove that items of appropriations carried in the pending bill were unwarranted. The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], as I understood him, argued that the number of employees upon the reservation was less than indicated by me, and as shown in the House hearings commenced December 15 of last year, and continued into the present year. At the same time I exhibited a statement prepared and handed to me by Mr. Crawford, the intelligent representative of the Indian tribe, who has been in Washington for some time protesting against the policies of the bureau, the exorbitant demands made by it for appropriations from tribal funds to keep an army of white employees on the Klamath Reservation.

He has denounced the grazing policy imposed upon the the Indians who own the timber and to the forestry policy which within a few years will leave the Klamath Indians propertyless and penniless.

I may say in passing that for several years Mr. and Mrs. Crawford have visited Washington as representatives of the Klamath Indians. They have appeared before the Bureau of Indian Affairs and pleaded for justice for the Indians, for reforms in the Indian Bureau; they have demanded reductions in the appropriations annually made by Congress, at the request of the Indian Bureau, appropriations from tribal funds which within a few years, if the bureau's policies are continued, will be exhausted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to his colleague?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I took it for granted that the Senator was speaking of forestry employees on the Klamath Reservation, only those engaged in forestry, and not all others. That is what I understood we were discussing. I now understand the Senator is discussing the question of all the employees.

Mr. KING. No; I stated, if I may be pardoned a repetition, that there were 50 so-called permanent employees who were denominated agency employees, and that there were approximately 103 employees, as I had been informed, who were called irregular employees. I added, however, in order to be entirely within the bounds of accuracy, that there were more than 50 of these irregular employees. What little work is performed by them is in the summer months and when the lumber mills are in operation. Most of them are unnecessary at any time, and none in the winter months if the permanent employees were required to perform a proper amount of labor. Yesterday I gave the names of the agency, or permanent employees, starting with Mr. Blair, the agent in charge, and went down the list of clerks and subclerks, supernumeraries, cooks, scalers, and others engaged in forestry service in the so-called permanent class.

Mr. SMOOT. The statement the Senator has just made, of course, takes in all the employees on the Klamath Reservation.

Mr. KING. Oh, no; my colleague is mistaken, if I understand his meaning.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I want to say that if it is only the forestry employees on the Klamath Reservation, there are 25 employees provided for in the bill, and no more.

Mr. KING. I do not agree with my colleague.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I ask permission to insert in the RECORD a list of every employee in the Forest Service on the Klamath Indian Reservation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, leave is granted.

The list is as follows:

Mr. KING. Mr. President, yesterday I gave a list of names of certain employees as shown by the House hearing. My colleague has just referred to a number of employees in the forestry work of the reservation, but he has not indicated all of them. On pages 620 to 623, inclusive, of the recent hearings before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations appear the names of more than 150 persons employed upon the Klamath Reservation. The pay roll for April, 1931, names more than 50 permanent employees, 27 of whom are forestry employees. There are 103 additional employees, their names appearing on the pages mentioned, as temporary scalers, line riders, liquor control, fire protection, road construction and maintenance, beetle control, agency grounds, and miscellaneous, miscellaneous improvements, and construction and maintenance of telephone lines. Congressman Murphy, when the hearings were in progress, called attention to the fact that the outside number of persons that had been employed in a regular way was 60, but that the irregular employees had reached 105 in June, 1931. The Indians have for years protested against the Indian Bureau forcing upon them an army of employees most of whom were unnecessary. It must be remembered that the Klamath Indians are civilized; they have their own homes upon their own allotments, and some live in towns and cities built upon the reservation. They are taxpayers, and their children attend the public schools. The statement is made in the House hearings (p. 624):

That the Klamath Indians have assimilated with the white people for over 40 years; you can not tell an Indian from a white man; the Indians know how to take care of their homes as well as their neighbors do.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Indians have their own homes and live not at the agency but in various parts of the reservation, the Government persists in maintaining a large agency center where no Indians live and an unnecessary number of employees, whom the Indians are compelled to support. The Government has unwisely and improvidently expended tribal funds to construct roads and buildings. There are nearly 200 buildings erected by the Government out of tribal funds not used by the Indians, many of which are unnecessary and should not be maintained. The Government furnishes the employees upon this reservation approximately 50 automobiles, the cost of operation and maintenance of the same being charged to the Indians.

Mr. Crawford has furnished me a list of the Government employees for 1931 on the reservation. Notwithstanding, as he has stated, the lumber operations have almost ceased, only two mills operating, the pay roll is still carried on through the winter months. "Civil-service employees have been doing irregular work around the agency, such as repairing buildings," and so forth. Mr. Crawford's memorandum, which I have before me, gives the names and the compensation of the bureau employees as of November 30, 1931. There are 50 of these so-called "permanent employees," and 103 irregular employees. He further adds that the Indians who formerly did some irregular work have been laid off in order to keep the white personnel.

Last summer out of 19 contracts, which we have, only two companies were able to make their annual cut on account of the lumber market, and still this large personnel has been carried on.

Mr. President, I believe my colleague is in error in assuming that this bill carries but $140,000 for the expenses of the Klamath Reservation for the next fiscal year. This view has been challenged by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr.

FRAZIER]. In support of the position of the latter I invite attention to page 18 of the bill which carries an appropriation of $225,000. The item is as follows:

INDUSTRIAL ASSISTANCE AND ADVANCEMENT

For the preservation of timber on Indian reservations and allotments other than the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin, the education of Indians in the proper care of forests, and the general administration of forestry and grazing work, including fire prevention and payment of reasonable rewards for information leading to arrest and conviction of a person or persons setting forest fires in contravention of law on Indian lands, $225,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for the expenses of administration of Indian forest lands from which timber is sold to the extent only that proceeds from the sales of timber from such lands are insufficient for that purpose.

Then there is an item of $140,000 appearing in the paragraph beginning at line 17. It is to this item the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota applies. It reads as follows:

For expenses incidental to the sale of timber and for the expenses of administration, including fire prevention.

It will be observed that the language of these two items is substantially the same. The item of $225,000 is for the administration of forestry and grazing work and the $140,000 is for the expenses of administration and protection of forest lands.

The books and accounts of the Indian Bureau are so kept that it seems impossible to determine the purpose for which various items of appropriation are applied. Neither the Budget nor the appropriation bills afford satisfactory evidence of the uses to which appropriations are applied. There are evident duplications, and items are so scattered through the bill apparently dealing with the same subject or with cognate matters as to make it impossible to determine the amount of appropriations for various subjects or the extent of duplication and overlapping.

Complaints have been made for years against the book-keeping methods of the bureau and the plan adopted by which, from various funds apparently earmarked, subtractions may be made for utilization upon some other reservation or for different purposes. Bills are prepared which apparently limit appropriations to a particular object, but the language is so confusing and uncertain and often so broad that the appropriation may be diverted to one of a dozen various objects. Indian appropriation bills are filled with duplications and with appropriations, which, as I have stated, are so indefinite and ambiguous that they may be drawn upon to meet conditions in various reservations or situations which were not contemplated by Congress when the legislation was enacted.

Efforts have been made by the Senator from North Dakota to reform the bookkeeping and accounting system of the department and to make more specific and definite the appropriations and the purpose for which made. I am advised that the bill which he has offered has met with opposition at the hands of the bureau officials. Apparently they are opposed to a system of accounting that will enable Congress and the Indians and their representatives to determine the exact amounts appropriated for every and any purpose. As I have indicated, the item of $225,000 is to aid in the preservation of timber on Indian reservations, for general administration of forestry and grazing work, and so forth. What part of this amount is to be used upon the Klamath Reservation the bill does not indicate. It may be that the entire amount will be expended upon this reservation. The item on page 19 for $20,000 is specific and is to be expended for insect control on the Klamath Indian Reservation. However, on page 19, beginning in line 7, there is found the following provision:

For the suppression or emergency prevention of forest fires on or threatening Indian reservations, $40,000, together with $25,000 from funds held by the United States in trust for the respective tribes of Indians interested: Provided, That not to exceed $50,000 of appropriations herein made for timber operations and for support and administration purposes may be transferred, upon the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, for fire suppression or emergency prevention purposes and allotments of funds so transferred shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior only after the obligation for the expenditure has been incurred.

Senators will observe that $40,000 or $25,000, or both, are to be appropriated for timber operations and for support and administration purposes. These amounts may be transferred for fire prevention and may be expended entirely upon the Klamath Reservation.

On page 33 of the bill appears an item of $5,000 appropriated from the "funds held in trust for the Klamath Indians to be used for irrigation purposes." There are other items in the bill, including one for $75,000, which may be drawn upon by the bureau to meet expenditures upon the Klamath Reservation. Then there are a number of items made reimbursable, and which in the discretion of the Indian Bureau may be used in connection with the same reservation as shown. It is, therefore, impossible to determine the total amount carried by the pending measure that may be expended by the bureau upon this reservation. It is unfortunate that appropriation bills do not clearly indicate for what appropriations are to be used and the special objects to which they may be applied. In view of these ambiguities, it is impossible for anyone to say what amount the Klamath Indians will be charged with to meet the bureau expenses for the coming year. It is obvious that the item of $140,000 is only a part of the charge which they will be compelled to meet. An examination of the items which it may safely be assumed will be applied to the Klamath Reservation establishes that the Klamath Indians are charged with $225 per capita, which must come out of their tribal funds. This is an unjust burden to be placed upon them in view of their development and situation. This burden is imposed in order to maintain Federal employees and sustain a bureaucratic organization.

Attention has been called to the fact that the expenses of the Indian Bureau have been increased from five or six million dollars a few years ago to $28,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30 of this year.

The Klamath Indians desire to be emancipated from bureaucratic control, to organize into corporate form, and manage and control their own affairs. They have been pleading for this reform but have met with implacable opposition. Yesterday I briefly referred to the policy of the bureau in handling the timberlands of the Klamath Tribe. Speaking of these contracts which were forced upon the Indians, Senator Walcott, a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, stated, as appears in the hearings of the committee on H. R. 15498 (February 25, 1931):

I admire the Indian; and I think he has had fearfully raw deals. I think that the Government, intentionally or otherwise, has taken from the Indian large tracts of land, and large tracts of valuable timber, and never paid him for it. * * * We are dealing with human souls who were the owners of this whole country at the beginning, and who have gradually been forced down, and nearly out. I have seen the Seminoles in the 20 years I have known them—and I know them very well, some of them—decline from about 3,500 to less than 200 in that great, glorious area in the southwest corner of Florida which is a paradise. * * * And so it is if you go all over the country and look at these sore spots. From my point of view the whole thing is a matter of administration. I do not think the Secretary can—I do not think he does—question the motive of this committee. I have never seen men who were apparently more sincerely in-

I have never seen men who were apparently more sincerely interested in the welfare of the Indian than there are in this group of which I am a member. * * * We owe the Indian, from my own observation in this committee, a great many hundreds of thousands of dollars, and we have owed it for many years. * * * There is no question in my mind that the United States Government has owed this money all the time; and so it goes, one abuse after another.

I went over some lumber contracts, that I, as a white man, having been connected with a large lumber business all my life, would no more think of making, would no more think of cutting the timber, no more think of letting it go, than I would think of cutting off my right arm. No more would I think of cutting stumpage at this time when it is the lowest in 20 years. Yet I am told by some of the Indians that a large contract may be let between now and next fall. It would be suicidal to the Indians to do a thing like that. We should wait until there is a market for stumpage before letting such a contract. It is distinctly an unfair contract from the Indians' point of view. * *

I sit here month after month in these committee meetings, and with a group of very intelligent Indians, presumably the best representatives of their various tribes. I have talked to them afterwards. They seem to know the problems perfectly; they seem to have fairly good solutions; I can not question their judgment; I certainly do not question their motives. Yet, here we are, a group of white men who are supposed to be intelligent, making, as far as I can see, no headway at all; and we take hours in discussing these problems.

Mr. President, the various hearings reveal that the Indians have repeatedly protested against the timber contracts forced upon them by the Indian Bureau and their modifications. Some protests have been made because of the believed unreliability of the contractors and the bonding policies which did not afford adequate protection, and also for other reasons. But these protests have been unheeded by the bureau.

In passing may I say that investigations made by representatives of the bureau which revealed the need of reforms in the bureau were ignored by it. In September, 1930, the chairman of the Klamath Business Committee appealed to the President of the United States and stated that the needs of the Klamath Indians, briefly summarized, were: (a) Greater economy in the expenditure of tribal funds; (b) more businesslike methods in contracting tribal timber; (c) breaking down of influence between timber interests and grazing interests of Klamath County with bureau officials; granting to the Indians a voice in the management of their affairs; the reduction of power now in the hands of civilservice employees; an entire change in agency personnel; more money for the higher education of children, and to enable the Indians to engage in industrial pursuits. Similar appeals have been made at various times to the bureau. The Indians claim that their appeals have been in vain.

In the hearings before the subcommittee of the Senate of the Committee on Indian Affairs, January 13, 1931, Mr. Wade Crawford, speaking for the Indians, stated that there were several thousand white people on the reservation and 1,276 Indians; that there were 18 lumber companies that had contracts given them by the Indian Bureau.

The Indians are pitted against the timbermen's organization and the woolgrowers' organization. * * * We take the matter up with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and he has always made a decision in favor of those Ariars, and he has always made a decision in layor of those organizations. We don't any more have an Indian problem; it is an Indian Bureau problem, and if something is not done about it in the near future the lumbermen and the woolgrowers are going to ruin that reservation. I have a map here showing the reservation—which is colored—which shows the amount of timber under contract and the names of the companies which have contracting units. This map shows about three-fourths of the timber is under contract.

In the address or appeal to the President above referred to it is stated:

The Bureau of Indian Affairs has become such an unwieldy political machine that the so-called Indian problem has vanished and in its wake has followed the Indian Bureau problem. Bills that are introduced for the benefit of the Indians are, almost without exception, adversely reported by the bureau.

* * The Indians have tried to cooperate with the bureau and failed—neither can anyone else—because the bureau will not cooperate, and proof of this lies in the assertion of the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the Klamath delegation, "We are running that establishment down there and do not intend to be dictated to by any United States Senators or anyone else.

The address contains an appeal to the President to effectuate reforms and to relieve the Indian property from the great inroads that are being made upon it, and continues:

I respectfully submit that the Bureau of Indian Affairs' conduct and administration of the Klamath timber, irrigation, health, education, and general agency administration are in no wise different than before the advent of the present administration. That is all proof of record and conditions that actually exist. * * * The timber contracts, sheep-grazing permits, vouchers of administra-tion expenses will prove that the Klamath Indians' natural resources and the returns therefrom are handled to the interests the timbermen, woolgrowers' associations, and the members of the chamber of commerce; it is a wheel within a wheel. Mr. President, we respectfully make this appeal to you and pray that action, not idle talk, will henceforth be forthcoming from the Bureau of Indian Affairs, which action alone will prevent the impoverishment of the Klamath Indians within a very few years.

Mr. President, appeals of this character have frequently been made to the Indian Bureau, but the Indians contend that their appeals have been in vain. Evidence has been furnished to committees of Congress and to the Indian investigating committee of the unfairness to the Indians of the timber contracts. Notwithstanding the complaints, timber contracts have been entered into and grazing contracts have been executed which the Indians believed-and their belief seems justified by the facts presented—have been distinctly disadvantageous to them.

The evidence shows that the grazing territory within the reservation has been in part destroyed by white sheep owners, who have overgrazed the lands and made it practically impossible for the Indians to develop the stock industry as they desired. In other words, the grazing lands have been largely turned over to the white sheepmen and cattlemen against the protests of the Indians. The Indians have complained that concessions were made by the bureau to lumber lessees in violation of the contract; that stumpage charges were not maintained, resulting in losses to the Indians, and that contracts were given to persons who were not competent or able to meet their obligations.

Lee Muck, an official in the bureau, after a thorough investigation of the reservation and the timber contracts, reported that lessees were insolvent and that substantial losses had been sustained in connection with the operations of a number of them.

Mr. Crawford called the attention of the chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee in a letter dated January 6, 1931, to the fact that on one contract the Indians suffered a loss of $2.80 per thousand because the bureau accepted a bid from a defunct lumber organization which had been unable to fulfill its contract. Resolutions were adopted from time to time by the Klamath business committee requesting the Indian Bureau to refrain from giving contracts for the cutting of timber upon various units. It was claimed by the Indian representatives that since the timber was protected with tribal funds, that the sale of the same would deplete the Klamath resources; that the method pursued by the bureau in deducting 8 per cent in the timber cuttings resulted in the loss of thousands of dollars to the Klamath Much could be said concerning these timber contracts condemned by Senator WALCOTT and which have been so disadvantageous to the Indians.

Concerning the action of the bureau in granting permits to white cattle and sheep men and the situation which has developed as a result thereof, Mr. Lee Muck in his report

Existing conditions in the stock industry at this writing are more severe than they were one year ago and action looking forward to the entire elimination of the sheep accommodated on the Klamath Indian Reservation would materially disturb economic conditions in the Klamath region, undoubtedly result in failures in the stock industry, hazard the credit structure of some of the local banking institutions, and seriously depreciate the value of the livestock loans made in Klamath and Lake Counties by the Federal Land Bank of Spokane, Wash.

Does this not mean that the Indian lands are to be held for the advantage of the white sheepmen and for the banks in the Klamath Reservation section? The interests of the Indians are not to be considered, but only the financial and economic structure of the white people in that vicinity.

This Government institution, which was created under authority of the Federal farm loan act for the purpose of stimulating the flow of capital from the Government and investors to the farm, has extended extremely liberal credit to the stockmen of Klamath County in order to assist in maintaining the industry on an even local. In view of the fact that these loans were a fine that there loans were a fine that there have been a fine of the fact that there loans were a fine that the second property and property and property and property and property and property and property are a fine that the second property and property and property are a fine that the second property are the second property and the second property are the second property and the second property are the second property are the second property are the second property and the second property are the second property are the second property are the second property and the second property are keel. In view of the fact that those loans were effected prior to the serious depreciation which has taken place in the value of livestock, the loans in this connection now reflect approximately 100 per cent of the total value of the livestock involved and the situation has resolved itself into one in which the Federal land bank is virtually in the sheep business with the owner holding only a comparatively limited equity. Any action, therefore, which will jeopardize the limited equity of the stock owners will seriously affect the value of the loans of the Federal land bank and through it the interests of the people of the United States.

Mr. President, no action was taken by the bureau following this report to terminate and restore the grazing lands to the Indians. I am not complaining because of its failure to immediately reverse the policy which it had pursued in the matter of leasing grazing lands to white men. I do complain, however, against a policy that subordinates the interests of the Indians in respect to their own lands and their own property to the interests of white men who have been granted leases to lands which the Indians ought to have been permitted to graze, leases which were made over the protests of the Indians.

Mr. Muck continues:

In order that the pertinence of this contention may be fully In order that the pertinence of this contention may be fully appreciated, there is submitted herewith the call statement of the Federal Land Bank of Spokane, Wash., as at December 31, 1930, together with an analysis of the loans made by this institution to the stockmen of Klamath County holding grazing permits on the Klamath Indian Reservation—the former to exhibit the capital stock paid in the callable from the United States Treasury and the latter to present the facts with regard to the equity of the Federal land bank in the stock largely dependent on the Klamath Indian Reservation. Indian Reservation.

Mr. President, I have the exhibit, but shall not give the names of the debtors found therein. It might possibly affect their financial standing. I submit, however, the amounts due from various stockmen to the Federal land bank in Spokane. I might add there are other banks to whom cattle and sheep men who grazed the Indian lands were indebted.

The first name on the list which I have owed the Spokane Bank $40,365.06, and the exhibit states the value of the debtor's sheep to be $45,000. The next loan is $47,470.75, and the reported value of the debtor's sheep is $37,500. The next loan is $9,300, and the number of sheep owned by the debtor is given as 2.500. The next debtor owed the bank $8,100, and the number of his sheep grazing upon the reservation was 2,400, valued at $12,100. The next loan is for $34,000, and the number of sheep grazed by the debtor upon the reservation was 6,000. The next loan was $5,000, the debtor owning 800 sheep. The next debtor owed $4,000 to the bank; another lessee owed $6,600. A partnership loan amounted to $21,375, and the number of sheep owned and grazed by the association was 5,150. The next statement shows the owner owed $19,150 and grazed 4,000 sheep.

I am advised that there were other lessees who are indebted to other banks, but I do not have the names nor the number of lessees nor the amount of their indebtedness.

Mr. President, it is contended by the Indians and others that these leases were made in violation of law, as they did not receive the approval of the Indians. They insist that no lease is valid that is not approved by the tribe.

Yesterday I received a communication from Indians residing upon the Fort Peck Reservation in which they voice their opposition to the policy of the bureau in leasing their lands without their consent and over their protests. A copy of the protest which has been forwarded to me is addressed the Congress of the United States and is as follows:

POPLAR, MONT., December 16, 1931.

To the Congress of the United States:

By request of the Fort Peck Indians, of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., we, the undersigned officers of the general council of the Fort Peck Indians, do hereby present to you for your consideration resolutions adopted by the Fort Peck Indians at a mass council meeting held at Wolf Point, Mont., November 16, 1931, together with a petition indorsing and approving the action of the said mass council.

Respectfully submitted.

RUFUS RICKER, Sr. Vice Chairman General Council. MEADE STEELE Secretary General Council.

WOLF POINT, MONT., November 16, 1931. MASS MEETING

The mass meeting called by the chairman of the Fort Peck General Council, Joshua Wetsit, dated November 5, A. D. 1931, was called to order at 1.30 p. m., and the following officers were Chairman, Isaac Miller.

Secretary, David B. Johnson.

The object of the meeting was announced, and the council proceeded to discuss the new policy covering agriculture and grazing leases. After a prolonged discussion the chairman asked the council how many members were in favor of the new leasing policy. There were none, and he asked how many were against it, and by a rising vote there were 62 against the new leasing regulations.

At this point Meade Steele moved the adoption of a resolution and the motion was seconded by Charles Owens, and by a unanimous vote of the council the resolutions were adopted as follows:

"Whereas the United States Department of the Interior has recently adopted a new grazing administration policy for the Indians by the issuance of new regulations; and

"Whereas it is understood by the Indians that the new leasing policy, as approved by the department, is not in line and is inconsistent with the intention of Congress to educate and civilize the American Indians into good useful citizens; and

"Whereas the new policy does not provide protection for the Indians as it is found to be most impracticable, ultimately most detrimental, and very dangerous to Indian welfare; and

"Whereas the department by its action has decidedly set the Indians back where they were 40 years ago—no voice, no knowledge, no consent in the management of their tribal affairs; and

"Whereas it is now time for Congress to reverse its attitude and position toward the American Indians and grant them an oppor-position toward the American Indians and grant them an opportunity to work out their own problems, to permit them to decide for themselves what legislation is most beneficial for them in their struggle for life and existence: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the council of the Fort Peck Indians, duly in session this 16th day of November, 1931, at Wolf Point, Mont., That the council hereby does enter its most emphatical and vigorous protest against the action of the Interior Department in attempting to coerce the several Indian tribes to accept its so-called new leasing policy, and the council hereby does most earnestly request Congress to enact immediately new legislation to adequately protect and safeguard the property and other interests of the American Indians and to encourage the Interior Department to put into effect new, humane, and enlightened Indian policies agreeable to effect new, humane, and enlightened Indian policies agreeable to the Indians; be it further

"Resolved, That this council hereby does authorize and empower a delegation to carry this protest to Washington, D. C., with full power and authority to transact any and all tribal and other matters for the Fort Peck Indians, and the expense in connection with the visit of said delegation to Washington, D. C., shall be paid out of the Fort Peck tribal funds; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be immediately forwarded to the honorable Montana delegation in Congress and to warded to the honorable Molleting in the Interior.

"ISAAC MILLER, Chairman.

"DAVID B. JOHNSON, Secretary."

Then follows this note:

"Attest:

After the adoption of the resolution several members suggested that after authority was granted by the Indian Bureau a delega-tion is to proceed to Washington, D. C., under authority of this resolution.

Senators know that until authority is given by the Indian Bureau representatives of the Indians may not come to Washington to present their views to the bureau, or at any rate they may not have their expenses paid unless consent is given by the bureau.

The petition is signed as follows:

We, the undersigned, Fort Peck Indians, do hereby indorse and approve the action of the mass council meeting held at Wolf Point, Mont., November 16, 1931, in protesting against the new leasing regulations as approved by the Department of the Interior, and we further do hereby enter our protest against same.

There are several hundred names attached to the petition. but I shall not ask for their insertion in the RECORD.

Mr. President, the bureau has drafted a new form of lease accompanied by voluminous regulations. It is believed by many that the bureau, without the consent of the Indians, has no right to lease their lands. The statutes deal with leases I have before me; and as I interpret them, the bureau has acted without authority in granting leases upon grazing lands of the Indians as well as leases for the exploitation of timberlands. I am advised that the bureau attempts to differentiate between a lease and a permit. Apparently the bureau now concedes that it has no authority to grant leases without the consent of the Indians, but in order to carry out its purpose it grants permits. It seems to me that this is an evasion of the law and is a sophistical position to take, one which can not be supported.

The Klamath business committee recently passed a resolution, stating in effect, that necessary tribal range be reserved for the Indian stock; that any surplus range be granted under permits to cattlemen only, and that where leases are made to cattlemen or to Indian stockmen, above their regular number to be grazed free, that where trust allotments are enforced, the bureau pay to the Indian lessee his or her proportionate share of the lease money.

A memorandum sent me by the committee of the Klamath Reservation reads as follows:

If the department grants the 3-year grazing permit, it would result in a loss to the Klamath Tribe to the extent of $13.92 for each An allotment, as Senators know, is that part of the reservation carved out of it and assigned or granted to a particular Indian. The memorandum states that there are 268 allotments within the tribal range and that figuring—the land on an acreage basis, tribal and allotted land side by side, it figures $6.08 for every 160 acres, but the department is contemplating giving each allottee $20 per allotment. The total income that is paid in would be $28,040; there is a total acreage of land to be granted under these permits of 690,178.81 acres.

land to be granted under these permits of 690,178.81 acres.

Of course, some of the allotted land is worth possibly $40 or $50 per allotment, but the department has set this arbitrary figure of $20 without consulting the Indians, and which is also unfair to a great many of them. The department has asked them to sign a power of attorney.

Mr. President, I have before me this proposed power of attorney. The document is a tribute to the ingenuity of the Indian Bureau. The Klamath Indians are asked to sign, notwithstanding its rather harsh terms and though the Indians have declared their opposition to it.

Again, reading from the memorandum:

The department has asked them to sign a power of attorney to the superintendent, and if the Indians do not sign such power of attorney permits will be granted for a 3-year period surrounding each allotment and they will use the Indians' land for nothing because he refuses to sign the power of attorney. The department asks the Indians to fence their land, and we all know out in that country that if we try to build a sheep-proof fence it would be entirely too expensive a proposition. It can thus be readily seen that this works a hardship upon the Indians. * * *

The reason for the Indians' protest in this matter is that the sheepmen have put the Indians out of business and will continue to put them out of business. The records all disclose from testimony by Indians to Inspector Trowbridge and to Senator Frazier's committee information to this effect. The sheepmen have overgrazed the lands and have had an excess number of sheep in each grazing unit and have grazed the land right up to the Indians' ranches. The permits have been granted for a 6-month period in the past.

The Indians all know that their grazing lands were formerly one of the best grazing lands in the West prior to the department's putting sheep on these lands. Since that time they have seen it being wasted away each year, and it will take three or four years to put these lands back into their former condition.

seen it being wasted away each year, and it will take three or four years to put these lands back into their former condition.

In a letter dated June 11, 1928, addressed to Hon. CHARLES L. McNary, by E. C. Finney, Acting Secretary of the Department of the Interior, an argument is advanced against a tentative draft of a bill proposed to be introduced by Senator McNary. I quote from such letter:

"Section 9 provides that no lease of tribal land shall be made, extended, or renewed for more than one year without the consent of the tribal council. The act of February 28, 1891 (26 Stat. L. 795, sec. 397, ch. 12, title 25, Indians, U. S. C.), requires the consent of the tribal council to leases of tribal land. Hence there is no necessity for additional legislation of this nature."

The department is granting permits for this same area of land to the same sheepmen in order to get around the law above quoted and the Indians. Under the permit system it is forcing Indians to meet competitive bids which are unusually high, and they will not be able to make a success of running their stock. The fact is that all the sheepmen who are competing for this land against the Indians are people who have large loans from the Federal land bank of Spokane and the American National Bank at Klamath Falls.

Mr. President, the position of the Indians is that the law prohibits the Indian Bureau from executing leases without their consent, and that it is an evasion of the law to call leases "permits." The Indians insist that their interests should first be considered; that the grazing lands should be available to them and not turned over to white men. It has been brought to my attention that the policy of the department has, in a number of instances, destroyed the stock business of the Indians. I recall that upon one of the reservations the Indians owned a large number of cattle. In caring for them, they were furnished employment and the profits received from their herds contributed to their support. The Indian Bureau sold their stock, and the grazing lands were then leased to white men engaged in the cattle and sheep business. I think that it can not be disputed that reservations too often have been exploited by the whites to the serious injury of the Indians. The bureau for years has professed its desire to make the Indians independent and to enable them to engage in activities from which they might derive incomes, and yet the facts are that in many instances the policy pursued has prevented the Indians from becoming self-sustaining. I have had many letters protesting against the leasing operations of the Indian Bureau, and Indians have complained to me that they have been driven from their own lands, which were turned over to white men.

The report of Mr. Lee Muck, to which I have referred, indicates that bankers and white communities were, in effect, protesting against any policy that would turn the grazing lands of the Klamath Reservation back to the Indians; and that the white lessees, and the bankers to whom they were indebted, and the white communities in and about the reservation were first to be considered. The interests of the Indians were to be entirely subordinated to the whites. Mr. Lee Muck's statement is that it would be unwise and that it would shake the financial fabric of the Klamath section if the bankers were to collect the loans from the sheepmen to whom the Indian grazing lands had been leased.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Fess in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. If a lease can not be granted for a period in excess of one year without the consent of the tribal council, why should not the tribal council have jurisdiction over leases of less than one year?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Klamath Indians, because of their advancement along the path of civilization and education, should have control over the leasing of their own lands. They are competent to pass upon this question. However, I do not concede that the bureau has authority to grant permits for any period whatever without the consent of the Indians.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is the basis of the present law the thought that the Indians are not able to manage their own affairs through their tribal council?

Mr. KING. Doubtless that is the theory. I admit that some tribes are not competent to exercise unlimited control over their property. It has been found that in a number of instances where unrestricted title has been granted to the Indians and they have had the right to sell or dispose of their property without governmental supervision or control. the Indians have been despoiled and, indeed, robbed at the hands of persons not of their race. The Indian has not been a match for the wit of the white man; but there are some Indians whose progress has been such that they should have a substantial control over their own property. Certainly the Government should not lease it over the protests and without the consent of the owners. I believe there are many dark chapters showing the unjust policies pursued by the Government in dealing with the lands and property of the Indians. The Senator knows, too, that when a bureau is once established it never voluntarily relinquishes its power and authority. Indeed, it is always seeking more power, and the Indian Bureau, like all others, is infected with the same

Mr. TYDINGS. But does it not take more intelligence and more business acumen to make a lease for longer than one year which will be binding for a longer period than it does to make one for less than a year?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. So if the Indians have complete jurisdiction over the matter when it is in excess of a year, it seems to me they qualify to make leases which would be less injurious.

Mr. KING. The conclusion announced by the Senator can not be disputed.

Mr. TYDINGS. What argument is offered to deny to the Indians the right to have the power to make their own leases without the consent or approval of the Indian Bureau?

Mr. KING. I presume the bureau takes the position that the Indians are incompetent to manage their own affairs, and that it requires a powerful bureau of more than 6,000 Federal employees to control from 225,000 to 250,000 Indians. I repeat that most of the Indians do require the guidance of a generous and just guardian—one interested in their material and moral welfare. I am afraid the policy of the bureau too often has rested upon the postulate that the Indians were a dying and degenerate race; that the lands which they and their ancestors had occupied from immemorial periods should pass into the hands of a more virile and dynamic race. Certain it is that the Indians have too often suffered unjust treatment and the protests made against the wrongs and injustices inflicted upon them have been unheeded by the Government.

Congressman Kelly, a few years ago, referred to the fact that the Indian Bureau in 1923 assigned a Government agent to every 10 Indian families. Since then the number of employees has increased. He added that for 90 years the Indians had been under the control of the Indian Bureau, and that—

* * During that time they have been forcibly driven off their homelands of the Eastern States and herded into reservations west of the Mississippi. These reservations whose bounds were laid out in sacred treaties have been cut in two, oftentimes without a word to the Indians concerned. Not a treaty made by the United States Government with the Indians has been kept, and these acts of faithlessness have either been initiated or approved by the Indian Bureau, this great protector of a helpless people. * * *

I believe, however, that there are in the bureau those who are sincerely desirous of doing justice to the Indians in advancing them along the pathway of civilization. If only bureaucratic methods and mechanics could be abolished and common sense, practical and humane methods carried into effect, unhampered by archaic rules and precedents, then I believe a new day would dawn for the Indians, and their friends in the bureau and elsewhere would have occasion to rejoice over the unmistakable evidence that would appear of the inherent capacity and power of the Indians to reach a high standard of intellectual and moral development.

Mr. TYDINGS. It occurs to me that under the present system for leases of less than one year the whole procedure is in the hands of the bureau, but if they are for over a year the Indians may veto a lease made by the bureau. Why should not the action on these leases originate with the Indians, and with the veto power in the bureau, rather than have it as at present set up?

Mr. KING. The Senator's question is an argument in favor of greater authority being conferred upon the Indians to deal with their own reservations. I do not, however, concede that the bureau may grant permits or leases without the consent of the Indians; and whether the movement to lease or grant permits originates with the bureau or with the Indians, certainly the consent of the Indians should be obtained before any permit or lease is granted.

Mr. TYDINGS. And only when there is a chance of some fraud, or when the Indians' rights are to be prejudiced in some way, should the bureau step in. I do not know much about the Indian question, but I do know enough to realize that the treatment of the Indians by this Government has been one of the most outrageous chapters in its history; and I do know that those who have spent a lot of thought on this question, and who have reduced their findings to writing, as Col. Jennings Wise has in a book which deals in extenso with the Indian question, make all of us feel as if we have mistreated the Indians very severely, denied them their rights, taken their property, and quite often moved them from a good piece of land, which we had formerly given them, to an inferior piece of land, when the first land was found to be valuable.

With proper safeguards I would be inclined, from what I do know of the subject, to see the Indians have more rights to manage their own affairs.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there are about 225,000 to 250,000 Indians under governmental control. We are spending upon them a sum which, if the bureau were efficient and practical, could be cut in half, and then the Indians would derive greater benefit than they now derive from these enormous appropriations.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a further interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield further to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I have listened to the logic of the Senator's observations, I take it the Government is appropriating this money for white Indians rather than red Indians.

Mr. KING. I commend to my friend the testimony which has been given before committees of Congress and the reports made by the Interior Department with reference to the Indians. I have said that when I was in the House a few years ago the appropriation for the Indians amounted to $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 a year. For the fiscal year ended June 30 of this year it was $28,000,000. Notwithstanding these increasing appropriations I submit that the evidence shows that the Indians, except in rare instances, have not made that improvement and development which the expenditures should have produced, and that the fault does not lie with the Indians.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator said the appropriation this year is about $24,000,000, and that there are about 240,000 or 250,000 Indians in the country.

Mr. KING. Under the control of the Government—perhaps not so many.

Mr. TYDINGS. That would be $100 per Indian. I was just wondering how much of the per capita appropriation of $100 for those Indians under the control of the Government actually gets to the Indians in question.

Mr. KING. I do not know that I could speak accurately in answer to the Senator's question.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wonder if as much as 10 cents of the dollar really trickles down to the Indian who is supposed to be helped?

Mr. KING. The Klamath Indians have derived a considerable income from the sale of their timber, but the Indian Bureau has consumed no small part of the same to meet its expenses charged against the reservation. For instance, as I have before stated, there has been maintained upon the reservation a very costly bureaucratic organization with 50 permanent employees and more than 100 irregular employees. Large sums have been expended needlessly, wastefully, for buildings and roads and the payment of salaries of an army of unnecessary employees. It is apparent that with the reduced income from the sales of timber the Treasury of the United States will be called upon for contributions to meet the charges of this expensive bureaucratic organization. My recollection is that it costs $225 per capita to meet the expenses of the bureau in connection with the Klamath Reservation; that is, there are more than 1,200 Indians upon the reservation, living in their own homes and in cities, not at the agency, engaged in their own business and in their own affairs, and yet the Government expends in the bureaucratic control of the reservation $225 for each man, woman, and child. Substantially all of this sum is taken from the proceeds derived from the sale of Indian Yesterday I called attention to a letter written by Mr. Blair, the present superintendent of the reservation, in which he states that because of the reduced receipts from the sale of timber "a serious crisis has arisen." He means, of course, that if these 150 employees are to be retained at the reservation, the receipts from the sale of timber will be insufficient to pay their salaries and to provide for the wants of the Indians. I think it is true that a "crisis is imminent," not only upon the Klamath Reservation but other reservations and that reforms must be executed if the Government is to discharge its duty to the Indians.

I hoped that under the administration of Mr. Rhoads, the present Indian Commissioner, important reforms would be adopted. I believe him to sincerely desire the welfare of the Indians, and with his humane qualities, I think important reforms would be made if he could free himself from the bureaucratic chains by which he is more or less bound. Bureaucracy enmeshes those who come within its grasp, and they are almost powerless to execute what their hearts and judgments desire. I have known of men of courage and ability who accept service in Government executive organizations, believing that they could reform bureaucratic methods and introduce economies and policies that would inure to the advantage of the Government and the people. I have seen some, after futile efforts, resign their positions, confessing that the contest was too great and their ambitions unrealizable.

Mr. TYDINGS. According to the figures which the Senator has given there would be 1 civil-service employee for every 40 Indians.

Mr. KING. I think there are more than that. When appeals are made by the bureau they have always been buttressed by demands for larger appropriations and a larger personnel. When complaints have been made because of the condition of the Indians, the bureau has replied "Give us more men and higher salaries and we will do something." So the salaries have increased, the personnel has increased, and the bureau has grown until, as I have indicated, its personnel exceeds 6,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. Has the Senator given any figures as to the Indian population to show whether it is increasing or decreasing?

Mr. KING. The figures I have seen are contradictory. I have figures in my office indicating the number of Indians in the United States under wardship and "free" Indians, as they are called, to be about 350,000. Those under control of the Government number about 225,000. I think my friend from Arizona [Mr. Ashurst] would be a better authority upon that than myself, although I have tried to learn the figures.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah is substantially correct in his statement of the number.

Mr. KING. My information is that upon some reservations the number of Indians is constantly decreasing. I know of several reservations where the mortality is great and the decline in population compels the belief that unless the present rate of mortality is arrested it will not be many years before the Indians residing thereon will have reached the vanishing point.

I have been diverted by the questions which have been submitted from the memorandum furnished me by a representative of the Klamath Tribe. After referring to the Lee Muck report, from which I have read, the memorandum states that the report clearly shows that the sole purpose of granting these permits is to protect the banking interests.

The department has made an arbitrary figure in setting the amount of sheep that will be permitted on each unit in the grazing area. For example, the Chiloquin Ridge range-carrying capacity would be 1,800. The Indian only has 1,500 head of sheep for that particular piece of range. He would be forced to pay for 300 head even though he did not have that number. This same regulation applies to the Indian the same as to the white. These permits will tie up the Indians' tribal lands and allotted lands for three years.

Mr. President, I invite attention to Mr. Muck's report, concerning the Klamath timber leases, stating that the general plan of financing the lumber industry of the Klamath Basin has been largely one which has been characterized by a comparatively small original capital investment subsequently enlarged through the medium of paid-in surplus.

This procedure in connection with the conducting of operations of the magnitude which obtains has been made possible through the timber-sale policy in effect on the Klamath Indian Reservation and the liberal industrial-bonding policy which has evolved during recent years. As a result underfinancing has been the rule rather than the exception, and the indebtedness incurred has been comparatively heavy. During periods of prosperity the situation obtaining has not been one of serious concern, since sufficient income was realized with which to meet existing obligations.

Then he refers to the period of depression, to the overcapitalization, and to the results which have followed the depression. He says:

Overinvestment in plant and equipment is one of the very common business mistakes of the lumber industry generally. It is undoubtedly the chief cause of overproduction and the maladjustment of supply to demand which has continued to involve the lumber market during recent years. Next to undercapitalization and unbalanced financial structures, the lack of control in this connection has resulted in more business failures than has any other single ailment.

Proceeding, he says:

A consideration, therefore, of the annual production required to amortize the fixed investment which exists indicates that the total volume will be depleted in from 30 to 35 years; and that if this investment is increased at the rate which has characterized the district for the past 10 years, there is a serious danger of the present estimated life period of the industry being cut in half. There appears to be every reason to believe that the history of the lake States and that of the southern pineries is about to repeat itself in the Klamath district; and that unless conservative control measures are instituted, the next few years will witness the permanent devastation of these vast resources, the passing of the chief industry of the locality, and the economic demise of the community.

Although a policy which anticipates the wrecking of a substantial part of the productive industrial units of a dynamic business enterprise with a profit at its heels, for the purpose of insuring the perpetuation of the industrial life of the community into the distant future through the application of the principles of sustained forest yield, will undoubtedly meet with concerted opposition from the entrepreneurs of the locality, the time is rapidly approaching when it will prove necessary to choose between limited losses in plant investment as against the ultimate economic death of the entire community. Just what the future holds in the way of a solution to this involved economic problem is difficult of prediction and largely contingent upon the cooperation and coordination of the dominant factors. Perhaps it will prove possible to chart a practical intermediate course which would minimize the ultimate effect of the existing unbalanced condition. However, the die is cast—another top-heavy monument, devoid of a foundation of sound economic forest principles, has been erected to the lumber industry; and either the creators of this monument, the people of the community, or, as in the past, both factors will have to pay the fiddler.

That is the picture which this representative of the Government has painted with respect to the forests on the Klamath Reservation, referred to in such glowing terms during the debate upon the pending bill. In a few years, under the plan which has been adopted by the bureau, the forests will be exhausted, and the Indians, with their lands and timber gone, will be left without resources.

Mr. President, the policies which have been pursued by the Indian Bureau have been unwise and unsound, and yet it continues them and now demands large appropriations in order to maintain a horde of employees whose services are not essential.

The junior Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler] referred to the fact that while riding in this section with a representative of the Government, the agent in charge, he asked him how many scalers were employed, and the reply was there were some 12 or 15.

The Senator then asked if three would not be sufficient, and the agent confessed that three would be all that were needed; yet there are no separations from the service, and the Indians, from their tribal funds, must meet these unjust and unnecessary expenditures. When the tribal funds will have been exhausted, gratuities from the Treasury of the United States will have to be paid; the taxpayers of the United States will be called upon to care for the Indians, or they will be turned out to shift for themselves, without having been equipped and prepared to meet economic conditions.

Mr. President, I referred yesterday to Mr. Trowbridge, an inspector of the bureau, who, at its request, made an examination of conditions at the Klamath Agency. His report discloses that employees of the forestry department performed work for logging companies and received compensation from them therefor in violation of departmental regulations. In his report Mr. Trowbridge refers to a particular case of this kind. I ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this point, without reading, and excerpt regarding it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The Silvers case is really more aggravated than the others, as his duties specifically cover supervision over other employees, and he is expected to report any irregularities in the field. Being equally guilty he kept still. Furthermore, he had opportunity to disclose this transaction in the investigation conducted by Mr. Howarth and in his conference with Mr. Kinney. The superintendent had no knowledge of this transaction and discussion in his testimony is omitted, the incident arising subsequent to closing his examination. He was notified verbally, however, and intends to collect the amount of $112 erroneously paid Silvers for the period he performed no duty for the Government.

Mr. KING. There is one interesting observation he makes concerning the Klamath Reservation, which I desire to read:

This reservation has been considered a sort of entrance school where practical experience is to be obtained by new employees in the Forestry Service, which may account for an excess number of employees at certain times.

That is, the Indians are to pay for the training of Federal employees who are seeking a civil-service status.

If this policy is to be continued the training should be carried on in a systematic manner, which evidently is not followed at this time.

Mr. Trowbridge further states that the cost of forestry operations was less than  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent of the timber sales, but notwithstanding that fact the bureau took from the Indians 8 per cent of all sums received from the sale of timber and, of course, has used the same in part payment of the enormous expenses incurred by the bureau. This course, it seems to me, is not fair to the Indians, and yet under the terms of this bill the Klamath Indians, as well as all other Indians, will have taken from the proceeds of their timber sales 8 per cent, though  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent only would meet the cost of forestry operations.

Upon the Klamath Reservation many miles of roads have been constructed, roads wholly unnecessary, but for which the Klamath Indians were compelled to pay. Some of these roads were of great benefit to the lumber contractors and they should have paid for the same. I have here [exhibit] a map of the reservation showing miles of roads threading the forests, built by tribal funds, most of them without their consent.

When we come to the irrigation items I shall submit some amendments, one of which will deal with the so-called irrigation project upon the Klamath Reservation. Several hundred thousand dollars have been wasted upon this project. The Preston-Ingle report recommends its abandonment. It is maintained almost wholly for the purpose of furnishing positions for bureau employees.

Mr. President, I submit that the pending bill carries items amounting to several millions of dollars which should be eliminated. Certainly, the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier] reducing the $140,000 appropriation should prevail. The Indians are demanding that they shall not be compelled to have deducted from their tribal funds hundreds of thousands of dollars annually to maintain a large reservation agency and furnish jobs for more than 150 Federal employees thereon.

Mr. McKellar. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate for a very few moments. I do not think I ever shook hands with more than two Indians in my life. If there are any Indians in my State or in the State in which I was born, I do not know it. Personally I know nothing about Indians. My reason for rising at this time and having a word to say about them is because of what I learned from the hearings before the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee considering appropriations for the Indian Bureau for the next fiscal year. I just happened to be there when officials of the bureau were being examined in relation to this bill, and was struck very forcefully with the situation so far as the Klamath Indians were concerned.

As I understand, the Osage Indians in Oklahoma are the richest tribe of Indians in this country. Their riches are derived from oil lands. The next richest tribe is the Klamath Indians, and the reason of their riches is that they own very valuable pine forests in western-central Oregon, if I may so describe the location. Their entire reservation embraces about 1,800,000 acres, and they have about 800,000 acres of this wonderful pine forest land.

The Government is the trustee of those Indians and as such has been disposing of the timber from these pine forests, making contracts with those who cut the timber and to whom it is sold. The Government collects the money and is supposed to turn it over to the Indians. For a number of years during prosperous times the Government received from these forest contracts from $1,000,000 to $1,200,000 a year income from the sale of this timber. After paying the expenses the balance was distributed among the members of the tribe. There are about 1,200 members of this tribe on this reservation; and the result was that they sometimes received as much at one time, I believe, as $1,000. That was about the limit of what they received.

Ordinarily, when the income from this timber was from a million to a million and a quarter dollars, the expenses were about $200,000 to $250,000. Then the depression came; and when the depression came the income from this timber fell, I think, the first year about 50 per cent. It was about $500,000 instead of a million dollars. The expenses, however, remained the same. Then the next year the income fell again until it was about $300,000—I am speaking only in round numbers—and the expense still was over $200,000. This year, according to the testimony before our subcommittee, the income probably will be about $300,000, and it will all be taken except about $38,000. There probably will be $38,000 to be divided among 1,200 Indians.

All of that is just a recital of facts as shown by this record.

I next come to what the American Government is doing as trustees for these Indians.

They have a bureau; and, as I recollect, there are 32 white persons on this Indian reservation carrying out the trust of making these contracts, selling the timber, collecting the money, and dividing the proceeds. The highest paid of the employees out there receives about $5,000. I have forgotten whether the amount is $4,800 or $5,200. The lowest paid of the employees receives about $2,200. They must have thought these salaries were sufficient or they would not have accepted the places; but what else did we find? We found that every one of these employees had an automobile at the expense of the Indians. We found that out of the Indian fund were paid the gasoline and oil bills and repair bills and upkeep bills of these automobiles for the purpose of carrying out this trust. In addition to that, we found that when the employees went from one part of the reservation to the other they received a per diem for food. They all have houses, no doubt. I am not sure that the evidence in this particular case discloses it, but they are there for the employees of the trustee.

Think of it for a moment! Here are these Indians out there, 1,200 of them, who own this land. The Government is acting as trustee; and the representatives of the trustee are going out there and virtually living on the fat of the land, having their automobile bills paid, each one of them having an automobile, each one of them having a home, each one of them getting a fairly good salary.

The proof in this case shows a remarkable situation about the scalers. I am not enough of a timberman to know what a scaler is, unless it is one who measures the timber. I assume that that is what it means. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary], who comes from that State, bows his head and says that that is correct. The scalers probably do not work over three months in the year. Every other lumberman's scalers are paid only when they work, but not so with the Government scalers. They are paid the year around. They are paid salaries. They are furnished with virtually everything, and are paid a very excellent salary; probably, according to the proof, more than lumbermen there receive.

Under those circumstances they are asking that this go on. They are asking that these men whom we have put there as trustees for our Government, to look after the affairs of the Indians, shall continue to get all the cream, while the cestuis que trust, as we call them in law, get simply what is left.

When timber sales were large the Indians got a very good sum. They got a very good income. Now, however, when timber sales are small, they are getting nothing but the husks. Our white trustees, however, are still drawing the same salary. They are still getting the same lagniappe, if we may call it that; and, Senators, I think we ought to do away with that situation.

Mr. President, at this point in my speech I ask that there may be printed in the RECORD without reading my examination of several of the witnesses, showing the facts I have stated. I ask leave that there may be printed in the RECORD in the morning, so that anybody interested in the Indians may know what the facts are, the testimony from page 152 to page 160 of the Senate hearings on this bill; again, from page 174 to page 183; again, from page 187 to page 188; and again, from page 194 to 197. I have marked the portions to which I refer on the copy of the hearings that I will hand to the reporter, so that he can see just what should be inserted. The testimony in that examination substantiates the statements I have made here about what we are doing for those Indians.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter referred to by the Senator from Tennessee will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows (pp. 152-160):

* * I will say for the information of the committee that the Klamath appropriation for 1930 was $164,000; 1931, $148,000; 1932, $136,000; and the original Budget estimate for 1932 was $110,000. That shows a reduction of approximately 34 per cent in the appropriation from the Klamath funds over a 4-year period.

Senator Jones. The reduction has been made in the expenditures on the reservation.

Mr. Rhoads, We have practically cut it to the bottom.

Senator Jones. With the help of the department?

Mr. Rhoads. Yes.

Senator McKellar. What was the percentage of decrease? Mr. Dobb. About 34 per cent. Senator McKellar. About 34 per cent?

Mr. Dodd. Yes, Senator McKellar. The price of supplies has decreased about 34 per cent, has it not?

Mr. Donn. But a good deal of this is for salaries of employees, Senator.

Senator McKellar. Yes; of course.
Mr. Dond. The situation there is this——
Senator McKellar (interposing). The salaries have not been de-

Senator McKellar (interposing). The salaries have not been decreased, of course.

Mr. Dodd. We have on that reservation a hospital; we also have an agency for the handling of the disbursement of Klamath funds; two per capita payments are made each year, and that involves a considerable amount of work. We have the timber operations. The employees engaged in timber activities are paid from the forestry appropriation, under the 8 per cent deduction item, but there are many and varied activities on the reservation that will come under this appropriation.

Senator McKellar (where are we going to get all of this money? I asked that question this morning.

Arr. Dopp. This money does not come from the Treasury, Senator; it is a part of the fund derived from their timber sales.

Senator McKellar. Of course, it comes out of the Treasury itself,
Mr. Dopp. This comes from funds of the tribe; this is not a Treasury item.

Senator McKellar. I understand that; but it has to be paid out Senator McKellar. I understand that; but it has to be paid out of the Treasury; the Treasury bears the burden, does it not?

Mr. Rhoads. No, Senator.

Mr. Dodd. The Treasury has no claim whatever on it; it simply lies there in the Treasury and draws 4 per cent interest, and the fund benefits to that extent.

Senator Smoot. Or is paid out to the members of the tribe.

Mr. Dodd. We use a large amount of the income of the Klamath Tribe in making per capita payments to the members of the tribe. Senator Jones. We could not use any of that money that comes into the Treasury for the operation of the Government?

Mr. Dodd. No; not a penny.

Senator Jones. No.

Senator McKellar. I am asking those questions because I am not acquainted with the operation and I would like to know. Out of this $100,000 that you propose, how is that to be expended?

Mr. Dodd. How will it be spent?

Senator McKellar. Yes; how much for salaries?

Mr. Dodd. There would be spent for salaries of regular employees $47,050.

$47,050.

Senator McKellar, Are those Indian employees?

Mr. Dopp. Only a small per cent of the employees are Indian. About $13,000 of it would be spent in miscellaneous and temporary labor, in which a large number of Indians would be employed. labor, in which a large number of Indians would be employed. The remainder of the appropriation would be used in the purchase of supplies for the hospital; the purchase of necessary agency supplies; travel on the reservation, and transportation of supplies. Senator McKellar. How much of it is for miscellaneous supplies, hospital and agency supplies?

Mr. Dodd. Under the revised figure which we have given you, about $20,000.

Senator McKellar. And how much is for travel pay on the reservation?

vation?

Mr. Dodd. About $2,500. Senator McKellar. How do they do their travel; that is, by Mr. Dopp. That covers gas and oil for automobiles, tire repairs, and so forth.

Senator McKellar. About $2,500?

Mr. Dodd. Yes.

Senator Jones. That is set out in the bill here, Senator.

Senator McKellar. Yes. Now, of that $82,500, over half of it, $50,000, is not being spent or paid to Indians, but goes to outside persons?

Mr. Dond. A part of this appropriation. Senator McKellar. This is taken out of the Indian funds.

Mr. Dono. The superintendent in submitting his revised estimate gives the following items:

For health, $19,156.39; for schools, $1,120.

Senator McKellar. What was that figure?

Mr. Dopp. One thousand one hundred and twenty dollars. Senator McKellar. One thousand one hundred and twenty dollars?

Mr. Donn. Yes.

Office expenses, administration—that is, general expenses of the agency office—$22,675.20.

For construction and repair and maintenance of agency plant, $3,242.55.

For the purchase of necessary furniture and other fixtures for replacing of worn-out equipment and necessary new equipment,

$1.079.67.

For irregular labor on the reservation, $6,380.
Senator McKellar. Now, what does that mean, Mr. Dodd?
Mr. Dodd. That means Indian employees on the reservation engaged in the upkeep of the property—2 men on the grounds, 1 operator for the telephone-exchange system, 2 employees engaged in the operation of the laundry, 1 housekeeper for the club, and 1 truck driver.

Senator Jones. How many Indians are there on this reservation? Mr. Dodd. About 1,200, in round figures. Senator Jones. Twelve hundred?

Mr. Dono. One thousand two hundred and eighty, to be more nearly accurate.

Senator Jones. Are there any grown-up Indians on the reserva-tion who do the work that has to be done or know how to do it? Mr. Done. Yes.

Mr. Dodd. Yes.

Senator Jones. Who are willing to work?

Mr. Dodd. The Klamath Indians have shown a willingness to do work on the reservation. The allotment for this year of $25,000 from the road appropriation was for that purpose and the Indians working on that road got almost 100 per cent benefit from that. Senator Jones. Do you employ them only in that type of work or in other lines of activity?

or in other lines of activity?

Mr. Dond. My understanding, Senator, is that previously all the Indians that could be employed were not employed in the work of the reservation. However, this matter was brought to the attention of the office and the superintendent, and at this time the Indians are being given all available work on the reservation. Of course, it should be understood that they are employed in the positions that do not come under civil service. If an Indian is qualified to pass a civil-service examination and has a civil-service status he is given preference in the Indian Service over other applicants. other applicants.

Senator Jones. You are encouraging the Indians to do all of the work they possibly can do. Mr. Donn. Yes.

Senator Jones. Of every kind?

Senator Jones. Of every kind?

Mr. Dodd. Yes, sir.

Senator McKellar. Let me ask you this: Here are salaries, a little less than half as much as is paid out for these Indians, and I would like to ask you what those salaries include; the amounts paid out to the individuals?

Mr. Dodd. The superintendent draws $4,800 a year.

Senator McKellar. Four thousand eight hundred dollars.

Mr. Dodd. The physician $2,000.

Mr. Dodd. Yes. The physician, $3,000. Senator McKellar. Three thousand dollars for the physician; all right.

Mr. Dodd. There is one clerk at $2,700 and one at $2,300. Senator McKellar. All right. Mr. Dodd. Special officer, $2,300. Senator Jones. What are his duties?

Mr. Dobb. Looking after law and order on the reservation, including liquor suppression.

A field nurse, at $2,200.

A head nurse at the hospital, $2,100.

There are three clerks, the average salary being $1,840. Two nurses, one at $1,800 and one at $1,860.

LXXV-383

A day-school representative who is paid one-half of his salary from this source, the total amount of which is $1,860.

There is a carpenter, at $1,800. A stockman, at $1,740.

Two junior clerks, at $1,590; that is the average of those in that grade.

A cook in the hospital, at $1,380. A laborer, $1,200.

A police private, at $540. We have also on the reservation a home demonstration agent position, at $2,600.

I think that covers all of them.

Senator Hayden. All of those salaries are paid out of the tribal

Mr. Dopp. Yes; except the day-school representative. One-half of his salary is paid out of this fund.

Senator Hayden. If there was a material reduction in this appropriation, would it be necessary to curtail the work on the reservation?

Mr. Dopp. It would be necessary to make curtailments in the work, and to withdraw employees who are considered absolutely necessary to properly administer the affairs of this reservation.

Senator Hayden. It might be the desire of the Indians not to pay this out of their funds, but to shoulder it on the taxpayers; that would be very advantageous to them.

Mr. Donn. The law-and-order cost on the reservation runs between $10,000 and $12,000. I do not have the exact figures just now; the cost of all of the items would be about $84,000.

Senator McKellar. I am just in ignorance about it. I do not know just how the money is expended, but it just occurs to me that when we are spending $100,000 and over $50,000 is for administration purposes, it is rather a large item.

Mr. Dopp. And you must remember that the income of the Klamath Indians up until last year has been over $1,000,000 a Senator McKellar. If it were over $1,000,000,000 a year, it would not justify us in paying it out in undue amounts for administration of the Indian business, even if it were a billion; it would not be right for us to take it from the Indians.

Mr. Dopp. What would be the method to follow in that case, Senator McKellar. As I say, I am not familiar with it. But I think that where there is an expenditure of $100,000 out of their funds on the reservation for the benefit of the Indians and we are to pay over half of that for administration expenses, I am frank to by any over hair of that for administration expenses, I am Irank to say that it looks like it is too much.

Mr. Scattergood. For all purposes?

Senator McKellar. In salaries of office help, clerks, etc.

Mr. Scattergood. That item includes payments for law and order, administration of the tribal funds, upkeep, and maintenance of Senator McKellar. Even though it included everything. Senator HAYDEN. What will be the income for this year?

Mr. Dobb. There will be a very large reduction; perhaps less than $500,000; possibly not more than $250,000.

Senator HAYDEN. The same situation exists there as we find in the other national forests; they can not sell their timber. Yes; the timber operation has practically closed.

Senator Hayden. They can not find buyers for the timber. Mr. Dodd. No; and they are not operating; we have large timber

Mr. Dond. No; and they are not operating; we have large timber mills there and they can not operate, of course, without finding a purchaser for the timber.

Senator Jones I think, perhaps, Senator McKellar is not familiar with the kind of work that has to be performed there, Mr. Dodd. Would you mind just giving him some idea of the scale of work that has to be performed on that reservation?

Mr. Dodd. In this particular reservation they have a very valuable timber asset; valued several years ago at $25,000,000, but down below $20,000 000 now. There is grazing on the reservation that below $20,000,000 now. There is grazing on the reservation that has to be handled. As I said, there is collection and supervision of the money from the timber operations on the reservation; the collection of the amounts due to the Indians and the disbursement of the amount that goes into the individual Indian's hands each year. The handling of the details in connection with that work alone amounts to a great deal. We maintain a hospital on the reservation; we maintain law and order on the reservation, and may I say that there is a very broad field of endeavor on the reservation of activities of unscrupulous persons.

Senator Hayden. How much are the per capita payments? Mr. Dodd. They have varied, Senator. In 1928 we made two per capita payments of $300 each.

In 1929 we made two payments of $300 each.
In 1930 we made two payments of $300 each.
In 1931 two payments; $400 and $300.
In 1931 two payments; one of $300 and one of $250.
Senator Hayden. That means that every man, woman, and child gets about $2 per day for their individual use?

Mr. Dodd. Yes.

Senator HAYDEN. For each year that such amounts are paid out?

Senator HAYDEN. For each year that such amounts are paid out?
Mr. Dodd. Yes.
Senator McKellar. Why not, if they own it? The thought I had in mind is that we should be very careful about what we pay out of their own money; this entire fund is their money, and we ought to be careful how we spend it.
Senator HAYDEN. Absolutely.
Senator McKellar. And if they have Indians there who desire to do the work, and could do the work, they should be permitted to do it.

Senator Smoot. Do I understand from your statement, Mr. Dodd, that you think you could get along if you had $75,000?

Mr. Dodd. No; we want $100,000.

Mr. Dodd. No; we want $100,000.

Senator McKellar. They wanted $25,000 more than that.

Senator Hayden. I have stated before, and I am going to take that position at all times, that I do not favor paying out one cent of the fund to the Indians per capita. I am glad to say that in Arizona the Navajo Indians do not want any money paid from the funds to themselves and are opposed to any per capita payments; they want it expended for the benefit of the whole tribe.

Mr. Dodd. Yes; that is true in other tribes.

Senator Hayden. What is expended from the fund they want to Senator HAYDEN. What is expended from the fund they want to go for the development of their roads, the improvement of their reservation, and for the upbuilding of the institutions that will benefit all of the tribe. I have always opposed any payment to them on a per capita basis of the funds derived from sales of timber or other property they own. Now, on the basis of the payments made here, these Indians receive $2 a day, on the average. Senator McKellar. If they own it, why should they not receive it?

Senator HAYDEN. They receive it in benefits for the whole tribe. Senator McKellar. It looks to me like you have too many employees there on the pay roll.

Mr. Dodd. Let me say this, Senator—

Senator McKellar. That is my idea. I think you have too much of the amount going for administration.

Senator Smoot. I think you picked out an unusual one to question.

Senator McKellar. That may be true. I raised some question about grasshoppers the other day in the agricultural bill.

Mr. Dodd. That is all we have at present, Senator.

Senator Smoot. Mr. Crawford, did you want to be heard?

STATEMENT OF WADE CRAWFORD, DELEGATE FROM THE KLAMATH INDIANS, CHILOQUIN, OREG.

Mr. Crawford. Mr. Chairman, I am the authorized delegate of the Klamath Tribe. My name is Wade Crawford, Chiloquin, Oreg. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I would like first to call your attention to the information that the Indian Bureau is now giving you as to the value of our property. I notice in the hearings on the House side that Mr. Dodd valued our timberland at about $24,000,000. He has just now stated to you that it was something like $20,000.000.

Mr. Dobb. Below $20,000,000; and that was the estimate based on a more recent revision of the value of the timber on the reservation Mr. Crawford. I would like to call your attention to this fact, that there is a letter, written to Senator Frazier, signed by Commissioner Rhoads, under date of February 3, 1932. It is an argument against the bill which Senator McNary has introduced, in advance of the report on the bill. Here is what the commissioner says about the value of the timber:

"The land timber on this reservation would probably be appraised at $10,000,000 to $12,000,000."

That is the information that was furnished by the commissioner to Senator Frazier in response to inquiries concerning Senator McNary's bill. He estimated the value of the timber to be between $10,000,000 and $12,000,000. Now they come before this committee and say it is worth from $20,000,000 to $24,000,000 when they are asking for large sums of tribal funds to be used for employees'

Senator Smoot. What is the annual amount of the income on the average?

Mr. Crawford. I beg your pardon? Senator Smoot. What is the annual income on the reservation, on the average?

Mr. Crawford. The annual income? This year it was $238,000. Senator Smoot. What is the lowest you have ever had? Mr. Crawford. It has run for the last five or six years around $1,000,000.

Mr. Scattergood. It has been as high as $1,400,000. Now, with reference to the estimated value of the timber, nobody knows just what it is, whether it would be $10,000,000 or $25,000,000. No one can tell.

Senator Smoot. Is the timberland being depleted; cut faster than the timber is being grown?

Mr. Crawforn. It can not be grown as fast as it is being taken Senator Smoot. The timber is being depleted? Mr. Crawford. Yes.

Senator Smoot. Have you any idea how much the depletion is each year?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not have the correct figures with me, but I can secure them, showing the amount that is being taken each year, so far as that goes.

Mr. Smoot. That is, the amount that is being cut?

Mr. Crawford. Yes.
Senator Smoot. The thought I had in mind is, can you give us in idea as to how long it will be before the timber will be entirely gone?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The superintendent of the timber project has estimated that it will be entirely depleted in 20 years.

Senator McKellar. In what length of time?

Mr. Crawford. The entire amount will have been taken off of the tribal land, at the rate they have been going, in 20 years.
Senator McKellar. That is the only source of the tribal funds?

Mr. Crawforn. And the tribe has no further income from any source than timber and grazing; they have no independent money source than timber and grazing; they have no independent money coming into their fund.

Mr. Scattergood. If I might interject a thought right there, Senator, as to just what is being done in regard to the timber. The scale of cutting that is now being carried out, which is being done on a scientific basis, means that it will be about 15 years, as I remember it, before they will need to cut down the present scale of cutting. When they reach that point, the amount of annual cut will be reduced so that thereafter it will be on a proportion in direct ratio to the actual growth of timber, so that thereafter the growth and the cut will bear about the same proportion.

Senator Smoot. What is the policy followed now in cutting

Mr. Scattergood. They are not cutting below certain sizes and

Mr. SCATTERGOOD. They are not cutting below certain sizes and certain age timber now.

Senator McKellar. That is a question I wanted to ask.

Senator Smoot. Do they cut chiefly the old trees?

Mr. SCATTERGOOD. They are cutting largely now the trees that are ripe, and those, if left standing, would decay. That is the policy below followed. being followed.

Senator McKellar. I do not think it should ever be depleted.
Mr. Scattergood. Under the policy being pursued it will not be.
The amount cut now is large, because the old, ripe trees constitute the largest proportion of the timber area.
Senator Smoot. It seems to me that the forest ought never to be

Mr. Scattergood. A very scientific method is being followed with Mr. Scatteregood. A very scientific method is being followed with the great timber companies that are operating there under contract. They are following the plan laid down by the bureau of taking the ripe trees, the trees that would soon begin to decay. That is the reason the cut is large now. At the end of about 15 years, however, the rate of cut will be reduced in order to keep it well within the increase in the growth of timber.

Senator Smoot. Following the same policy used in Switzerland and Germany?

Mr. SCATTERGOOD. Yes.

Senator Smoot. I do not see why that forest should ever be exhausted. I think it should be there for the Indians for a hundred or two hundred years.

Mr. Scattergood. That is exactly the line that we are working on and the plan is to provide an asset for the Indians for years to come, and it is only to be taken to the point where nature would destroy the timber that the cutting is to continue.

Mr. Crawford. I would like to state that the policy that is being followed on the Klamath Reservation, is they are cutting timber, leaving about 3,000 feet on each acre of ground for reseeding; that is, about 3,000 feet of good, healthy trees for reseeding. But when you come to consider the fact that it takes from 200 to 300 years to grow those trees it can not be possible for them to have timber to cut over on each 40 or 50 year basis, as I understand their plan to be.

Senator Jones. They do not cut the trees of all sizes now, do

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; they have a certain scale; all trees that are 6-inch tops, I understand

Mr. SCATTERGOOD. Six-inch tops?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. Crawford. 163.

Senator Jones. What size butts?

Mr. Crawford. For all timber. It varies; there are some tops at 6 inches, and they may be 4 feet across the butts.

Senator Smoot. Do you mean to say that it takes 250 years to grow one of those trees?

grow one of those trees?

Mr. Crawford. Yes; it takes from 200 to 300 years to grow the kind of timber we have there.

Senator Smoot. That is an unusual length of time. You can go through the Sihlwald Forest and for miles and miles in every direction the trees will be numbered. You can take the numbers of those trees and go to the office and get the exact amount of growth each year with just the same accuracy that you could of a man, and sometimes very much more completely.

Mr. Crawford. I would like to say, Senator, that I have an article which I have submitted to Senator Frazier and which I will be glad to submit to the committee showing the age of the will be glad to submit to the committee showing the age of the timber in the Klamath Indian Reservation and giving full information about the growth of that timber.

Senator Bratton. What do you think should be done about the matter?

Mr. Crawford. I would not like to enter into a technical discussion and take up the time of the committee, but I would like to say that the timber contracts should be rewritten; I feel that they should be rewritten.

(Pages 174-183)

Mr. Scattergoop. You came here the first day that Congress

Mr. Scattergood. You came here the second opened?

Mr. Crawford. I will say, right at this point, that I wish the Indians in prior years had sent a representative down here to give you the true information regarding the actual conditions of the Klamath Indian Reservation. And I would like also to call to your attention that the appropriations that have been made have been running around $274,000 per year, being paid out of the tribal funds of the Klamath Indians, for the last 10 years. Senator Jones. Do you have any suggestion to make as to how this can be avoided?

Mr. Crawford. I would suggest that the appropriation be handled more along business lines that are applied to white men.

Senator Jones. Do you think this appropriation ought to be cut down very greatly?

Mr. Crawford. I argue that the $110,000 should be reduced to $55,000 on the agency item, and I think it should be run on a business basis, according to the income. When the income was $1,000,000 a year, then Congress appropriated $274,000 for the operation under that large income. Now it has reduced, decreased to $328,000, and I think that the appropriation should be limited and the expenses should be reduced in proportion to the income.

Senator Jones. How do you think we could cut down the operating expenses to $55,000?

Mr. Crawford, I argue that it should be half.
Senator Jones, How could we do it?
Mr. Crawford. By cutting off all of the items there except health

Senator Jones. What employees would you do away with? It is easy enough to cut the $110,000 to $55,000 on paper, but how would you handle it?

Senator McKellar. Which one of the employees would you eliminate?

Senator Jones Welling and Senator Senator

Senator Jones. Yes. Senator McKellar. That is the question we would like you to answer.

answer.

Senator Jones. Just which employees would you dispense with?

Mr. Crawford. I had a list of the employees here. I would say that according to the justification submitted by the superintendent to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs under this revised estimate that it has some things that should be eliminated.

Senator Jones. Which one of those items?

Mr. Crawford. Under this revised estimate he has personal services, regular, $48,000.
Senator Jones. Now, what service in that would you dispense with, or how much would you recommend?

Mr. Crawford. I would recommend that personal services of $48,000 be reduced to $24,000.

Senator Jones. Which one would you cut out?

Mr. Crawford. The number of those employees that exceed that amount in appropriations

amount in appropriations.

Senator Jones. Just indicate which ones you would cut out, the positions that are now filled.

Senator McKellar. The sum you mentioned there was $48,000. Now, the first one on the list received $4,800. Would you cut him

Mr. Crawford. Here is the list. Senator McKellar. I have the list before me. I am just taking them item by item.

Mr. Crawford. I would take the first one, the salary of the day-school representative.

Senator McKellar. What position?

Mr. Crawford. The day-school representative.

Senator McKellar. The day-school representative; this indicates $840.

Mr. Crawford. The amount asked for him is over $1,800.

Senator McKellar. $840.

Mr. Crawford. $1,860.
Senator McKellar. You would cut him off?
Mr. Crawford. Yes; the tribal fund is now paying 45 cents for each Indian that attends the public school. That is for inspection, and for that particular purpose the Indians have to pay that tax in addition to paying a regular tax to the county, and that is paid out of the tribal fund and is being used also to pay for education.

Senator McKellar. Now, what does this man do who fills that Mr. Crawford. He goes around and inspects different schools. The vouchers show that he runs around to different parts of the reservation and to different parts of Oregon.

Senator McKellar. To the public schools?

Mr. Crawford. To the Indian schools and the public schools, both. Mr. Dopp. One-half of his salary and expense is paid from the general school appropriation covering the work in the State of California, and only one-half of the amount comes out of the Klamath fund. The only part that is paid for out of the Klamath fund is the part for inspecting the public schools and seeing to it that proper service is rendered for the expenditures made. One-half of it is paid out of money provided for work in other territory, Senator McKellar. Mr. Crawford, you think that is unneces-

Senator McKellar. Mr. Campon. I do, when the tribal fund is paying 45 cents on each Indian that attends public school in Klamath County.

Senator McKellar. I am just asking what do you think of it?

Mr. Crawford. And I think it is unfair. When we pay Klamath County that rate I do feel that it is unfair to make us pay this man's salary out of the tribal fund. If we did not pay the money to Klamath County it would be a far different story.

Mr. Scattergood. Does he not also have to see that the children attend school?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; he runs around in an automobile.

Mr. Chawford. He, he this around in an advonoble.

Senator McKellar. Does he have a car?

Mr. Crawford. He runs around over the Indian reservation and gets his expenses paid, mileage, gasoline and oil, hotel bills; that is all included; that is what he gets.

Senator McKellar. He has an automobile?

Mr. Crawford. He is furnished an automobile, gets his hotel bills and expenses paid.

Senator Jones. You do not need a truant officer, you think?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No: not when he is-

Mr. Scattergood (interposing). He is giving only part of his time there.

Mr. CRAWFORD. When he is in the States of Oregon, California, Nevada, or visiting those places, he is getting his expenses paid when he visits them.

This $1,800 all goes in as a part of those expenses

Senator McKellar. What other services do you think we ought

Mr. Crawron. They have a great many clerks there in the office that I think should be dispensed with. They have some eight or nine clerks, and I do not think it is necessary to have all of them. I think I would eliminate some of those clerks. It seems to me that a part of them are not necessary.

Mr. SCATTERGOOD. Which ones of them would you eliminate; can you tell us which ones?

Mr. Crawford. I would eliminate some of the assistant clerks. I do not see any reason for keeping them; I would cut down some of the assistant clerks—Mrs. Lamb, Mrs. Andrews.

Mr. SCATTERGOOD. What are their titles; what is the nature of their duties?

Senator Smoot. Yes; what service do they perform?

Mr. Crawforn. I do not think it is necessary to have a large force to argue with the Indians about their tribal funds; that is what Mr. Blair says they are doing. I have the item here, list of them which I will insert in the record, or I can read it if you

Senator Smoot. Which of the employees do you recommend that

Senator McKellar. Yes.

Mr. SCATTERGOOD. And their positions.

Senator Smoot. Mr. Crawford, which ones do you recommend should be fired?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, it seems to me that some of the assistant clerks should be eliminated.

Senator Smoot. I know, but which particular ones?
Mr. Crawford. They are in the agency, in the office.
Senator Smoot. It is your contention that the office does not need that much help?

Mr. Crawford. No; I do not think so. What I wanted to say was that Mr. Blair stated to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that they are not doing their work out there but arguing with the few Indians about their expenses and the amount paid out of the tribal fund. Now, I would like to read from a letter dated September 4, 1931.

September 4, 1931.

Senator Smoot. This is in the record.

Mr. Crawford. Yes; from C. M. Blair, addressed to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under date of September 4, 1931. He says: "I have a feeling that we are making practically no progress in developing this situation, particularly with reference to the Indians themselves. We have no organization doing extension work whatever. Outside of the forestry organization, we are doing practically nothing except try to control the expenditures these people are making from their own and their children's funds."

Senator Swoot. He was wanting some additional help them.

Senator Smoot. He was wanting some additional help there? Mr. Crawford. And he said all they do is to argue about the

Mr. CRAWFORD. And he said all they do is to argue about the individual Indians getting money.

Senator Smoot. But he wanted additional help.

Mr. SCATTERGOOD. When he refers to children, he is speaking about minor children; and there is a tremendous amount of supervision necessary.

Senator McKellar. You are asking here for an increase over the 1932 appropriation of $6,610, are you not, to be used in increasing salaries?

Mr. Dodd. I do not think we are increasing salaries, Senator. Senator McKellar. That is what it says here.
Mr. Dodd. This [indicating] represents the actual expenditure.

Mr. Dodd. This [indicating] represents the actual expenditure. Senator McKellar. The Interior Department appropriation for 1932; this says here that an increase was made of $6,610 with another item of $310, which makes a total of $6,920.

Mr. Dodd. That is a balancing statement. If you will notice under the head of the 1931 appropriation, it shows the actual expenditure, and the statement that you read, showing an increase, is a balancing statement between $40,130 actually expended and the total gross authorized salaries for the fiscal year 1932 of $470,50.

pended and the total gross authorized salaries for the fiscal year 1932 of $47,050.

Senator McKellar. Yes; but that must have some meaning here in the 1932 appropriation. You have got a net amount of $6,610 plus $310, or a total increase, net, of $6,920. That must have some meaning or it would not be in here.

Mr. Scattergood. We have not increased the expenses; the expenses have been going down each year. I do not remember that restriction items but I know that the expenses of the scenary have.

particular item, but I know that the expenses of the agency have been growing less and less each year.

Senator McKellar. I am simply reading from the bill.

Mr. Dopp. The reason for that difference is that the position of the superintendent was not paid from this appropriation in 1931. Senator McKellar. No

Mr. Done. He is paid from it in 1932, and it comes in here on this appropriation.

Senator McKellar. Yes.

Mr. Dopp. Heretofore he was paid from what we call the school authorization, as I recall the Klamath pay roll.

Senator Hayden. That is a transfer in the item of the super-

Mr. Dopp. That is what I was explaining. That is not a payment from the Klamath funds, but a general authorization contained in the school section of this bill.

Senator Hayden. Yes.

Mr. Dodd. And that item was not considered proper there. Its logical place was under the agency appropriation, and is changed from school activity to agency activity.

Senator Hayden. Then the amount was simply deducted and transferred?

Mr. Dodd. Yes; this is a balancing statement in this table. Senator Hayden. The deduction was made from one table and must show up somewhere. Mr. Dopp. Yes.

Senator Smoor. The appropriation for last year was $136,000 and the estimate for this year is only $110,000.

Mr. SCATTERGOOD. Yes. Senator McKellar. How much of the $136,000 have you left? Mr. Dodd. $25,000. Senator McKellar. Available?

Mr. Dodd. Yes.
Senator McKellar. Available?
Mr. Dodd. Yes.
Senator McKellar. What becomes of it?
Mr. Dodd. It is still in the Treasury to the credit of the tribal fund, and it will not be withdrawn unless for emergency use.
Senator McKellar. That would be $110,000 expended.
Senator Smoot. That is not taken out of the tribal fund.

Senator Smoot. That is not taken out of the tribal rund.

Senator McKellar. Now let us get back to these clerks. There are two assistant clerks here for $1,710. What do they do?

Mr. Dodd. They may be handling the individual Indian's money account, or they may be handling some other subject, or they may have some general clerical work in the office; I can not tell offhand.

Senator McKellar. You do not know that?

Mr. Dopp. I am not familiar enough with the office work at that agency to tell you.

Senator McKellar. Now, the field matron-what are her duties? Mr. Dopp. She works around all over the reservation, in the homes on the reservation.

Senator McKellar. $1,680?

Mr. Dodd. Yes.

Mr. Dodd. Yes.

Senator McKellar. What do the junior clerks do?

Mr. Crawford. While you are on that point, I would like to say that the field matron spends most of her time with her friends around Portland and other places, and does very little work on the reservation. She is not a nurse, by any means.

Senator McKellar. Does she have a car?

Mr. Crawford. Yes; and her expenses paid.

Senator McKellar. Traveling expenses?

Mr. Crawford. Yes.

Mr. Crawford. Yes.
Senator McKellar. How many cars have they out there, or how many cars have been bought for their use?
Mr. Crawford. I think all told there are 43 automobiles.
Senator McKellar. That have been bought with tribal funds?

Mr. Crawford, Yes.
Senator McKellar, And they are maintained?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Senator McKellar. And the repairs and maintenance paid from tribal funds?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. Crawford. Yes.
Senator McKellar. What does the stockman do?
Mr. Dodd. He looks after the grazing work on the reservation.
Mr. Crawford. There are two stockmen there, Senator, that I would like to call to your attention. There are two stockmen whose duties are practically the same, the one in the forestry.
Mr. Phillips handles grazing work, and also Mr. Lovelace, who is under the agency's jurisdiction, and the other under the forestry, but their activities are practically the same; Mr. Lovelace's salary should be eliminated. Mr. Phillips has two assistants with him aside from the line riders.

Senator McKellar. What account is that?
Mr. Crawford. The forestry item.
Senator McKellar. Forestry?
Mr. Crawford. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Senator McKellar. Now, there is a carpenter here. What about the carpenter?

Mr. Dopp. He is employed in handling and maintaining build-Mr. Dobb. He is employed in handing and maintaining buildings at the agency, and there are times when he has to assist in home construction on the reservation.

Senator McKellar. What about him, Mr. Crawford?

Mr. Crawford. Mr. Bourell.

Senator McKellar. What does he do?

Senator McKellar. What does he do?

Mr. Crawford. I will say right there that we have on the reservation at least 25 Indian carpenters that can do the work as well as he; some of them are better equipped, far more equipped than this man Bourell to do carpenter work. We have advocated all along that when there was any building to be done that the Indians should be permitted to put up the buildings; that if they will advertise the jobs the Indians will bid on them, and the highest bidder would get the work.

Seneter Haven You have a number of them who are willing.

Senator Hayden. You have a number of them who are willing

Mr. Crawford. Yes; the contract would have to be looked after by the superintendent, but he can check up on it and see that the contract is carried out.

Senator McKellar. Does the carpenter have an automobile? Mr. Crawford. Yes. Senator McKellar. The stockman?

000

7,000

Mr. Crawford. Yes. I will say that every employee out there, the 53 regular employees, have the use of a car. There are 43 cars on the reservation

Senator McKellar, Does the superintendent have an automobile?

Mr. CRAWFORD, Yes.

Senator McKellar. Does the physician have one?

Mr. Caawford. Yes. Senator McKellar. Does the home demonstration agent?

Mr. Crawford. That office has not been filled for the last year, but when she was there she had one.

Senator McKellar. There is no appropriation for this year. The principal clerk, does he have an automobile?

CRAWFORD, Yes.

Senator McKellar. The financial clerk?

Mr. CRAWFORD, Yes.

Senator McKellar. The home demonstration agent?

Mr. Crawford. Yes. Senator McKellar. How about the field nurse?

Mr. Crawford. Yes. Senator McKellar. The field nurses have the use of an auto-

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Senator McKellar. What do they use it for?
Mr. Crawford. Use it in going around and visiting the Indians' homes on the reservation.

Senator McKellar. How about the head nurse at the hospital?

Mr. Scattergood. I will say that we have a number of Indians on the reservation who do not know how to use the hospital, and it is necessary for the nurse to go 15 or 20 miles out to visit the family when they need attention.

Senator McKellar. What about the nurse, the head nurse, at the hospital, does she have one? Mr. Donn. No.

Senator McKellar. The head nurse does not?

Mr. Dopp. No.

Senator McKellar. There is one. I will put a mark there.

Senator McKellar. There is one. I will put a mark there. What about the clerks, do they have automobiles?

Mr. Dodd. I do not think that any one of the assistants does.

Mr. Scattergood. I might say there, Senator, that the reservation is about 35 miles, north and south, and it is just as far east and west, and the Indians are scattered very widely. They are not concentrated in any particular place, and anybody that wants to go out there and see them, unless they want to go on foot, and spend their time walking, will have to have some means of transportation to get them from place to place.

Senator McKellar. How many cars are there in use on the reservation?

Mr. Dong Forty, three of all kinds

Mr. Dodd. Forty-three, of all kinds.
Senator McKellar. On the reservation?
Mr. Dodd. On the Klamath Reservation.
Senator McKellar. What kind are they?

Senator McKellar. What kind are they?

Mr. Dodd. Twenty-one trucks.

Senator McKellar. Twenty-one trucks?

Mr. Dodd. Yes; there are 2 coupés with pick-up bodies; 15 coaches, 3 coupés, and 2 touring cars. Now, those machines are used in the forestry service, and in the road work—

Senator Jones. How are those automobiles used?

Mr. Dodd. They are used in the activities on the reservation. When you consider the fact that the gross income of the Klamaths in 1928 was $1.183.000, it will give you an idea of the activities on in 1928 was $1,183,000, it will give you an idea of the activities on the reservation.

Senator McKellar. It does not make any difference what the gross income is, we ought not to take it away from them.

Mr. Dopp. I was simply saying that there were a number of activities requiring attention.

Senator McKellar. But we are trustees of that fund, and it would make no difference whether the income was a million or a thousand, it is our duty to safeguard the expenditure of it.

Mr. Scattergood. But there is this point, Senator, to keep in mind, this income comes from the operations of timber companies that are scattered throughout this forest in widely separated areas.

Senator McKellar Vee.

Senator McKellar, Yes.
Mr. Scattergood, And each one of the companies when operat-

Mr. Scatteredow. And each one of the companies when operating has to be checked up.
Senator McKellar. Have you got roads all through the timber?
Mr. Scatteredow. I beg your pardon?
Senator McKellar. Do you maintain roads through the forest there?

Mr. Scattergood. It has been our policy, wherever possible, when a railroad track has been taken up to put in a road, at least, in such places that it will facilitate the Forestry Service in getting about in fighting fires.

Senator McKellar. Do you have those all over the Indian reser-

Mr. Scattergood. The road-building program has been largely built up, extensively built up, more in the nature of providing facilities for fire fightings. There is a great risk to this enormous asset from forest fires, as many of you know, who are familiar with the western areas, and you realize that in the past two years many forests have suffered enormous damage from forest fires. A timber fire may break out and burn hundreds of thousands of dollars in valued timber in a short while, so it is necessary for us to maintain our forest-fire fighters, and in order to get around over the forest it is necessary to have this machine equipment for them. forest it is necessary to have this machine equipment for them

Then in addition to that each one of these lumber-cutting companies have to have a scaler, a man to go there and indicate the trees, pick out the trees that the lumber company is to cut down. All of that work has to be supervised every day that the companies are at work, and in order for them to get back to camp it is necessary to have some means of transportation. Those automobiles are in operation by the men in the actual service, marking trees, fighting fires, and performing the activities of people at work on the forest, supervising the work in the field, and the operation of these companies. of these companies.

Mr. Scattergood. It is quite large.
Mr. Crawford. A million eight hundred thousand acres.
Senator Oddie. How much?
Mr. Crawford. Something like 1,800,000.

Mr. Scattergood. And a considerable part of that is timber? Mr. Crawford. There is about 800,000 acres of timber. Mr. Smoot. One million eight hundred thousand in the reservation?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; of the tribal land.

Mr. Crawford. Yes; of the tribal land.

Mr. Scattergood. And how much in timber did you say?

Mr. Crawford. And 800,000 acres of timberland.

Now, for your information I would like to say this, that I think they have reduced the time to $75,000, according to the justification submitted here by the superintendent to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and he is asking for $54,500 for salaries and wages, and I want to put in the record, for your information, a list showing that when you deduct the $54,500 from the $75,000, it leaves $20,500 for general administration and $54,500 will go to salaries and wages alone. I will submit that for the record.

Mr. Scattergood. I would like to have the privilege of inserting in the Record also the statement of the superintendent.

Senator McKellar. Yes; we would like to have that.

(Pages 187-188)

Senator Smoot. You think that about three-fourths of the employees could be dispensed with?

ployees could be dispensed with?

Mr. Crawford. I think that it should be reduced by half, cut down our expenses by half.

Senator Smoot. In what way?

Mr. Crawford. Well, I would say that when the income is cut that the expenses should be cut; we have about 19 timber contracts that are alive now, and a number of these companies are not living up to their contracts. Seventeen of them are not operating, and if they are, it is on such a scale and does not require any use of the workers that we have there now.

Senator Smoot. In what way do you think the cost could be reduced; which of the salaries could we dispense with?

Mr. Crawford. I think that the contract should be lived up to. Senator Smoot. Do they not live up to them?

Mr. Crawford. No: they do not; they certainly do not live up to their contracts.

to their contracts.

Senator Smoot. Wherein do they fail?

Mr. Crawford. These contracts are given to them to take the Indian timber, running over periods from 15, 18, and 19 years; they sign up the contract, and the people that have them do not live up to their contracts.

Senator McKellar. You want the contracts changed?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes. Senator McKellar. In what way?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would say that the long-term contracts are not desirable.

Senator Smoot. In what way have they failed to live up to the contracts? Can you point out the changes in the contracts that you would suggest that would take care of those that are not living up to them?

Mr. Crawford. There have been individual contracts that have been drawn up for three to five years, but where their time has expired the commissioner has extended time.

Over a period of years, more than the amount specified, the annual cut is supposed to be made each year. It is not lived up to. And as time goes on and the increase in price in stumpage has risen from 20 to 40 cents a thousand in three years; and the next three years the commissioner will take that off, and it will go back to the original adjustment of the stumpage as an adjustment between the lumber people and the Indian Office. That is ment between the lumber people and the Indian Office. That is all a matter of record.

Well-

Senator Smoot. I know, you have put it in the record.

Mr. Scattergood. The Indians have no capital of their own to risk in this business. It is not their capital that is invested in the plants, and whatever the costs are to cut, you understand, they pay a royalty on that, and they are cutting that, and it is to their own interest to cut it just as fast as they can, as fast as they can dispose of their products. We hope always that they will live up to their minimum and exceed those, and that they will be successful; but if they do not, then that tribe has not lost anything. The tribe has been the beneficiary from their lands, an income, to a greater extent than any tribe in this country outside only of the Osages from their oil income, and there have been times, however, as there are to-day, during times of depression, when these companies ask the privilege of not cutting and moving out the timber.

Senator Smoot. Not cutting any amount? Mr. Scattergood. The contract allows the exercise or discretion on the part of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in deferring that Senator Smoot. Then they have not violated their contract?

Mr. Scattergood. Then they have not violated their contract?
Mr. Scattergood. They have not.
Mr. Crawford. I challenge that statement, and we will let the contracts and the reports speak for themselves.
Mr. Scattergood. I would like to say this, as far as the testimony of this witness is concerned-

Mr. Crawford (interposing). All of our lumber mills closed last fall. All of the mills are closed. There are only two of the mills that went on and made their annual cut, but all of them are closed since that time.

Everybody knows that the same people are being carried on during the winter months, and the men that are drawing enormous salaries are carried on the pay rolls now, and doing irregular work, such as repairs to bridges, and doing outside jobs around the agency, which the Indians have been put out of. The Indians have been put out of the employment and they are letting these civil-service employees take their place.

Senator McKellar. Which of these employees—Mr. Crawford (interposing). And that has been going on ever Senator McKellar. Which employees have been carried on the rolls of the department?

Mr. CRAWFORD. For instance, here is a list for November: Albert Christey, scaler, and there are two forest rangers, another forest ranger, another ranger, Mr. Weaver, an assistant ranger, another ranger, forester, assistant forester, guard, five scalers, two forest rangers, forest guard, supervisor, four more scalers, and a ranger. Senator McKellar. Your idea is that the Government has no use for these because the mills are shut down, and ought not to keep them on the Government has revently keep them on the Government pay roll?

Mr. Crawford. Those men are not scaling logs when the companies are closed down. They can not work out in the timber, when there is 2½ or 3 feet of snow out in the woods. Those men are doing odd jobs, as I said, around the agency.

(Pages 194-197)

Mr. Crawford. I would like also to submit the pay roll for December of 1931, for the record, with all of the foresters, and scalers, their titles and their monthly salary.

Albert Christy, scaler	$140.00

Stranley J. Johson, ranger	171.67

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would also like to submit for the record a letter written by C. M. Blair, setting forth the financial condition of the reservation, which he paid out. This is a very interesting letter. The figures in September, 1929, show that our income was $222,000, and in 1930 it was $102,000; in 1931 it went down to $22,000.

Senator Smoot. You are like some of the balance of us, are you not?

Mr. Crawford. That was the income in the month of September for those three different years. I submit that information for the record.

(The letter above referred to is as follows:)

KLAMATH INDIAN AGENCY. Klamath Agency, Oreg., October 10, 1931.

COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, Washington, D. C.

Sm: I wish to refer to the financial situation facing the Klamath jurisdiction and the Indians enrolled here.

jurisdiction and the Indians enrolled here.

I have office letter of September 28, 1931, giving information in response to my radiogram of September 25, to the effect that the total resources in the Treasury of tribal funds of the Klamath Indians on June 30, 1931, were $793,967. On June 30, 1930, the tribal resources were $1,085,687.42, showing a reduction in resources during the last fiscal year of nearly $300,000. The proceeds received from timber sales from January 1, 1931, to the present date is approximately $328,000, and all logging camps have closed down. We are making a per capita payment this month of about $270,000. If one is made next spring, it will amount to approximately $200,000. Adding the operating costs for this fiscal year, there is going to be very little left on June 30, 1932. It is indicated below: indicated below:

Per capita payment, October, 1931  Per capita payment, April, 1932 (estimated)  Operating expense, fiscal year 1932 (estimated)	$270,000 200,000 175,000
	645, 000
Tribal funds, June 30, 1931Estimated expenditures	793, 967 645, 000
To which should be added timber sales for fiscal year	148, 967
1932, estimated not to exceed	250,000
	398 967

It will be seen that not more than $400,000 can possibly be available for operating expenses of this agency and per capita payments during the fiscal year 1933. Does this not indicate a critical situation? I do not believe your office wishes to take the last available dollar out of tribal funds. As far as I am able to learn, the lumber market is in bad shape, and it is going to be some time before there will be any considerable recovery. It seems apparent to me that your office will need to ask for supplementary assistance in operating this agency next fiscal year from gratuity appropriations. I feel it is my duty to call this situation to your attention at this time when appropriations are being considered by the committees of Congress. I realize that during times like this it is essential for the Federal appropriations to be reduced rather than increased. However, I feel that serious consideration must be given to the immediate future at Klamath. I have tried to show in this letter how the income of this tribe is being reduced. The following figures will probably throw additional light on the situation:

Timber sales during September, 1929 (approximately) .... $222,000

Timber sales during September, 1929 (approximately) ___ $222,000
Timber sales during September, 1930 (approximately) ___ 102,000
Timber sales during September, 1931 (approximately) ___ 22,000

Very little in the way of surplus has been built up in tribal funds. The money has been paid out about as fast as it comes in. I feel that the situation here will be critical next year unless some change is made

Very respectfully,

Mr. Crawford. And I would like to also submit this letter for the record, written by Mrs. Crawford and Mrs. Du Fault, setting forth some very interesting figures and argument in regard to the expenditures of the Klamath Indians which shows the per capita cost to the Indians of $130 per capita, this being taken from the tribal funds.

Now, we say that the Indians do not pay taxes. We are certainly taxed to the extent of the per capita $130 for every member of that tribe, taxed for that, and besides that, 150 of those Indians are paying taxes to the county, so we are doubly taxed.

(The letter above referred to is as follows:)

1028 WEST FIFTH STREET,
Santa Ana, Calif., February 11, 1932.
MY DEAR SENATOR: We are in receipt of the information that the Interior bill for the fiscal year 1933 has been reported to the House with a reduction of $45,000 for Klamath. The Klamath House with a reduction of $45,000 for Klamath. The Klamath Indians, according to the records, will have the sum of $398,967 in the Treasury of the United States for the fiscal year 1933. The bureau's request was for $212,000—the reduction of $45,000 reduces the appropriation to $167,000. There are 1,280 enrolled Klamath Indians, which brings the per capita tax to approximately $130 and a per capita credit in the Treasury to approximately $180. Thus it is readily ascertained that the statement of J. Henry Scattergood, Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to the subcommittee on appropriations, 1933 House hearings, that only 8 per cent of the revenue of the reservation is expended for administration is erroneous and entirely misleading. You will readily see from the above and from the evidence subsexpended for administration is erroneous and entirely misleading. You will readily see from the above and from the evidence submitted by Mr. Wade Crawford, chairman of the Klamath business committee, to the subcommittee in the House hearings—Interior bill 1933—that it will be impossible for the Klamath Indians to retain upon their pay roll 22 forestry employees with a salary scale from $1,560 to $3,000, with not one single camp or mill operating upon the reservation at the present time. Many of the wives of the forestry employees are in the agency office on the regular pay roll at a salary of not less than $1,800.

We have read with much disgust the justification in the House hearings, 1933, of Mr. J. P. Kinney, Chief Forester in the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for the retention of the forestry personnel at Klamath. Surely the Congress will never accept such a justification. There is not a corporation, bank, or any industrial institution on the Pacific coast, and we doubt any other place, that is retaining their former personnel, waiting for better times to happen, expending approximately 50 per cent of the liquidated capital assets to do so; it is positively unheard of during the present crisis in the Nation's affairs and any other time, for that matter.

We know for a positive fact that the 22 forestry employees on the pay roll at Klamath are doing odd jobs repairing bridges, signs, machinery, etc. That so unjust and extravagant a situation the pay roll at Klamath are doing odd jobs repairing bridges, signs, machinery, etc. That so unjust and extravagant a situation will be tolerated by the Congress is entirely inconceivable to us. The scaler and ranger positions should be abolished. The contention of Mr. J. P. Kinney that the men are retained to look after obsolete right of ways on the reservation is a filmsy excuse to keep the civil-service employees on the Klamath pay roll.

The per capita distribution to these Indians, numbering 1,280, can not possibly exceed $150 for the fiscal year 1933; and as stated above, the bureau is requesting a per capita tax of approximately $130. The majority of these people are children, dependent upon the per capita payment for food, clothing, and education; many are old, infirm people entirely dependent upon the per capita pay. are old, infirm people entirely dependent upon the per capita payments for the actual necessities of life.

The industrial condition for which the bureau is largely responsible has created this situation. Surely the humane relation of the Government of the United States to the Indians, together with the economic and industrial conditions obtaining, will be with the economic and industrial conditions obtaining, will be considered during these grave times.

We respectfully request that the opinion of Mr. Levi Walker, purporting to be the opinion of the Klamath Indians, be not considered. Admittedly, he is not familiar with the conditions on our reservation.

We beg of you to give this matter your most earnest and careful consideration and to lend your support to a reduction in the appropriation for Klamath equal in amount to the grave situation there obtaining. The trust funds of the Klamath Indians in the Treasury of the United States are liquidated capital assets and not income, and an appropriation of $167,000 from a capital of $398,967, part of which is to be expended for salaries and wages of scalers and rangers in a forest where no lumber activities are being conducted, is the height of injustice and extravagance.

Respectfully submitted.

IDA M. CRAWFORD, Secretary Klamath Business Committee. CELIA R. DU FAULT.

Mr. McKELLAR. So I want to say that I shall very cheerfully vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier] to reduce this $140,000 item, on page 21, by the sum of $27,000. I believe that is the amount of the reduction. This is taken out of the Indian fund. This is to go to these unfaithful trustees. After having examined these gentlemen and examined other witnesses before the subcommittee, I want to say that in my judgment those who are serving or claim to be serving the American Government as trustees for the American Indians on the Klamath Reservation are unfaithful trustees; and if I were the head of the Indian Bureau I would discharge every one of them, from top to bottom.

I do not believe the Indian Bureau is going to do it, however. Why do I say that? For the reason that Mr. Dodd, a member of that bureau here in Washington, when I was asking about what I thought were the very large appropriations for our employees out there, said, "Why, Senator, that does not come out of the Government. That comes out of the Indian fund." In other words, if I understood his language and I think I did-his argument was, "Oh, it does not make any difference so long as it does not come out of the Govern-You "-meaning myself-" represent the Government. ment. You want to cut down the appropriations for the Government. That does not make any difference in this case, because we are charging this money to the Indians.'

In other words, the idea seemed to be that the Indian Bureau had a perfect right to despoil these Indians of what was theirs; and I believe that is what is being done on the Klamath Reservation. For that reason I shall very cheerfully vote for the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, in justice to these Indians. In my judgment, Senators, we could cut that appropriation down to $25,000, and send one man and a few scalers out there, and the task would be better performed under a set-up like that than it is by these unfaithful trustees.

I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER ].

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst Austin Bailey Bankhead Barbour Bingham Blaine Borah Bratton Brookhart Bulow Capper Caraway Carey Connally	Couzens Dale Davis Dickinson Fess Fletcher Frazier George Glenn Goldsborough Gore Hale Harrison Hatfield Hayden	Johnson Jones Kean Kendrick Keyes King Lewis Logan Long McGill McKellar McNary Metcalf Moses Neely	Oddie Robinson, Ark. Schall Sheppard Shipstead Smith Smoot Steiwer Thomas, Idaho Thomas, Okla. Trammell Tydings Vandenberg Wagner Walsh, Mont.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I send to the desk a telegram and ask that it be read in connection with the remarks which I made a moment ago about the grazing permits which are being issued now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

POPLAR, MONT., March 14, 1932.

Hon. JOHN COLLIER,

37 Bliss Building, Washington, D. C.:
Upon telegraphic instructions from Dixon, superintendent has arbitrarily set grazing fee rate at 61/2 cents per acre in bids to be submitted and opened Tuesday. As result of grazing conference white livestock men have been granted their wishes, but Indians have received the worst of deal and they will be in much worse condition. Department is still attempting coercion upon Indians grazing matter. Please enter our emphatic protest for the Fort Peck Indians.

MEADE STEELE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER].

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to call the Senate's attention to the fact that the pending amendment is found on page 18, reducing the appropriation of $140,000 by $27,000. The appropriation for this purpose last year was $250,000. We cut off $110,000. This is "for expenses incidental for the sale of timber, and for the expenses of administration, including fire prevention, of Indian forest lands," and so forth. The department says that if any further cut is made in this appropriation great risks will be run.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think it is incorrect to assume that under the terms of the bill only $140,000 are appropriated for and may be used upon the Klamath Indian Reservation. I stated a few moments ago that the bill carried several appropriations which were specifically designed to be used in connection with the administration of the Klamath Reservation and that there were other items of appropriation from which the Indian Bureau might obtain large sums to be employed by it in connection with its administration of all matters connected with the Klamath Reservation. It is my contention that the item of $140,000 is not the sole fountain from which the bureau may draw supplies to be used for and in behalf of the Klamath Indians and their reservation for the ensuing year. It is true the $140,000 is one of the items from which certain expenses may be met; but in my opinion the $225,000 item found in line 12, page 18, is an available fund which may be drawn upon by the bureau to meet expenditures incurred by it in connection with the Klamath Reservation. The paragraph in which this item is found states that this amount is for the-Preservation of timber on Indian reservations and allotments other than the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin, the education of Indians in the proper care of forests, and the general administration of forestry and grazing work, including fire prevention and payment of reasonable rewards—

The $140,000 item upon which my colleague lays particular stress contains similar language. It states-

That it is to be used for expenses incidental to the sale of timber and for the expenses of administration, including fire prevention of Indian forest lands from which such timber is sold—

It is to be observed that there is nothing in the language of the bill which specifically charges this $140,000 to the Klamath Reservation. The purposes for which it may be used are as indefinite as are the purposes so far as shown by the bureau for which the $225,000 just referred to may be employed, and I might add in passing that the Budget is as uncertain and indefinite with respect to these appropriations as are the appropriations in the bill to which I have just referred.

In addition to these two items, on page 19 an appropriation of $40,000 is provided-

For the suppression or emergency prevention of forest fires on or threatening Indian reservations * * * and $25,000 in addition from funds held by the United States in trust for the respective tribes of Indians interested.

Obviously the Klamath Tribe is interested in the prevention of forest fires, and so forth, and also has "funds in trust" so that the funds of this tribe may be drawn upon for the entire $25,000.

There is a remarkable provision in the paragraph containing the two items of $40,000 and $25,000 just referred to, which reads:

That not to exceed $50,000 of appropriations herein made for timber operations and for support and administration purposes may be transferred, upon the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, for fire suppression or emergency prevention purposes, and allotments of funds so transferred shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior only after the obligation for the expenditure

It is difficult to determine just what is intended, but the interpretation which seems to be not only justified but inevitable is that the $50,000 might be drawn from the $40,000 and the $25,000 or from the $225,000 or the $140,000 and taken from tribal funds and used in part upon the Klamath Reservation or any other reservation upon which timber is grown. One is justified in criticizing the ambiguities and uncertainties found in the language of the bill.

In addition to these items there is a further item of $75,000 found in line 8, page 57, which is a tribal fund taken from the Klamath fund exclusively to be used by the bureau for agency maintenance. If my colleague is right that the agency maintenance is to be taken from the $140,000 fund, then I ask what is the $75,000 item just referred to to be used for? The item of $75,000 follows a heading found on page 55, which states that-

For general support of Indians and administration of Indian property under the jurisdiction of the following agencies, to be paid from the funds held by the United States in trust for the respective tribes, in not to exceed the following sums, respec-

Then follows a number of items of appropriations to various reservations, including the "Klamath Reservation in Oregon" and an item of $75,000 which I have just mentioned. There is also an item of $20,000 found on page 19, to be paid from the funds of the Klamath Indians "for insect-control work on the reservation." There is also an appropriation of $5,000 found on page 33 of the bill, line 9, to be paid from the tribal funds and to be expended for miscellaneous irrigation activities upon the reservation."

I therefore respectfully insist that the appropriations available for use upon the Klamath Reservation for the next fiscal year are in excess of the $140,000, which has been the subject of debate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I repeat what I said, and I shall read from the bill itself in order that Senators may see whether I made a misstatement or not. The bill provides:

For expenses incidental to the sale of timber, and for the expenses of administration, including fire prevention, of Indian forest lands from which such timber is sold to the extent that the proceeds of such sales are sufficient for that purpose, $140,000.

Mr. President, I say without a moment's hesitation, and I appeal to the Senator from North Dakota to verify my statement, that for that identical purpose the appropriation last year was $250,000.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is correct.
Mr. SMOOT. That is what I said. Further, I ask the Senator from North Dakota whether the pending amendment is not to decrease the appropriation of $140,000 by $27,000. Is not that correct?

Mr. FRAZIER. That is correct. Mr. SMOOT. That is what I said.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier].

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I thought we were ready to vote; but inasmuch as the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], who has charge of the bill, made a statement, I want to make one.

The pending amendment proposes to cut $27,000 out of the appropriation of $66,420 of the funds of the Klamath Indians to take care of the forests. There is also included in the bill an appropriation of $20,000 for beetle control in the same forests, which will make a total of $59,420, if the amendment is adopted, for the control of those forests.

Mr. President, with sales going down from $1,000,000 to approximately $300,000, I believe the amendment should be

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, is there anything in conflict between what the Senator from North Dakota has said and what the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] and the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. King] have said? There is no conflict about it, is there?

Mr. FRAZIER. No; I do not think so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been demanded. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. AUSTIN (when his name was called). I have a pair to-day with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes], but I understand he would vote as I intend to vote on this question. Therefore I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed], which I transfer to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes], and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Watson]. In his absence, being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler], who is absent. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. WAGNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. Patterson]. I have been unable to ascertain how he would vote if present, and therefore I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. JONES. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. I am unable to obtain a transfer, and so I can not vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. Warson] to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Bulkley] and vote "yea."

Mr. HATFIELD (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Morrison]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. McKellar (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. Townsend], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Hawes] and allow my vote to stand

Mr. LOGAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Davis] to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the followingnamed Senators are absent on official business:

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. Pittman], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Hawes], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Bulkley], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Broussard].

Mr. FESS. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. Robinson] is absent on official business. He has a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens].

I also wish to announce that the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. Warson] and the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings] are absent on account of illness,

The following-named Senators are detained at a meeting of the Committee on Banking and Currency: The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Norbeck], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Townsend], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Bulkley], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Walcott].

I announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Cutting] with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh];

The Senator from California [Mr. Shortridge] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Harris];

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN] with the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL];

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Norbeck] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Hull]; and

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Walcott] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

The result was announced—yeas 52, nays 7, as follows:

So Mr. Frazier's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let it be reported for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from North Dakota offers the following amendment: On page 28, line 18, after the word "act," insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the extension of canals or ditches in connection with the Michaud division.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this amendment does not change the amount of the appropriation in any way. I have a letter from the Indian council of the Fort Hall Reservation, to which the item relates, and also from the water users' association on the same reservation, composed of white farmers. They are all opposed to any of the appropriation being used at this time for the Michaud unit. I hope the Senator from Utah, who has charge of the bill, will accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment which I offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the amendment be read for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 61, line 17, after the numerals "$400,000," insert the following:

Of which $100,000 shall be immediately available for road and bridge construction on the Navajo Reservation.

So as to read:

For the construction, repair, and maintenance of roads on Indian reservations not eligible to Government aid under the Federal highway act, including engineering and supervision and the purchase of material, equipment, supplies, and the employment of Indian labor, $400,000, of which $100,000 shall be immediately available for road and bridge construction on the Navajo Reservation.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this makes immediately available $100,000 out of the $400,000 for road purposes for the Navajo Indians. I have pictures here showing the need for roads and bridges on this particular reservation.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, is this a saving out of the funds of the tribe or out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. SMOOT. It is not a saving.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to get it clear in my own mind. Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in reply to the question of the eminent Senator from Mississippi, this is only a limitation or allocation of moneys appropriated. It does not propose any additional appropriation at all. Mr. HARRISON. But it is money out of the Treasury of the United States and not out of the tribal funds?

Mr. ASHURST. The original appropriation is a gratuity out of the Treasury.

Mr. HARRISON. Referring back to the amendment just agreed to, was that a saving out of the tribal funds?

Mr. FRAZIER. It is all out of the tribal funds.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad to know that one economy we have been able to effect is from that source. Of course, such economies ought to be effected with relation to funds coming from the Treasury of the United States rather than funds of the Indians, funds which the American Government has treated so very badly in the past.

Mr. FRAZIER. I am sure the Senator from Mississippi is interested in saving the money of the Indians as well as money in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. Absolutely; but it is a peculiar thing that we can not make some of these savings in funds of the Treasury of the United States as well as in funds of the Indians. We ought to employ our talents for retrenchment in some way that would affect the funds in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. We have an "economy bloc" now and so we can have any kind of an amendment we want to appropriation bills.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator from Utah will accept the economy amendment Mr. SMOOT. I did not say "economy amendment"; I said we now have an "economy bloc."

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE. I am merely seeking information. Will the amendment result in retarding the construction of highways in other Indian reservations?

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not think so. There are $400,000 appropriated, and the amendment allocates $100,000 to be available at once for this particular reservation.

Mr. BLAINE. How many reservations are there in the United States?

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not know the exact number, but this is probably the largest one in the United States, and they are in need of roads. The committee drove all over there last spring, and we got stuck several times. Here [exhibiting] are two photographs of a scene where hay was being hauled and the truck went down into the quicksands. It is shown that in endeavoring to pull the truck out with a tractor they pulled it in two.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to say that all this amendment does is to make $100,000 immediately available instead of waiting until June 30.

Mr. BLAINE. Yes; but for one reservation and not for all the reservations.

Mr. SMOOT. Out of the $400,000 appropriated, $100,000 are made immediately available for one reservation.

Mr. BLAINE. Let the amendment be stated again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will again be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 61, line 17, after "$400,000," it is proposed to insert "of which $100,000 shall be immediately available for road and bridge construction on the Navajo Reservation."

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. FRAZIER. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, the situation on the Navajo Reservation is bad, due to an extremely severe winter, perhaps an unprecedented one, but it is no worse on the Navajo Reservation than it is on the Zuni Reservation. I wonder if the Senator from North Dakota would not include the Zuni Reservation, so that the item will be both for the Navajo and the Zuni Reservations?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRATTON. I am speaking by the courtesy of the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I find that all this appropriation is made immediately available. Therefore the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota simply means that $100,000 of the total amount is to be expended on this particular reservation.

Mr. BRATTON. In view of that statement, would the Senator from North Dakota include the Zuni Reservation, so that it may go along with the Navajo Reservation?

Mr. FRAZIER. There is no question but that the Zuni Reservation needs assistance; but whether or not $100,000 will be sufficient for the two reservations I am not in position to say.

Mr. BRATTON. Of course, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs would be at liberty to use any part of the remaining

Mr. FRAZIER. I have no objection to including the Zuni Reservation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota modifies his amendment; and as modified it will now be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the word "reservation" and insert the words "and Zuni Reservations," so that it will read:

Of which $100,000 shall be immediately available for road and bridge construction on the Navajo and Zuni Reservations.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from North Dakota how many miles of highway on these two reservations are in need of reconstruction?

Mr. FRAZIER. I can not give the figure accurately, but the Navajo Reservation is, I think, the largest reservation in the United States.

Mr. BLAINE. Can the Senator give the number of miles approximately?

Mr. FRAZIER. Perhaps the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] can give it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the main reservation and the smaller reservations that happen to be within it embrace roughly about 20,000 square miles.

May I say a word for the amendment? The chairman of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. Frazier] was kind enough to show me the amendment before he offered it. I expressed my unqualified approval of it, and for the following reasons. It will be remembered that in the Indian appropriation bill for the past three or four years there has been carried a sum of money—for the first two years, $250,-000; last year, $500,000; and this year, $400,000—to be used by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on any reservation in the United States for the purpose of building roads and bridges wherever, in the judgment of the commissioner, such roads or bridges were necessary. Sums as low as $500 were spent on one reservation and as high as $20,000 on another reservation. As I have stated to the Senate upon two different occasions—and the Senators from New Mexico have likewise adverted to the condition-snowstorms of unusual ferocity have overwhelmed that great reservation. On account of the tremendous snowdrifts trucks carrying food and fuel were unable to negotiate the distances, and horsemen were not able to make headway, the roads being impassable.

The mission at Ganado, for example, although it had on hand a very good supply of coal, ran out of fuel, and those living there were obliged to take refuge in the basements of three buildings for many weeks. Throughout the area the roads are now absolutely impassable. In my judgment, $100,000 ought to be spent in reconstructing the roads on that reservation, and I am very glad that the Senator from New Mexico has secured the inclusion of the Zuni Reservation. I think that is proper.

It may be said that a large proportion of the total sum is to be spent in New Mexico and Arizona. That is quite true, but it simply happens that they are the particular States within whose borders are the reservations the roads of which have been allowed to reach a shocking condition of disrepair; they happen to be the States out of which this enormously large reservation was carved. An appropriation, if it is justly needed, is not properly assailable merely because it is large. From my examination of all the facts in the case I believe that this appropriation is not only needed but that another $50,000 will be required in order to do the work efficiently. However, I do not feel that an amendment providing $150,000 additional would be adopted by the Congress, and, so far as I am concerned, I am advocating the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota and think it should be adopted. While it is well known to the Senate and the country that the esteemed chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and I have hotly disagreed on many subjects respecting the Indians, yet I am in hearty accord with his amendment; I congratulate him on his wisdom, his judgment, and his courage in offering it, and I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I want to ask a favor of the Senator from North Dakota. I desire to call his attention to the fact that on the Odanah Indian Reservation, in the northern part of my State, the snows are very deep and there are a great many swamps, necessitating portages between inland lakes. I have been appealed to by those Indians. Without roads it is utterly impossible for them to get about their reservation and to cultivate the many hundred acres of land which they are perfectly willing and anxious to cultivate, and from which they could obtain a living. The Indian Bureau tells me that it is utterly impossible to build such roads with the small amount of money that is appropriated in this bill, and if one-fourth of the total sum is to be taken away from all the other reservations, we are treating those reservations thus deprived of this amount rather unfairly. So I ask the Senator from North Dakota if he will not include the Odanah Reservation in his exceptions. It is a mighty appealing situation, and I see no help for these Indians unless something can be done to open up the territory where they are trying to make a living by their own hands and their own efforts.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the Navajo Indians, I think, have been more neglected than probably any other large group of Indians in the United States. In comparison there has been less improvement on their reservation than on any other reservation. They have been self-supporting for all these years through the maintenance of their flocks, the sale of wool, and the sale of Navajo blankets. They are a wonderful group of people. Unfortunately this winter they have had bad storms; their sheep have died by wholesale; over 200,000 sheep have perished during the storms this winter, and probably many more of them will die during the spring before the grass shall grow. They are in need of financial assistance right now to keep body and soul together. They are asking for work. I had a letter from a trader only yesterday in which he said that six or seven Indians, ragged, cold, and hungry, had walked 20 miles to ask for work; they were not asking for anything else, but asking for work. If this money can be made available for those Indians, it will give them a chance to earn a living; and the same thing applies to other reservations.

Mr. BLAINE. The same story may be told of Indians on other reservations. The same or a similar story may be told of the Indians on reservations in my State. It is just a matter of treating them all alike. I do not know but that this appropriation should be increased; but we can not increase it under the rules of the Senate; and I am just appealing to the Senator in behalf of the Indians in Wisconsin to whom I have referred, who are in a desperate situation, that they may have an opportunity to work. That is all they are asking for.

Mr. FRAZIER. Of course, the remainder of the appropriation will be applied to other reservations in carrying on road work that has been started.

Mr. BLAINE. But the fact is that this appropriation is inadequate for the purposes; and when the appropriation is reduced by 25 per cent it is made still more inadequate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier] as modified.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Under our general law we provided for $250,000 for roads on Indian reservations throughout the country and then increased the amount to $400,000. If we divide it up now by action of Congress, the money will go for an entirely different purpose than it was intended it should go for in the first instance.

If there is a special condition on the Navajo Reservation, it ought to be met in a special way, so far as that is concerned. The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] suggests that that can be done under the law. That is true; but the appropriation we have made in this act is under the general law and pursuant to the general law that authorizes us to appropriate the money. If it is desired to appropriate it for a special purpose, it ought to be appropriated separately from the other amount and for that special purpose; but when we go to dividing up this $40,000, Senators can see how Congress can distribute it.

I hope the amendment will be rejected and that we will take the amount in the bill and it will be distributed by the department. If in addition to that amount, however, it should be desired to provide an additional amount, very well.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. KING. For information, will this money be expended by the Indian Bureau or by the Bureau of Roads?

Mr. JONES. It will be expended by the Indian Bureau on the Indian reservations. That is true.

Mr. KING. The bill as it is reported carries, as I understand, $400,000, without allocation to any particular reservation.

Mr. JONES. Yes. We passed a general law authorizing appropriations for roads of this kind on Indian reservations, and this is pursuant to that law.

Mr. KING. This $400,000, then, would fall within the terms of the law to which the Senator refers?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. KING. And would be distributed or allocated as the bureau thinks would be wisest?

Mr. JONES. Yes. There are 10 or 12 reservations in my State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier], as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Tennessee offers the following amendment: Insert at the proper place in the

That in view of the decreases of all prices of material and in many cases decreases in costs of labor, and in view of the depleted condition of national revenue, and in the interest of economy and for the purpose of aiding in balancing the Budget, each and every item of appropriation and the totals thereof in this bill, except salaries fixed by law, are hereby decreased by 10 per cent; and the President is hereby authorized and empowered to consolidate and/or abolish bureaus, divisions, in whole or in part, and make any other changes in administration he may deem advisable in conducting this department so as to economize appropriations made herein and keep expenditures within the reduced appropriations made for its several activities herein set out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have a few words to say about this amendment. The latter part of it, of course, is subject to a point of order if any Senator wishes to make it. I take it that the point of order will not be made.

Mr. SMOOT. I will make the point of order, Mr. President.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator will make the point of order?

Mr. SMOOT. I certainly will.

Mr. McKELLAR. Meanwhile I have the floor, and at the proper time the Senator can make the point of order if he desires.

Mr. President, the President of the United States has sent to the Congress a communication asking for the very authority that is given him in part in this amendment. The only difference between what the President has asked for and what this amendment proposes is that while the authority is given to him, at the same time appropriations for the Interior Department are reduced 10 per cent all along the line.

In other words, if this amendment should be adopted, what we would virtually do would be to give the President $50,000,000 for running the Interior Department instead of $55,000,000, as is proposed by the bill. In the aggregate, giving round numbers only, the bill carries about $55,000,000. If the President desires to economize—and I assume, of course, that he does—my judgment is that the Secretary of the Interior, under the direction of the President, can run this department just as well on $50,000,000 as he can on $55,000,000; and I desire to say that it is my purpose to offer a similar amendment to all of the appropriation bills providing for the support of the various departments of the Government.

There is being discussed in the House to-day what is known as the sales tax. It is a tax designed to balance the Budget. The tax bill that is now being discussed over there proposes to raise something like $1,200,000,000, and it is said that that amount is necessary in order to balance the Budget. I presume it is. About half of the total additional tax is to be raised by a sales tax.

I desire to say very frankly at the outset that I am utterly opposed to a sales tax. I think that whatever taxes we ought to impose should be imposed upon those people who are best able to pay the tax, and not upon those people who are least able to pay the tax. I realize that it is right and proper to say, "If you do not favor the sales tax, what do you believe should be substituted for it?" I desire to tell the Senate what I believe should be substituted for it.
